FRIENDLESS & FALLEN.

THE NEW PREVENTIVE HOME WILL BE OPENED (D.V.) FEBRUARY 21, 1889, BY MRS. F. A. BEVAN, AT 3 P.M.

The experience of MORE THAN THIRTY YEARS' work on behalf of FRIENDLESS and FALLEN Young Women and Girls has shown the great importance of seeking to PROTECT THE YOUNG AND VIRTUOUS in our midst, hence the Committee are now arranging ANOTHER PREVENTIVE HOME in the NORTH of LONDON.

The REV. MARMADUKE WASHINGTON has kindly consented to conduct the devotional exercises on the occasion.

MRS. F. A. BEVAN has also kindly consented to declare the Home open.

Out of MORE THAN THIRTEEN HUNDRED Applications made by and on behalf of Young Women and Girls at the Office of the Institution, 200, Euston Road, during 1888, QUITE FIFTY PER CENT. were on behalf of Friendless Girls in their 'teens or thereabouts. In the majority of such cases, when taken at the right time, and subjected to efficient training, they develop into useful domestic servants, and prove not only of great use as such, but become in their position very valuable members of the community.

CARDS OF ADMISSION MAY BE OBTAINED on application, by letter or otherwise, at the Office; and Donations in money towards the expenses of furnishing, &c., or gifts of clothing, house linen, or a small American Organ will be thankfully received.

CONTRIBUTIONS will be RECEIVED by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C., Office of THE CHRISTIAN, or by EDWARD W. THOMAS.

200, EUSTON ROAD, LONDON, N.W.

The Shivering & Suffering Poor

Sympathising friends are heartily thanked for contributions toward giving Food, Coals, and Clothing to the Poor of a very poor London parish. For each 10s. forwarded, 15 adults or 20 children can be provided—by a local Committee—with a substantial meal.—A. STYLEMAN HERRING, Vicar St. Paul's, Clerkenwell (nearly 30 years in London), 45, Colebrooke-row, N.

Christian Community.

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY 20,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual severity. Hundreds of poor men have been gathered in, and their need supplied, while scores have been turned away, for want of room, in the most destitute condition.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; or Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by the EDITORS of "THE CHRISTIAN."

JAMES ATKINSON, Secretary.

FOOD FOR THE HUNGRY.

THE COMMITTEE OF THE

LATYMER ROAD MISSION

Earnestly appeal to the Readers of The Christian to help them in their PRESSING WINTER WORK, which comprises, SOUP KITCHEN, FREE and HALFPENNY DINNERS, RELIEF in the shape of FOOD and COALS to the DESTITUTE, EVENING SHELTERS for the CHILDREN of the STREETS, INFANT DAY NURSERY, TEMPERANCE MEETINGS, GOSPEL SERVICES, SUNDAY SCHOOLS, &c.

TEN SHILLINGS will provide 250 HUNGRY CHILDREN with A GOOD MEAL of Soup and bread.

CONTRIBUTIONS are URGENTLY REQUIRED, and may be sent to Messrs. Morgan & Scott; Miss Gladstone, Hon. Sec.; or to Charles Smallman, Secretary, Latymer Road Mission, Blechynden Street, Notting Hill, W.

URGENT APPEAL

ON BEHALF OF

The ISLAND & COAST SOCIETY of IRELAND.

ESTABLISHED 1833.] Patrons: [ESTABLISHED 1833.

HIS GRACE THE ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN;
THE LORD BISHOP OF CORK; AND THE LORD BISHOP OF KILLALOE, &c.

THIS Society, formed for the Education of Children and promotion of Scriptural Truth in remote parts of the Coast and adjacent Islands, mainly supports Forty-one Schools. Seldom have more pressing appeals beset the Committee. Help for Scriptural Schools is urgently needed in the remote and thinly populated parts of the Country. Local aid is all but gone through failure of rents and the existing agitation. The clergy in these parts, perplexed as to how to maintain their little "Forts of Truth," where children of the loyal and patient Protestant poor are instructed in the way of Life, earnestly look to this Society; and its Committee, with a similar anxiety, look to those whom God has blessed with peaceful homes and means to aid them in their work.

The Lord Bishop of Derry and Raphoe writes November 17, 1887:—

"The Island and Coast Society for Ireland has rendered true and valuable aid to poor and remote parts of the diocese of Raphoe, for which we are very grateful."

The Lord Bishop of Cork, at the last Annual Meeting, says:—

"In his own diocese fifteen schools were supported by this Society, and he was there that day to express what he felt, that the work of this Society had been of very great benefit and advantage to those distant and remote parishes."

Contributions will be most thankfully received by the Secretary, the Rev. C. W. FLEURY, M.A., at the Office, 30, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin; or by the Rev. D. HOLDEN (Hon. Sec. for England), Mickleham, Dorking, Surrey.

FEBRUARY 15, 1889.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. John Jones, Missionary, late of Maré, South Seas.

We heartily thank those friends who have sent copies of THE CHRISTIAN for November 30, 1888, as asked for a fortnight since. We have now received as many of this number as we require.

Will Christians throughout the kingdom join with those in Dublin who intend to make special prayer on behalf of the Roman Catholics of Ireland on Tuesday, February 19? Whether alone, or together in companies, we suggest that some hours of that day be devoted to this purpose by all who love the Lord, and who earnestly desire the salvation of our Catholic friends and neighbours.

At a recent meeting of shareholders of a tramway company, reference was made to agitation on the part of the men. It was asserted that all they wanted was for their hours of labour to be reduced to "twelve daily for six days a week." When the smallness of the wages paid for such labour is taken into account, it can only be considered that the high dividend declared is nothing more nor less than blood-money.

In days when there is reason to fear the advance of rationalism in many quarters, it is gratifying to learn that Unitarian influence is losing ground among the General Baptists. Of three churches in London which were once in the hands of teachers denying the divinity of Christ, and the sacrificial nature of his death, all have now re-asserted their original character. The last to return to the communion of evangelical churches was formerly known as White's Alley Church, and is now situate at East Surrey Grove, Peckham. The pastor is Rev. W. Glanville, who is building up a spiritual church, with the sympathy of Mr. Spurgeon and others. The case is one of peculiar interest. Details may be had from Rev. V. J. Charlesworth, Stockwell Orphanage, London, S.W.

We are informed that the statement of The New York Herald, referred to in our last week's issue, to the effect that Baron Hirsch has made proposals which, if acted upon, would result in the "improvement" of the Jews off the face of the earth, has arisen from misapprehension. The truth seems to be that the Baron, who is a very benevolent as well as wealthy man, desires to mitigate the misery of the millions of Jews in Russia, which is largely the outcome of the fact that they are quite misunderstood by their fellow-subjects. By legal disabilities and enactments, the Jews of Russia are isolated from the general community, even from childhood. Baron Hirsch proposes, by way of remedying this evil, to endow, at large expense, a number of schools, in which Jewish and Russian children shall be educated together. The scheme is now under the consideration of the authorities, and it is devoutly to be hoped that it will be adopted and put into operation.

Sunday, March 31, closes the tenth year of the establishment of the Children's Scripture Union. Mr. T. B. Bishop, in a letter which we print elsewhere, proposes that sermons should be preached on that day in the various pulpits of our land, advocating the importance of the daily private reading of God's Word by our boys and girls. We are sure our ministerial readers will gladly join in this effort on behalf of the young people.

The following is in reply to a Note in our last issue :—

DEAR BROTHER,—I have been much pained by the paragraph in your issue of last week, regarding Rev. C. A. Salmond's pamphlet on the "Faith Mission." Mr. Salmond's pamphlet has met with nothing but the most hearty condemnation on all hands here, even from elders and others in his own communion, who are intimate with the "Faith Mission" and its work. This Mission has for the past two or three years been doing a most blessed work in many of the villages of our land, and there are few, if any, of the friends who condemn it following nearly so closely in the Master's footsteps and teaching.—Yours in Christ,

D. J. FINDLAY.

255, Argyle-street, Glasgow.

We have received other letters to the same effect, as well as some on the other side. Also a third edition of Mr. Salmond's pamphlet, and the reply of Mr. Govan. It is claimed that the teaching of the Faith Mission is identical with that of the Keswick Convention and Divine Life. But these are scarcely identical with each other. We are far from wishing to hinder any good work, and pray for God's blessing on the Mission so far as it is sound and true. But while a number of Salvation Army officers have been ensnared by the Agapemone, it behoves all teachers to be severely scriptural in their statements as to "perfection." We purpose noticing the above pamphlets in our next.

Mr. B. Broomhall, secretary of the China Inland Mission, 4, Pyrland-road, Mildmay, N., wrote to us last week :—

You will be pleased to learn that we have been enabled to telegraph to China for the relief of the sufferers by the famine, £2200. The manifestation of sympathy which every post brings is something to touch one's heart. Children and poor people send a shilling or two, and those who can send more do so with warm words of sympathy.

By the time this appears in print we doubt not the contributions through the C.I.M. will amount to a much larger sum, in addition to the Lord Mayor's fund, and those of other Missionary Societies.

It is instructive and suggestive to learn from the last report that Sir Sydney Waterlow's Industrial Dwellings Company pays five per cent., and no more, and that the sanitary condition is such that the death-rate of the occupiers is 13·27 in the thousand against 19·6, the average London death-rate. Wealthy persons, especially manufacturers and farmers, might surely extend this system. It would go far to solve questions of vital import. To say nothing of the comfort of the people, more healthy children would grow up, promiscuous overcrowding would be diminished, and men and women could not plead this as one of the inducements they now urge for resorting to the public-house.

The following note, which is taken from the answers to "Queries," in The Echo, will be read with deep interest by many :—

The child's hymn, "I think when I read that sweet story of old," was written on the back of an envelope in a stage-coach in 1841, for the children of our village school. My father heard them sing it of their own accord one Sunday afternoon, asked for a copy, and sent it without my knowledge to the Sunday School Teachers' Magazine, or it would not have appeared in print. My name was then Thompson. In 1843 I married Rev. S. Luke, and have been a widow twenty years. I have been fairly successful as an author, but nothing has yielded me so much pleasure as that hymn. Slight as are its pretensions to poetry, it has found its way into almost every child's hymn-book, has been translated by missionaries, and little children have died with it on their lips. Now in my seventy-sixth year I thank God for that brief inspiration in my early days.—J. LUKE, Brading.

Truly does Mr. Gladstone say, in The Nineteenth Century, that many will be startled on learning that in the old State of Connecticut one marriage is dissolved in every ten, in the new State of California one in every seven. The discussion which is now going on upon this question threatens an upheaval in America which will change the moral surface of the earth, and shift, in a revolutionary sense, the polarity of life. It is when the poison of disregard to Scripture has been imbibed by a people, that new notions of marriage will be "rapidly and perilously tried out." Marrying and giving in marriage will, in a low sense, like that of the antediluvians, become an engrossing matter in life.

There is much that is interesting and valuable in Dr. Dale's article on "Education in Australia," which appears in the current Contemporary Review. In New South Wales there is provision for a public school for twenty children in sparsely-populated localities; free railway passes are granted; the education, even in these country districts, is under inspection; where the population is more sparse, an itinerant teacher goes from house to house; fees are charged in some colonies and not in others, and in some an arrangement is made whereby religious instruction may be given. Emigrants who are taking young children into thinly populated parts of Australia will value this information, and also, what we are told in the article, that the colonial children in the schools look bright and prosperous. It is to be hoped that religious teaching will keep pace with these educational efforts.

The attempt now being made to eliminate miracles from the records of the evangelists, and the assertion that they belong to a prescientific age, must not only be firmly but intelligently withstood. The sceptics of our day know well that the evidence for the appearance of Christ is absolutely incontestable. But this choice must be forced on them: there is no Christ at all if there is not a miraculous Christ. If He came with superhuman authority, and is abidingly man's Saviour, He must bear superhuman credentials. Moreover, the plea is inadmissible that myths and legends had grown around the Gospels when they appeared. Scholarly criticism has in our age shown that there was not time for this. Let us remember that when the Son of God passed through humanity, He would cause a commotion among all evil powers, and He would make proof of his Father's compassion for man's maladies and enthralments.

Now that we are threatened with an organised invasion by The New York Herald of the quietude and sanctity of the Day of Rest, it is of interest to see how this matter is regarded by the Christians of the United States. In an article in The New York Observer, on the religious condition of that city, the following remarks have reference to the question of Sunday papers :—

There were no Sunday papers before 1825, and The Sunday Courier lived alone for several years. The Sun was founded in 1833, The Herald, in 1835, The Tribune in 1841, and The Times, in 1851. The Herald was the first daily Sunday paper, and it was not till the Civil War caused an eagerness for news, which broke through all restraints, that the other papers, hitherto deferential to the sentiment of Christian people, published Sunday editions. In former years the daily papers gave no accounts of religious services and undertakings. The New York Herald inaugurated such reports by giving for the amusement of its readers burlesques of the anniversaries held in the Broadway Tabernacle. Finding, however, that the public had a real interest in these things, Mr. Bennett began a system of regular reporting the religious news, accompanying it with editorial comment, serious or profane. Other journals followed, and now no New York daily is without its religious editor. The war did more than any and all influences in the city and the land to break down Sabbath keeping. People became familiar with the movement of armies, the forwarding of supplies, the conduct of army and naval and executive business upon the Sabbath ; Christian people modified their views and habits of Sabbath keeping, and in spite of the efforts of the pulpit and the Sabbath Committee, and the protests of pious Sabbath-keeping individuals and societies, the anti-Sabbatarians have made inroads upon the day of rest.

The Pall Mall Gazette has obtained the opinions of many leading public men on the New York innovation. The Bishop of Ripon, Archdeacon Farrar, Rev. H. Price Hughes, Dr. Henry Allon, Dr. Joseph Parker, Dr. Dale, Cardinal Manning, the Duke of Argyll, Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, Rev. Newman Hall, Rev. Archibald G. Brown, and others, write to our evening contemporary, approving of its protest against this unwarrantable intrusion on the English Sabbath. The Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London write similarly to The Times. Such expressions of opinion ought to have weight, though we are not very sanguine that anything short of Parliamentary action will bring The Herald to a sense of its duty.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on special services at Hazelbury-Plucknett, by Mr. A. W. Rogerson, of the Evangelisation Society, Feb. 3 to 17.——For blessing on a five days' mission at Trinity Church, Finchley New-road, Hampstead, N.W., from Wednesday, Feb. 13, to Sunday, Feb. 17 (each evening at 7.30 p.m.), by Rev. Geo. C. Grubb. ——For blessing on the preaching of the Gospel, and the distribution of the Scriptures amongst Jews in France, Spain, and North Africa, by Messrs. Baron and Barnett, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews.——For blessing on an eight days' mission, to be held at Leaf Hall, Eastbourne, Feb. 18 to 24, by Mr. John McAuliffe.——For blessing on special Gospel services being held at Thorncombe, Somerset, by Mr. J. E. Burt.——For blessing on a fortnight's meetings at Ferryden, Forfarshire, N.B. ——That the Lord will speedily remove a great bodily affliction which has lasted more than a year, and is wearing out body and spirit; and that patience and peace of mind may be given. Also that a dear one may be converted, and become upright and truthful.

THE STORY OF A NUN.*

WE doubt if a more damaging, not to say damning, exposure of the ecclesiastical system of the Romish communion has ever seen the light than that recently written and published by the well-known "Nun of Kenmare." What a fluttering its issue must have caused in the dovecots of the Vatican. The poor Pope must be more chagrined than anybody, for if this record proves anything, it proves to demonstration that the boasted authority over the Roman Catholic world, popularly supposed to be exercised by "the Holy Father," is in reality a sham and a delusion. Romish dignitaries, at least in Ireland and America, seem to snap their fingers at the Pope and do as inclination leads them, whatever he may say.

We are by no means disappointed to learn on such good authority as that of the writer of this extraordinary story, that "the conversion of England" to Roman Catholicism hangs fire. Referring to the Catholic revival in England heralded by the perversion of Newman, Manning, and others, she says :—

It is a certain fact that conversions, after the first rush was over, suddenly ceased, and are now few and far between. The mass of the people has never been reached by this movement. All the prayers that were offered for the conversion of England, and they were fervent and multiplied, have been unanswered.

These words ought to inspire Protestant Christians with thankfulness and with hope, while they should nerve to continued and faithful testimony against the hollow imposture with which the Romish hierarchy are seeking to hoodwink and hocus this and other nations. Certainly the Nun of Kenmare has supplied Protestant advocates with plenty of effective material wherewith to reveal the inherent rottenness of the system they are fighting ; and for this we are grateful to her. If her sorrowful and shameful tale could be read in every family throughout the land, Rome, we should think, might at once say good-bye to its hopes for the coveted "conversion of England."

It is impossible not to feel a certain amount of sympathy with this estimable lady in her persevering struggles to do good work for her fellow-women in the path of service she chose. At the same time we can but regret that her energy and devotion were not directed into channels where success would have been certain and untainted. The reasons she gives, in the second chapter of her book, for joining the Church of Rome seem to us to be of the flimsiest and poorest description. They confirm the oft-expressed opinion that the High Church clerics of the Established Church of England are the best recruiting sergeants that Rome possesses in our midst. We must also regret that the writer does not now appear to have severed herself from the bastard church within whose pale she has suffered so much. That fact, while it will modify the sympathy extended to her, makes the force of her testimony all the stronger. No one can say that this book is the work of a soured and disappointed renegade.†

The gist of her story is that, in her efforts to succour and elevate her poorer Roman Catholic sisters, she was baffled, thwarted, traduced, maligned, and brutally treated in inconceivable ways by nearly every high ecclesiastic into whose jurisdiction she came. It was the same in Ireland, in America, and to a great extent in England. It is difficult to explain the animosity of the priesthood so universally directed against this high-souled and self-denying, though mistaken worker. We can only account for it on the theory that the possession of such autocratic and absolute authority as that vested in Romish bishops and priests, is essentially and inevitably demoralising. A few quotations from the book will describe the inner history and character of the system better than any summary we can give :—

I could not believe there could be so much selfishness amongst those who made such high professions of religion (p. 4).

The practice of the Inquisition still holds in the Roman Church, as I have found again and again (p. 8).

In many cases Roman Catholic priests and superiors put obedience to themselves in the place of obedience to God (p. 14).

The priest knows what he must suffer if he dares refuse his signature to a declaration which he abhors, and the consequences of refusal are such that few men dare to risk it (p. 15).

I had to learn to my infinite grief that scandals of a most serious kind exist, and exist unreproved, which is the real evil (p. 28).

To believe that putting on a religious garb will at once alter the dispositions, tempers, or personal peculiarities is a sad delusion (p. 34).

This very year we have had evidence in the case of Lasserre how influence can be brought on the Pope to make him change the most strongly expressed approvals. All the past history of the Holy See goes to prove the same thing (p. 44).

It is commonly supposed that those who devote themselves to God in a "religious house" are freer from temptations and trials than persons who live in the world ; this is far from being the case (p. 46).

In Killarney we were received in the Bishop's palace, a magnificent building, in strange contrast to the misery, dirt, and wretchedness around (p. 53).

When the superior of a religious house was capable of forging a despatch for the purpose of giving me pain, was it likely that she would hesitate to do any other act of injustice ? (p. 149).

I was to learn all too soon that neither prudence nor justice, nor the most exact observance of religious discipline would avail where ecclesiastics, who should have been the first to protect a woman and a sister, were determined to ruin her as far as they could do so (p. 189).

It is this unfortunate policy of condemning people without allowing them any chance of being heard or of knowing who are their accusers which brings such discredit on the Roman Church (p. 199).

In the Roman Catholic Church the Bishop is judge, jury, and executioner, and the unhappy being who refuses submission to an injustice may be very sure of scant shrift at a second appeal (p. 232).

Oh sad, oh selfish, oh fatal policy which shields itself under the cloak of religion, but knows not true religion. Avarice and greed have been the ruin of the Church in many lands, and will yet, if God forbids it not, be the ruin of the Church in this country (p. 386).

The Roman Catholic Church points with pride to her charitable institutions, and the world, too often taking such statements at her own valuation, looks on and applauds. But how little of the truth is known. The crushing hand of ecclesiastical despotism stifles every cry of suffering or complaint ... Sisterhoods have often succeeded, not because of the help of the Church, but in the face of its determined, and often cruel, opposition (p. 404).

We might make other equally outspoken and condemnatory criticisms by one who knows from painful experience of what she writes; but for the present we forbear. Some of the later chapters are most scathing in their denunciation of things that are as far as possible removed from anything in the shape of Christianity. We shall be curious to see how the defenders of the Papacy will meet or treat this powerful and crushing deliverance.

* THE NUN OF KENMARE: An Autobiography. With portrait. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.

† Since writing this we learn that Miss Cusack ("the Nun of Kenmare") was received back into the Protestant Episcopal Church at New York on December 4, 1888.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

"I see on thrones of gold the careworn monarchs weep;
I hear the people sadly sighing in their sleep."

THERE are many who undertake to explain to us events that have not yet happened; many more who find no difficulty in explaining events that happened thousands of years ago; but, if the Spirit of God be with the Church, surely there are some who might be able to explain the events of our own day—events which, above all others, apply to us of this generation, and are intended for our teaching.

In December, 1861, little more than twenty-seven years ago, a heavy calamity befel the British throne: one who, to paraphrase the Laureate's words, shone so close to the Queen of these realms that "they made one light together, then suddenly went out, and left the crown a lonely splendour." In April, 1865, a man standing in a still higher position in the United States, fell still more suddenly by the bullet of an assassin. Prince Albert and Abraham Lincoln—what finer characters in their respective spheres? Yet the terrible series of events we are about to recall began with them.

Two years after the death of President Lincoln, the Emperor Maximilian of Mexico, brother of the present Emperor of Austria, was executed, by order of a revolutionary tribunal: June 19, 1867. The tragic end of Maximilian precursed that of the European potentate who had led him into the position.

The defeat and surrender of Napoleon III., in 1870, and his death, an exile ruined and discredited, in 1873, produced a sensation hardly less than that of Napoleon I.; indeed, it touched men's hearts far more when it was followed, in 1879, by the tragic end of the Prince Imperial, slaughtered in Zululand by an apparent mischance. Less than two years later, in March, 1881, the Emperor Alexander II. of Russia was assassinated under quite terrific circumstances.

Thus within twenty years the rulers of England, the United States, Austria, France, and Russia were directly smitten, either in themselves or those very dear to them; and now quite recently the only great throne in Christendom not in the list just mentioned, has been the scene of a long-drawn-out tragedy, an Emperor at one and the same time ascending a throne and descending into the tomb.

But this by no means closes the succession of royal catastrophes which will colour with dark and sombre tints the history of our dying age. In the ten years which began with the catastrophe which closed the second Napoleonic dynasty, and that frightful calamity which has just closed the Austrian dynasty that Francis Joseph might have expected to found—between these two tragedies have come a series of catastrophes personally affecting the greater part of the rulers of Christendom. The bright hopes built on the accession of President Garfield to power were cut short by his assassination in 1881; while President Grévy's long and honourable career was unexpectedly closed in 1887 by a family disgrace. King Alphonso of Spain, the hope of the Spanish monarchy, passed rapidly away in November, 1885, leaving the throne to an unborn child, while in the June following came the fearful scene in which Ludwig, King of Bavaria, drowned both himself and his medical attendant. And now, in the last and present year, have come the most amazing afflictions on the two great German thrones. Nor is this storm of trouble confined to those who reign in the larger countries. The rulers in some of the lesser States have also suffered catastrophes in themselves or their families.

Four emperors, two kings, two United States presidents, four princes standing close to thrones, all cut off in a most tragical manner: this is what has occurred in one generation. Three assassinated, and one slain by savages; two dead by self-murder, and another murdered by military law; leave five only who have died by natural causes, and these have all come to their end under lamentable circumstances.

O readers of the horoscope of the future, is there not a prophet among you that can discern the signs of the times? R. H.

AGNOSTICISM.

THE long paper of Professor Huxley in the current Nineteenth Century, in defence of his position as an Agnostic, is written in a spirit very antagonistic to the beliefs of the Christian religion, and in language of assertive confidence that hardly becomes any man, however distinguished he may be, who, in relation to the deepest and most stupendous of all human questions, differs from the conclusions of a long line of the noblest and most scholarly men during eighteen centuries. The dogmatism which modern scepticism adopts has not in the past been the characteristic of real truth-seekers, and truth is likely to hide itself from such a temper. If the Professor looks for a moment at the bright side of Christianity—its patience, pity, helpfulness, self-sacrifice, and ethical purity—he makes deductions of most unfair proportions, and which are, in their exaggerated form, a libel on the influence which the Christian faith has had on myriads of the human race.

It is remarkable how far one of the most acute intellects of this generation may go in imposing a sophism upon itself. The evidence is held to be accumulating against the judgment that the three synoptic Gospels are the works of three independent writers; and the argument is this—that each of the three Gospels is a compilation consisting of a groundwork common to the three writers. But this has been an admission long maintained by the most eminent Biblical critics. Suppose three contemporary writers had compiled a history of the Prince Albert; would the fact that the three had taken the columns of The Times newspaper, and its yearly summary, as a common groundwork, be proof that they were not independent witnesses and historians?

It has been our privilege to witness the ability with which the eminent Professor has defined the outlines of a huge fossil, and to observe how it became more and more distinct under his inspection. The Professor admits, however, and a very terrible admission it is, that, study as long as he may, he cannot define the figure of Jesus as it lies in the primary strata of Christian literature. Are men, then, to believe that after Jesus lived, the world was in twenty-five years changed, hope created, and a purity and self-denial exemplified in the first Christian disciples which had been hitherto unknown (as Dean Church has conclusively shown), and yet the history of Christ so surrounded at that time with worthless myths, that not even an outline of his Person can now be obtained? Was He, the most influential of all men, at the same time the most hazy in all history? Did He by his tread upon earth manifestly design to change its character and destiny, and yet take no means to perpetuate the knowledge of Himself, and of his teaching? Such conceptions require a far greater stretch of credulity than any that can be charged upon Christian believers.

As to the statements that the Nazarenism taught by the Apostle James, and the doctrine taught by Paul, were irreconcilably divergent, and that the Nicene Creed would have been termed audacious by the party headed by James, let it be remembered, that such confident utterances are nothing more nor less than the unsupported assertions of a teacher whose life-work has been in other directions than such investigations, and are totally at variance with the conclusions of scholars whose life-work has been exclusively devoted to these Christian inquiries.

Anything approximating to a reply to the Professor's article is not our design. The article, with much elsewhere of the same import, will, unhappily, tend to overthrow the restraints to lawlessness which a Christian society has built up. But let young men, who are specially imperilled, be assured that Christianity itself can have nothing to fear from assumptions, upon inadequate inquiry or prejudice. The Christ of the New Testament not only once came in our humanity to redeem from sin and evil, but is with us now in the thick of our conflict; and we know that He inspires strength and courage, and gives hope which is the pledge of final victory to all who believe on Him. W. G.

SCUTARI MEDICAL MISSION.

WE are exhorted to "bear one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ," and the state of the above Mission just now presents an opportunity for obeying the precept. Mrs. Alexandrian, the wife of Dr. Alexandrian, who is conducting it, came recently to England to report progress, and revive, by personal intercourse, the interest of the friends of the Mission. Many meetings in England and Scotland were kindly arranged for her, and she had just begun to conduct them when she was taken seriously ill, and prevented from using these opportunities. Two medical men ordered her immediate return to Constantinople, as it would be dangerous for her to remain in our climate at this season. So she had no option but to go at once. Yet the needs of the Mission and Orphanage are great and urgent, and this devoted and hard-working sister has started on her long homeward journey, in precarious health, depressed by disappointed plans, to meet only anxious fellow-workers with an empty exchequer at home.

The Scutari Medical Mission is not connected in any way with our Institute. But we have visited it, and been rejoiced to note the good it is doing in a dreadfully needy sphere, and the Christians in Constantinople think highly of it. Not only Lady White, of the British Embassy, but Dr. Bliss, of the American Bible Society, Mr. J. R. Van Millingen, director of the Imperial Ottoman Bank, Stamboul, and others, bear the highest testimony to the value of the work carried on by Dr. and Mrs. Alexandrian. We have ourselves every confidence in them, and admire their loving, self-sacrificing missionary devotion. We would gladly forward to them any aid committed to our care. The last report of this brave and little-known effort can be had on application to Harley-house, Bow, E.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Situation surveyed, Defects disclosed, and the Church recalled to her Lord's Instructions.

XII.—Christ's Instructions for his Missionaries:

THE ground is now somewhat cleared for us to seek a definite answer to the question we have already asked, viz.:—MAY MIRACLES OF HEALING AND CASTING OUT OF DEMONS BE LOOKED FOR NOW BY THOSE WHO PLACE THEMSELVES UNDER THESE PRIMITIVE INSTRUCTIONS?

And first we would say: THE WORD OF GOD DOES NOT HINT AT THEIR CESSATION. A prominent foreign mission speaker recently said in Scotland: "Some say that the day of miracles has passed away. Where is there in the Scripture the slightest intimation that the supernatural and miraculous manifestation of his power was intended by Christ to cease in the early days of Christianity? Who can say at what point in its history these manifestations did cease?"

But what saith Christ Himself in his Word, which liveth and endureth for ever? Is it not evident that He intended miracles to continue, from his promise: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on Me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father"? This word includes, not only the Apostles, but all who believe. The works that He did were chiefly beneficent miracles. He made their continuance to depend upon faith. It is far better to put their cessation to the account of our unbelief than to impute it to God's unwillingness still to deliver men from disease and Satanic possession. "Yea, let God be true, but every man a liar; as it is written, that Thou mightest be justified in thy sayings." It is evident that after Pentecost miracles of physical healing were intended to take a secondary place to these "greater works" of spiritual healing, in regard to both importance and frequency, as the chief design of Christ's life and death became more apparent; but to disappear—never.

The most conclusive Scripture on this subject is found in the closing words of Mark's Gospel, which we have already quoted. There, after the disciples are commissioned to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature, it is added: "And these signs shall follow them that believe: in my name they shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." Surely this is conclusive. The Revisers having retained the passage in the text, sufficiently meets any questions as to its genuineness. It was not a privileged class among Christians who were to cast out devils, and lay hands on the sick, and be miraculously preserved from serpents and poisoning, but simply "those that believe." Moreover, this word of Christ here in the end of Mark is followed with the declaration: "And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following." Couple this declaration of how the Lord works with his disciples who believe for it, as He accompanies them, with the promise in the end of Matthew, which assures us of the duration of this companionship: "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age." Thus is disclosed the truth that one purpose of his presence going with them was to confirm the word with these "signs following," and the promise of this presence reaches to us, and beyond us, even to "the end of the age." Let us read this very last sentence in Mark in the light of that very last sentence in Matthew, and let our hearts add in faith the "Amen" with which both close. With reference to this Scripture, it has been said: "I believe many have yet to learn what has been and what ought to be the effect of the touch of the hand of God's servants...I will only say time was when virtue accompanied it; nay, when even the shadow of an Apostle could heal. It will not hurt us to remember, even if the glory is now departed from us, that such things have once been. And this I will add, that as the day seems returning, when devils are rebuked, and lame ones healed, those who look closely will see that a tender hand is not wanting in such service. But where, as one has asked, are the layers-on of hands, who give man back to himself and God, by casting out of devils?...Many say that the age of miracles is past. But Christianity, as we find it in the Scriptures, was the institution of miracle, and if the age of miracle be well nigh gone, is it not because the age of Christianity is well nigh gone? The age of mathematics would be past if no man cultivated them." This quotation is worthy of being written in letters of gold.

We now move on to another consideration of great weight, viz.: THE NEED OF OUR LORD'S MIRACULOUS INTERVENTION ON BEHALF OF THE BODIES OF MEN IS THE SAME AS IN THE EARLY DAYS. If those bound by disease and Satan then needed loosing, they do none the less now. Involuntary demoniacal possession exists now as then, while voluntary commerce with demons, and yielding of their bodies to them by men and women, is alarmingly rife and increasing.

If these signs were needed in the beginning to call attention to the Gospel, and as an earnest of Christ's mighty power, is the need less to-day? It is not less among the heathen who never heard of Christ. The establishment of Christianity, and its existence through the centuries, is unknown to them, and, therefore, is no proof of the power of the Gospel. If you reply, But the missionary can apprise them of how the religion of Christ has won its way. Yes, he may; but if he honestly tell them its history, the story of its sects, its sloth, its worldliness, the awful things done under the name of Christ, would it accredit the Gospel to these heathens? Besides, they see so-called Christian nations guilty of national sins against themselves which cry to Heaven for vengeance. Therefore, is not their need of signs confirming the word far greater than that of the nations of Apostolic times?

Mohammedans need them also. They have felt the keen sword of the Crusaders, and have witnessed, both in the east in Turkey, and in the west in Spain, the corrupt forms of the Greek and Roman apostasies. They believe our Scriptures are changed so as to silence the testimony they say they originally bore to the coming of Mohammed as the final prophet. What is the miracle of Christianity's existence, or "the witness of history to Christ," to them? Do they less need to behold the outward evidence of the power of Him who is mighty to save than did the ancient inhabitants of those very lands they now dominate?

And poor Christendom, drifting away from truth into godless science, hugging to its bosom its darling speculations, which are doing much to contravene the truth of God and to bring in the fast approaching apostasy—does not it need a sight again of the power of Christ in miracle? If we believe prophecy, we know that it will yet behold and welcome the miracles of him "whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders."

And there is the Church of Christ also, honey-combed and weakened at home by "another gospel, which is not another," which would deny all miracle; and abroad, under the name of giving the word of life to the peoples sitting in darkness, expending her strength in sundry philanthropic, educational, and civilising schemes—could not she profit from again beholding men delivered by the direct power of her Lord from the hard tyranny which Satan exercises through disease and demoniacal possession? How this would give the lie to the rationalism that would explain away Christ's gracious works of old! How this would correct that growing tendency, becoming every day more popular, by which her work abroad is being so materialised! How blessed it would be if only the more excellent way, the simple, and beautiful, and effective way, of the sick being healed by the direct power of the risen Christ, could take the place of the machinery of modern Medical Mission effort.

This state of things in the Church finds its parallel in that leaf of our Lord's history in Mark vi. where it is written, "And He could there do no mighty work, save that He laid his hands on a few sick folk, and healed them. And He marvelled because of their unbelief. And He went round about their villages, teaching." These pregnant words outline our time. Now, because of unbelief, no mighty works are done. But Christ will not have the world without a testimony to his unchanging compassion and power. Therefore we see "a few sick folk healed." Alas! how few! How partial and intermittent is the putting forth of this power!

Let us not fail to note well the significance of the fact that the presence of unbelief and the consequent absence of mighty works did not prevent Christ from going "round about teaching," as the record in Mark tells us. Even so now there is an abundance of teaching. A certain large degree of spiritual intelligence may mark an era in which there is a low degree of spiritual power. This spiritual intelligence may go on into a good measure of real and precious consecration, and yet spiritual power be absent. It is even so in these days. But in Mark the Gospel narrative goes on at once to tell of the Lord calling his disciples to Him and giving them power to heal and sending them forth. So may it be now!

An author already quoted says: "All things seem to show that a new day is breaking, and the latter rain is being poured out, and souls are awaking to expect great things from God their Saviour." He has all gifts and grace laid up for us. An aroused general faith would doubtless be the prelude to marvellous showings forth of healing power. May that searching word of the Spirit concerning the Apostles, "They considered not the miracle of the loaves: for their heart was hardened," cease to apply to us!

We are aware that the putting forth of this direct healing power has been only among believers, and that few of the unconverted at home or abroad have been healed. If faith is so slight and halting in God's intervention to cure his people's ills, it is no wonder that, as yet, the expectation of his power in this direction accompanying the preaching of the Gospel among the heathen is unrevived to any discernible degree. But they are parts of one whole. What has occurred at home should kindle our faith for similar results abroad. If this testimony to Christ being "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever," is needed among Christians, and He is "glorified thereby," how much greater is the need of it among those who have not yet heard his fame! Let those then that are prepared to go out to the unsaved nations under these instructions of the Lord Jesus, in full obedience to their every detail, wait upon Him in simple and confident faith as to this! Let them cherish and plead the promises we have brought from the Word! Let them encourage themselves with every argument that faith and facts can supply! We cannot expect or claim too much. Let them pray as they did of old: "And now, Lord, grant unto thy servants, that with all boldness we may speak thy word, by stretching forth thy hand to heal; and that signs and wonders may be done in the name of thy Holy Child, Jesus." That prayer was answered then. Why should it not be now?

The only hindrance we know of is the weakness of faith in the whole body of disciples. When one member suffers, all the other members suffer with it. No one can escape the effect of the general and corporate weakness. It is only when "all saints" see together, and believe together, and love each other, that the greatest spiritual results are possible. As one has said: It takes all the wonderful composite eye of some insects to behold an object. Mar even one of those parts of the organ of vision, and the power of sight is proportionately lessened. So, it is only "with all saints" we can "know the love of Christ that passeth knowledge, that we might be filled unto all the fulness of God." The same principle holds good as to faith. Here is the chief explanation of the meagre dimensions which gifts of healing have attained in these times. And yet we may encourage ourselves by remembering the vast results granted to individual faith in times of corporate failure. Think of the judges in Israel, and of some of the prophets, such as Elijah; Think of Luther in his day! Think of the things wrought by the faith of George Müller in this age when faith is excessively weak! Therefore, though the results may not be what they would if all believers were one in conviction and faith as to these methods of missionary work, and in certain expectation of seeing the Lord go forth with his messengers, confirming the word with signs following, yet let us be assured that very much of power and blessing will accompany those who adopt the Lord's own plan of this Gospel campaign, and who confidently expect Him to work in measure as of old.

We have next to study the Divine philosophy of these details of the missionary constitution.

A MISSIONARY.

LUCHMINNIA.*

ONLY a poor child-widow, in India's wide domains;
Only an outraged woman where the Queen-Empress reigns;
Only one of the "little ones" whom the Lord Christ came to save,
Torn from his servant's keeping to be made a heathen's slave.

Who saw that young girl's agony—who heard her shriek of fear—
With eye of cold indifference, and dull and heavy ear?
Whose cruel lips the sentence spake, in the law's outraged name,
Which doomed that Christian sister to a life of foulest shame?

O England! O my country! in thy name this was done;
Thy children wrought the cruel deed 'neath India's tropic sun;
From Magistrate to Viceroy, each heart seemed turned to stone:
Crushed by an Empire's power, she met her fate alone.

And shall we, her Western sisters—shall we stand silent by, [cry?
Now we know poor Luchmin's story, and have heard her mournful
In England, as in India, there are men who, if they could,
Would gag us, while they trample on our common womanhood.

But we can speak for Luchmin, though her child-lips are dumb;
We can tell her piteous story till it touch the hearts of some,
Who, sitting in high places, can avenge her bitter wrong,
And punish her oppressors, though their cruel hands are strong.

A woman and a mother rules in England—India; too;
Beneath the royal purple that woman's heart beats true;
Let us tell her Luchmin's story: the Queen-Empress cannot know
That her servants in that far-off land have wrought her subject's woe.

Who is it speaks? May Luchmin's voice by us be understood!
Who was it of a woman said, "She hath done what she could"?
Oh, let the Master speak again, and may his sentence be,
"As ye did it unto Luchmin, ye have done it unto Me."

AKYAB, BURMAH.—SIR,—There is a band of about thirty believers here formed into a Christian Church. They have to contend against Ritualism, Romanism, Buddhism, &c. They ask your prayers and help. THE CHRISTIAN and other religious papers and books would help to dispel the surrounding darkness.

XVII.—THE SUPERLATIVE GREATNESS OF CHRIST.

HEBREWS vii.

THESE chapters need to be read under a deep sense of sin, to be properly understood and appreciated. It is the conscious sinner who needs the Priest. We can do very well with Christ as Teacher, Philanthropist, Ideal Man, until we see ourselves as we are in the sight of God; but when that vision is given to us, our hearts cry out with an exceeding great and bitter cry for the Priest, who can stand for us with God, and for God with us.

There is urgent need for a fresh consciousness and conviction of our sinnership, both amongst unbelievers and professing Christians. Light views of sin give slight views of the sacrifice of Calvary, of the need for propitiation, and of the dread future penalty on wilful wrong-doing. Did men really understand what sin is, they would not talk so glibly of their complete deliverance from it, confounding as they do the few sins of which they are cognisant with the mass of evil that lies still in their nature, like the mud at the bottom of a pellucid lake, only needing to be stirred to show itself. And if men really felt their sins, there would be a unanimous rush to the precious blood and to the only Priest, for absolution and pardon.

It is hardly likely that these poor words can affect the set of the current; yet, if it were possible to reach the great mass of the preachers of the present day, one would urge them to lay aside their literary essays, their arguments with evolutionists, their poetry, and rhetoric; and to bring the trenchant teaching of God's Word to bear on human consciences and lives. Let them attack sin as sin. Let them deal with the sins of their congregations specifically, as the Boer marks his man for his bullet. Let them show what God thinks of the sins which we treat so lightly. And as soon as we get back to the old-fashioned style of preaching, we shall see a revival of old-fashioned conversions. It is of no use complaining, when we are ourselves to blame. Human nature is unaltered. The law of God is unchanged. The cry of the conscience is stifled not silenced. Again shall we hear of multitudes pierced to the heart, and crying for mercy. And then the Priesthood of Christ, as described here, will acquire a new preciousness.

HE IS A GREAT HIGH PRIEST (4).—How great, appears from the episode here referred to. Flushed with victory, bringing with him all the captives and goods, which Chedorlaomer had swept away from Sodom, the patriarch Abraham had nearly reached his own camp. But as he drew nigh to Salem, where peace and righteousness dwelt beneath the rule of Melchizedek, he was met by this saintly figure, bearing in his hand the sacred emblems of bread and wine: meet type of Him who often accosts us on the road of life, when weary with conflict, or when entering into subtle temptation, and refreshes us with the bread of his flesh, and the wine of his blood. And Abraham knelt to receive a blessing at his hand, and gave him tithes of all (Gen. xiv. 19, 20).

Does not this prove the greatness of Melchizedek? The Levites and priests were indeed permitted to take tithes of their brethren, but this glorious priest feels no compunction to take tithes of one of another race. He rose above the narrow boundaries of race or blood, and was prepared to do his office with equal care for an alien as for his own. This unsectarian, cosmopolitan, large-hearted view of his obligations to man as man is a true mark of greatness. And in this he betrays a trait of the greatness of our dear Lord, whose Priesthood overleaps the limits which might be set by nationality or birth, and deals with man as man; with thee, reader, and me, if only we will come to Him.

Besides this, since the greater must bless the less, it is obvious that Abraham, great and good though he was, the friend of God, and the recipient of the promises, must have felt that Melchizedek was his superior, or he would never have treated him with such marked respect (6, 7). Surely, then, this holy man was a fit representative of our blessed Lord, to whom all the noblest in heaven and earth bow the knee, confessing that He is Lord, and consecrating to Him, not a tenth only, but the whole of what they have and are.

HE IS A GREATER HIGH PRIEST THAN AARON OR HIS SONS.—When Abraham knelt beneath that royal and priestly hand, he did not do so for himself alone, but as the representative man. First and head of his race, his descendants were identified with him in his deed. Levi, therefore, who receiveth tithes payed tithes in the patriarch, and, in doing so, for evermore took up the second place as inferior, and second best.

"Stop," cries an objector; "if you affirm this inferiority of the Jewish prieshood to that of Melchizedek, you are making an assertion so far-reaching in its results as to need some further corroboration. Are you quite sure that this is as you say?" "Certainly," is the reply, "else, why should there be so emphatic an announcement made in David's Psalms of the coming of another Priest long after the Jewish priesthood had been in operation? If perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, what further need was there that another Priest should rise after the order of Melchizedek, and not be called after the order of Aaron?" (11).

"But, stay," again interposes the objector; "if you are going to supersede the Levitical priesthood, you are of necessity making a change in all that ceremonial law which rested on the priesthood as an arch upon its keystone. Are you prepared to sweep away a system so venerable, so religiously maintained, the bulwark of religion, the institution of God?" "I am prepared for this," is the reply; "the previous commandments that relate to sacrifices, and rites, and ceremonies, will have to go. They were temporary and imperfect. Types, not realities; moulds, not the real vessels; shadows, not the substance. They made nothing perfect. Their office was to bring in a better hope, but, now that this is come, they may be disannulled and laid aside."

It seems a light thing to us, but it was of the gravest import to those who were here addressed. To them the Jewish priesthood and ceremonial were more than a State religion, they were religion itself. Tradition, custom, ancestral veneration, personal admiration, and adherence—all these ties had to be rudely snapt, as they were compelled to admit the cogency of this inspired and irresistible argument. If Jesus were indeed the Priest spoken of by David in Psalm cx., and of this there seemed no doubt, because it was so often applied to Him (Matt. xxii. 44; Acts ii. 34), then there could be no doubt that his Priesthood was better than Aaron's, and that the whole system of which the Levitical priesthood was the essential characteristic must pass away before that system which gathers around the person and work of the Lord Jesus.

We must distinguish between the moral and the ceremonial law; the latter is transient, and was fulfilled in Jesus Christ; the former, of course, is of permanent and eternal force, written on the conscience of man and the government of the world.

We can only stay for a moment here to show how absurd it is, for either the Roman or the Anglican priest to base his pretensions on the example of the Old Testament. To do so is to confess their inferiority to the only Priesthood which is recognised in the present age. They are in evil case. Press them for their warrant of existence. If they quote Rev. i. 6, then we all have an equal right to wear their dress, and fulfil their office. If they quote Leviticus, then are they hopelessly undone, for that priesthood has been superseded. The time is coming when all HIS people will have to disavow connection with those men whose pretensions are baseless, or worse, delusive; and an unwarrantable intrusion into the sacred offices of Christ. Alas! poor souls, deluded and fleeced by them!

HE IS THE GREATEST OF HIGH PRIESTS.—(1) Because He was made Priest by the oath of God (20). Ordinary priests had no such sanction to their appointment, but He by an oath. Jehovah sware, and will not change his mind. His appointment is final, absolute, immutable. It never can be superseded, as that of Aaron has been. Heaven and earth may pass away, but it will not pass away.

(2) Because He continueth ever.—His is the Priesthood in which throbs the power of an endless life (16). It is witnessed of Him, that He liveth. "Behold," said He, "I am alive for evermore." What a contrast to all human priests, on whose graves this epitaph may ever be inscribed, not suffered to continue by reason of death! One by one they grow old and die. The eye often filmed with tears is closed. The heart stands still. The hands, often raised in absolution, crossed meekly on the breast, as if asking for pardon. But He ever liveth. And of this perpetual life, there are two blessed results. On the one hand, He has an untransferable Priesthood (24); on the other hand, He is able to save them to the uttermost, that come unto God by Him (25). There is no limit to his salvation, no barrier beyond which He may not pass. Uttermost in time, and in character, and in desperation, you may be at one of the ends of the earth, yet you shall be lifted to the uttermost degree of glory.

(3) Because of his blameless character.—Holy towards God; harmless towards man; undefiled in heart; separate from sinners in life. Not needing to offer up sacrifice for Himself as the priests did always before offering for the congregation; not requiring to make a daily or yearly repetition of that perfect sacrifice and oblation which was once made on the cross (26, 27).

(4) Because of the dignity of his Person (28).—The office of mediation is no longer entrusted to a man, or set of men, encompassed by infirmity. See through the shining ranks of being there advances the Son, Light of light, Fellow of Jehovah, Co-equal with God, One with Father and Spirit in the ever-blessed Trinity. He is solemnly consecrated to this task of reconciling and saving sinners. All heaven hears and ratifies the oath. And surely we may well ponder what must be our worth in the thought of God, and what our destiny, when our case is undertaken, amid such solemnities, by One so august, so glorious, so Divine, as the High Priest, who now awaits the appeal of the humblest penitent of the human race. "Such a High Priest became us."

Dr. Saphir on the Bible.

ON Thursday last week Dr. Saphir delivered the first of a second series of addresses on the Bible in St. John's Presbyterian Church, Allen-street, Kensington. Doubt and unbelief as regards Holy Writ formed the subject, and a large audience listened with rapt attention to the deeply interesting treatment it received at Dr. Saphir's hands. During the preliminary proceedings the passages, 1 John i. 1—4, and v. 20, 21, were read, the "Word of Life" which "was with the Father, and was manifested unto us" thus being very opportunely brought under notice.

In some introductory remarks, Dr. Saphir emphasised the need of recognising that the continuity of Scripture revelation does not consist in oracles and prophecies given from time to time without any connection; but it is one connected and united chain, in which link gives strength unto link. Thus it is that unless Moses had believed in the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, he could not have received the new revelation of Jehovah, and of the covenant which God was about to make with his people. Every prophet refers back to the Law, until at last in John the Baptist we have both the Law and the Prophets reproduced. The disciples of Christ were in like manner in possession of the Scriptures when the Lord had opened their understandings to know them—in possession of the Scriptures in a way such as the Scribes and Pharisees were not.

The Scriptures are now finished, but the Spirit by whom they were written is still watching over them, as the history of the Bible for the past eighteen hundred years wonderfully proves. God the Creator, after He had finished the heavens and the earth, did not leave creation unto itself; but, rather, He is still "upholding all things by the word of his power." Jesus the Saviour also, after He had laid the foundation of the Church by his incarnation, death, and resurrection, did not leave the Church unto herself, but is Immanuel—"I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age." So, too, the Holy Ghost, by whom the Scriptures came into existence, did not leave them, but still breathes in them and out of them the breath of life, of everlasting blessedness.

Dr. Saphir proceeded to compare the history of the Church up to the time of the Reformation with the history of the Jewish nation from Moses unto the time of Ezra and Nehemiah, pointing out very striking resemblances. Had it not been for the written record of revelation given to Moses and acknowledged to be perfect, Samuel and the prophets would have been helpless in the face of a wicked generation. The prophets were not men of genius anticipating the future; on the contrary, instead of being leaders in advance of their age, they pointed back to the ages gone by. Their watchword was not "Excelsior!" but "Repent!" "Return!" They said, "Seek out the old paths," "Remember the law which my servant Moses gave unto you on Mount Horeb." So also it was at the Reformation. Ezra stood between Moses and the first advent of Christ; the Reformers stood between the first and second advents. In each case there was a pointing back to a revelation to which nothing could be added and from which nothing could be taken. Nothing has to be developed in the Church, for all is perfect and complete in the Scriptures.

Passing on, Dr. Saphir noticed the influence of Paul's Epistle to the Galatians at the time of the Reformation. Luther there found absolute truth as to the Gospel, sin, justification by faith, and more besides. Reproducing that testimony, the Reformers, being men of faith enlightened by the Holy Ghost, were able to speak out of their own experience. Then, telling old and young of all classes of the people that Scripture explains itself, they made the entire congregation independent of human tradition and ambition. Moreover, the Reformers had a wonderful insight into the Old Testament; otherwise, indeed, they could not have brought before the Church the truths of the New Testament, of which the foundation lay in Moses and the prophets. In the Papacy Luther had imbibed metaphysical ideas of God, as to his infiniteness and incomprehensibleness; in the Old Testament, especially in the Book of Psalms, he found God revealed as condescending, and, as it were, clothing Himself in human form—full of mercy and compassion. The Reformers had, secondly, to go back to the Old Testament, because the people did not know the true nature of sin and godliness. The bright mirror of the law was looked into, and told what sin really was; while from the Psalms it was shown that the man whose affections are set upon Jehovah will, by the Divine Spirit, be drawn into fellowship with God. Thirdly, the Old Testament furnished what was of supreme importance, a complete analysis and anatomy of the human heart—as shown in the lives of patriarchs, kings, prophets, and others. Lastly, since the New Testament appeals unto the Church, whose calling is a heavenly one, the Old was resorted to for instruction as to God's government with nations and families.

These points having been ably elaborated, it was shown that, like the revivals in Israel, the Reformation awakening was of short duration. It is not orthodoxy that "overcometh the world," but "our faith." Shortly after the Reformation came a reign of rationalism. This was briefly described, as were also the pantheistic and materialistic movements of subsequent periods. The impressions these left upon the minds of men were likewise set forth. Remarking upon the admission of scientific men that the beginning and end of things are quite beyond their investigations, Dr. Saphir said: "What is this but a corroboration of God's words: 'I am the first and I am the last'?" The result of the movements referred to is antipathy to the Scriptures and their teachings. However, all the high looks will, in God's time, be brought down. In the meantime, the words of the Apostle of Love are: "Little children, keep yourselves from idols."

SOLDIERS IN SOUTH AFRICA.—We should be glad to receive religious literature and tracts for distribution amongst the men of the army in barracks or hospital, and for the coloured population here. Some two months ago a branch of Miss Rundle's Association was started, and the Lord has blessed our efforts. There were twelve of us when we started, and now we number forty. Of these, sixteen have found redemption at our meetings. Two of our number are leaving the army for the mission field as evangelists and colporteurs. We have started an institute at Wynberg which is well attended by soldiers and civilians, and now the Lord has opened up the way for work amongst the coloured people. We ask the prayers of your readers. Parcels, &c., may be addressed, Gunner F. Field, Western Div. R.A., Castle, Cape Town, South Africa.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST.

Before the Cross with all my sins
I bowed, and mercy sought;
Salvation soon was mine through grace,
With peace and pardon fraught.

Behind the Cross I hide me now,
That Jesus might appear;
Himself, not I; his love, not mine;
The witness I would bear.

Beyond the Cross, where faith beholds
The rainbow-'circled throne,
I soon shall be, and there in bliss
His love who saved me own.

O wondrous Cross! its triumphs see
Where waves of glory roll;
The starting-point of precious faith,
Eternal bliss its goal.

ALBERT MIDLANE.

BATH MINISTERIAL CONFERENCE.

WE have had a three days' conference of the Congregational and Baptist ministers of the three counties of Wiltshire, Somersetshire, and Gloucestershire. Some eighty gathered in Argyle Chapel (hallowed by the memory of Mr. Jay), where the keynote was struck by the pastor, Rev. T. STEPHENS, of Confession to God. This was followed by a public meeting, when Holiness to God was strongly impressed upon us.

Next day Rev. F. B. MEYER joined us, and presided at the meetings. We were first led to examine and see wherein our ministerial failure lay: there were private as well as public sins that had to be confessed; there were also family, social, and pulpit sins; at the remembrance of these we were deeply humbled. The next call was to Consecration, when there was definite yielding of the citadel of the will and of the whole manhood to God.

The afternoon of that day was a most interesting time, when one after another rose to tell of some definite spiritual crisis since their conversion, when self-surrender had been accompanied by the Divine infilling; many difficulties were removed, and the presence of God was consciously realised by this experimental rehearsal.

The evening meeting was public. Heart-searching were the words of Mr. Meyer, as he applied it powerfully to our hearts, how far the words we had been singing were true, "I am thine and Thou art mine." Did we recognise that we were as much the property of Christ as the slave is of his master? Then how far has there been appropriation as well as consecration? Do we in our weakness claim Christ's strength, in our depression his joy, in our irritability his peace? Oh, the miserable poverty of our lives considering the wealth at our disposal.

The last morning we gathered for our farewell meeting round the Lord's table. We caught a glimpse of the overflowing life, when our Divine Master is allowed, with our consent, to fill our hearts with Himself. Wise words of caution were given to us on "How to retain the abiding presence, and how to recover it when lost." We were shown how easily we may grieve the Holy Spirit, and how our spiritual sensibilities now quickened should jealously guard against the smallest departures. The concluding word given to us was, "Now unto Him that is able to keep you from stumbling, and to present you faultless," &c. So we left for our home occupations, feeling as though we had been on the Mount of God. The result of these gatherings, not only personally but relatively, who can estimate? Of one thing we are sure, that the future ministry of many who were present will henceforth be one of joy to themselves, and of attractive power to their people.

A KERB-STONE MEETING.

ONE night, with two friends, I was at work on the Bowery, New York. I was talking with a drunken man while my companions stood waiting for me. I noticed one of a gang of thieves who were lounging around the door of a concert hall, leave his companions, approach my friends, and enter into conversation. I left my man and joined them. Seeing that I was the leader of the party, he addressed himself to me. After some talk he was about to try and induce us to try some "confidence game," when I said: "My friend, I know you and your game; we are not as simple as you thought. I should think a man like you would want to be in some better business than taking in unsuspecting people. It's mighty mean business—that of a thief—don't you think so?" He looked and acted as though he was about to make some forcible remarks; but, before he could do anything, I laid my hand on his arm and said: "You ought to be a Christian."

He started back as though struck, but quickly recovered, and said with a sneer, "Me a Christian? Will Christ pay my rent? Will Christ feed me?"

"Well," I said, "I have seen a good many start to serve Christ, without a cent or even a place to lay their heads, and I never knew one He let go down, who was really in earnest."

"But, see here, did you ever see Christ?"

"No, but I expect to see Him; I have his word that I shall."

Turning to his companions, he called out: "Come here, and see a fellow who's got a promise of seeing Christ."

We were standing under an electric light, it being past midnight. Quite a number who were passing stopped. His companions gathered round, and I found myself in the centre of a typical Bowery crowd—Jew and Gentile, a number of sporting men and thieves, two or three fallen women, several drunken men, and others attracted by the crowd, eager to see what was going on.

As his companions joined him he said: "This fellow is going to see Christ."

"Yes," I said, opening the Bible, "I have his word for it; I will read it to you: 'Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is.'"

"Oh, you are a son of God, are you?" he exclaimed contemptuously.

"Yes, and I have his word for that," reading the Bible again. "'As many as received Him to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name.' I was once far away from God, a great sinner, but I believed and received, and became his child."

"Well, brother, here's my hand; I am a child of God, too," he said, winking at his companions.

"Oh, no"; said I, "don't call me brother; you don't belong to the Lord's family. 'Ye are of your father the devil.'" And I read from Romans: "'Know ye not to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey his servants ye are to whom ye obey'; your regular business is serving the devil, and you can't palm yourself off on me as one of God's family. But you may be adopted into his family if you will." Then I read John iii. 16: "'For God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.'"

A man who had one of his ears nearly cut off from a fight, and whose head was bandaged, said: "You had better take a back seat, Bill; he's too much for you." Bill turned with an oath, and said: "You had better get out; there's nothing here for a man with one ear." At this the crowd laughed and jeered him. He was making his way out of the crowd, when I reached over and caught him by the shoulder, and said: "Hold on, friend, there is something for you," and turning to Revelation I read, "'He that hath an ear, let him hear. To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life.'"

The crowd laughed heartily at this quotation, and I saw I had their sympathy, so I gave them an invitation to attend the meetings at the mission, and after a few earnest words about their souls, I closed by saying: "We shall never all meet on earth again, but we shall each have to give an account for this kerb-stone meeting. May God bless every one of you."

One rough fellow stepped forward with tears in his eyes, and shook my hand heartily, saying: "Stick to it, young fellow, I wish I had; I was brought up right, in Sunday-school and all, and if I had stuck to it I wouldn't be what I am to-night."

Just as I was going away, Bill came up and said: "You mustn't mind what I said, I've been drinking. I used to belong to the church and was a Christian, but I got off. I know it's the better way, but there's no good talking to me."

After a few words with him, I left, praying God to bless the seed sown by the wayside. This was on Thursday. Sunday evening, when I opened the meeting for testimony, a man got up and said: "I have been a drinking man all my life, and have spent many years in prison; but last Thursday night the young man in the chair there, came down near where I stay, and was talking about Christ, and I made up my mind to be a Christian, and I haven't touched a drop since, and I believe I am saved." When the invitation for prayers was given, the first one to come forward was Bill. For two nights both were present, Bill coming forward each night; then I lost sight of them.

Nearly six months passed, when the first man, nicely dressed and greatly altered, came in. He requested us to sing:—

All the way my Saviour leads me,
What have I to ask beside?

and followed it by saying, "That is my experience." He then told us how God had kept and blessed him, and had given him employment. The very Inspector of Police who had so many times caused his arrest obtained work for him. He was with us in the meetings, and became an earnest worker.

One night he said: "Do you remember Bill L———, the one who wanted to know if Christ would pay his rent?" "Yes."

"Well, the devil has paid his rent for life; he was sentenced for life last week, for shooting the bar-tender in the A——— Hotel on the Bowery."

Speaking at a convention of this incident, a nurse from the city hospital came and inquired the time this occurred, and said: "I think I attended that man who had his ear injured. He came and an operation was performed; but it was unsuccessful, and he was obliged to come back again and have his ear cut off. The man asked the surgeon if he could get a false ear. 'No,' said the surgeon, 'you will have to go through life with one ear.'

"'Well,' said the man, 'thank God, I have heard of a book that says there is something for a man with one ear.'"

So God blessed the seed even though it seemed to fall on stony ground.—The (Boston) Watchword.

SAILORS' WELCOME HOME.—At the last monthly meeting of the Christian Lifeboat Crew on Feb. 5, a very practical address was given by Rev. H. Bloomer on God's love. This was followed by many testimonies from sailors, bargemen, and others. Miss Child said that great blessing had resulted from her visit with some of the crew to Faversham, where a strong branch had been formed. She also spoke of the blessings attending the free soup suppers at the Welcome Home.

"A LIGHT IN A DARK PLACE."

SOME two years ago, we were led by the good hand of God upon us, to pitch our tent in the midst of Woodberry Town, Stamford-hill, where there are about 4000 people closely dwelling together. Thanks be unto God, we have been graciously led to gather together, a "church in the wilderness." Our little green spot has been well used, so that some few weeks ago we made our third enlargement. Already it is far too small for the demand. We have on Sunday morning a service chiefly for the young. The afternoon service is packed again with children, and the evening filled with adults. We are greatly cheered in bringing in some sheaves from among the young, middle-aged, and old men. Some blessed instances might be told of real conversions and happy deaths.

These testimonies are confirming us in our resolve to dwell among the common people. We find the afternoon weekly cottage meeting very blessed to the mothers when the children are in school. This day (Monday), we were twelve adults besides children holding service in a small kitchen lent by a poor woman. We are pained to see in our visitation so much suffering, want of employment, food, and coals, &c.

MISSION TO TRAMPS.

THE latest report of the work among this vagrant section of the community, begun some years since through the efforts of Miss Barnett, of Cheltenham, says:—

Gospel services have been arranged, or permission given to the tramps to attend the regular religious services in 100 unions. In 88 unions small libraries of Bibles and books calculated to be most helpful to this peculiar class have been introduced, and placed in charge of the casual ward master. The walls of the cells have been lighted up by Scripture cards with floral devices and texts. With the permission of the authorities many gentlemen and several ladies visit the wards and speak to the tramps; Gospel addresses are also given and greatly appreciated.

The following testimony as to results is given, and much more of the same kind could be added:—"A striking case of conversion occurred in the casual ward of —— Union. A tramp in a state of mental depression attempted suicide; he was removed to the infirmary; I saw him frequently, gave him the Gospel by John, and asked him to read the third chapter; he became convinced of sin, and began to pray for the first time in his life; he came in deep penitence to the Saviour, and found peace; the Gospel was his daily comfort. The prison chaplain wrote: 'I do, indeed, believe that he is a new man in Christ Jesus.'"

The chaplain of Worcester Union wrote last December: "I scarcely know how sufficiently to thank you for the cards and leaflets; they have been a great help in my ministrations to the poor tramps, and the library has proved of untold benefit. Many tramps now pray where once the word prayer was never heard."

A committee has been formed to assist Miss Barnett, whose address is 2, Eldon-villas, Battledown, Cheltenham.

MRS. HILTON'S CRECHE.—A sale of work will be held in May for the benefit of this institution. The Crèche receives from eighty to a hundred young children daily, while the mothers are at work. The Orphan Home has forty inmates. Help is urgently needed to re-open the country branch at Feltham, which has been closed during the winter, as well as to support the large family in the Stepney Home. All kinds of saleable articles will be welcomed, up to the end of April, by Mrs. Hilton, 12, Stepney-causeway, London, E.

WILL the Editor give me space for another letter about Volrent? My last told you about the lavender harvest; but the wheat harvest came first, and I am sure you would have been interested in it. I think I might say without exaggeration that there were far more stones than stalks of wheat in the fields; but there was the wheat, and everyone was out all day long, men and women, reaping, the men with large, light, dangerous-looking sickles, and the women with short, clumsy, heavy hooks, which they carried tucked through their apron strings behind in a very droll fashion; and children gleaning.

One day I went with Madame as she carried the "goûter" to the reapers. It was a wallet, one end holding a great round flat loaf, and the other filled with walnuts. There was a huge bottle, but I don't know what was in it; as, though they invited me to share their bread and walnuts, no one asked me to drink out of the bottle as everyone else did. I think it was water, for the people of Volrent, unlike any other French people I have seen, drink water freely and fearlessly. They are too high up for vineyards; even the swallows never come there. I saw the little gleaners grouped at a distance as we ate our lunch, but no one invited them to eat with us. I saw them very nearly gleaning among the sheaves, and looking as if they longed to get some handfuls of ears.

One night, coming back from a distant expedition to the "Désert," we saw a pretty scene in a cornfield across a ravine. The sun was just setting, and the harvest was all cut. Nothing remained to be done but the ingathering, and the reapers, apparently one family, were carrying the sheaves, laughing and shouting as they raced with one another, trying who should reach home first with the sheaves.

It was with us time to sow rather than to reap; and when we went to the temple to meet the scattered Protestants it was not very encouraging. The temple was a barn once. It is ventilated by broken panes; one end is green with the rain that came in in winter; the Bible is falling to pieces; there were no hymn-books, and no one seemed to know how to sing. How the pastor dares to stay in the pulpit when he has climbed the little rickety ladder into it, I don't know. Perhaps he stops on the floor.

And the people, the first three who came in, only spoke "patois," and two could not read. One after another came till we were perhaps twenty. We had brought hymn-books, and some could read, and join in "Une bonne nouvelle, Descend des cieux." But, in spite of my speaking slowly and simply, I had a painful feeling of not being understood. It was small comfort to know that it was certain the pastor was no better understood than I was, but the effort to understand was a little encouragement. It was wonderful, however, how much four Sundays of regular services made the French comprehensible, and when the women came to our room for a Bible-reading in the afternoons and sometimes at night, the faces gained in expression and intelligence more than I could have believed possible. "The entrance of thy Word giveth light" is true now as formerly. We hope to get up to Volrent for a week this winter if the way is not blocked.

I must not forget to tell you of an old shepherd of ninety, a splendid old man with really courtly manners, eyes not dimmed, and natural force hardly diminished. It was strange to talk with one who remembered the old Revolution times, who remembered when the last Seigneur of Volrent was chased by the peasants from his château, and only saved from death by the kindness of some peasant who hid him three days in a hut in the mountains till his friends came for him. He had had the power of life and death over his vassals; no wonder they rejoiced when such tyranny was abolished! How this old man loved his sheep, leading them out in the early morning, and bringing them home to rest in the heat of the day, and then leading them out again for the cool of the evening, staying out with them till long after dark, when he himself must have been worn out with fatigue and hunger. They were his first thought.

But I think the goats would have amused you more than the sheep, which are very silly creatures. There was quite a flock of them belonging to the village. Most families had from one to five, but all went out to feed on the mountains under the care of the goatherd every morning, and came back at night, each one knowing its own home, and coming even to knock at the door to ask to be milked!

It was a strange sight every morning. The goatherd had a kind of horn which he blew, and the goats recognised the call and came running together to him, only waiting, if it were possible to do any mischief on the way. There was a fig tree near us in a court, and it was droll to see some of the goats rush in, stand up on their hind legs, and snatch a mouthful of the leaves; but, nevertheless, quit them at once when the imperative summons of their master sounded hoarse and near. I saw him once with his flock hanging, so it seemed, on the bare mountain side, away from the green pastures and fresh running streams; away, too, from the lofty summits basking in sunlight and sweet with lavender. What they found to eat and why their goatherd led them there I could not imagine; but I like better to think of the stately old shepherd and the flock he loved so well. If I get to Volrent this winter I must tell you how it looks in its winter dress.

Mr. Josiah Spiers, Wood Green Mission Hall, March 15—20.

NOT TO BE REGRETTED.

There are ten things for which no one has ever been sorry. These are:—

For doing good to all;
For speaking evil of none;
For hearing before judging:
For thinking before speaking;
For holding an angry tongue;
For being kind to the distressed;
For asking pardon for all wrongs;
For being patient toward everybody;
For stopping the ears to a tale-bearer;
For disbelieving most of the ill reports.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND.

MR. HAMMOND has been conducting meetings in the Saginaw Valley, Michigan, for the past two weeks. A minister in South Saginaw stated he was converted in one of Mr. Hammond's meetings at Detroit, Mich., twenty-three years ago. Three other minsters, now preaching in towns near here, have testified they were converted in the children's meetings at Detroit at the same time.

Already 465 children, young people, and adults have given in their names, professing conversion here and in East Saginaw. Rev. Mr. Bruske stated that those whom he had examined gave as good evidence of conversion as would be required to be received into his church, and no objection to taking them into the church could be justly raised. Truly God hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad. Mr. Hammond begins meetings in Big Rapids, Mich., to-morrow.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.

DEAR SIR,—This Union completes the first ten years of its work on March 31. As that day falls on a Sunday, it has been thought that it would be a fitting occasion for sermons to be preached from many pulpits, in all parts of our land, upon the importance to our young people of systematic daily Bible-reading and study. A large number of clergymen have already signified their willingness to preach sermons on the subject on the day named, and we feel sure that many to whom we have been unable to write personally will be glad to know of it through your columns. We earnestly desire that ministers of the Gospel of all evangelical denominations should join in this effort, and if any who desire to do so will kindly send their names, they can be included in a list which our committee propose to print and circulate.

The progress of the Scripture Union has certainly been of the most encouraging character. We began on April 1, 1879, with about 7000 members. We now have 3,500 branches in Great Britain alone, to which more than 300,000 cards for the New Year 1889 have been supplied, and the cards issued to Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Canada, the United States, &c., in the English language, number about 40,000 more. The list of portions is printed besides in about twenty-eight different languages, and the cards issued in them bring the total up to more than 400,000. The total number of the publications issued in connection with the Union in English last year, Our Own Magazine, Our Boys' Magazine, The "Monthly Letters," The Scripture Union Almanacs, &c., amounted to about three and a half millions, each of these containing a clear Gospel message, and illustrating and enforcing the truths taught in the daily Scripture portions.—Yours faithfully,

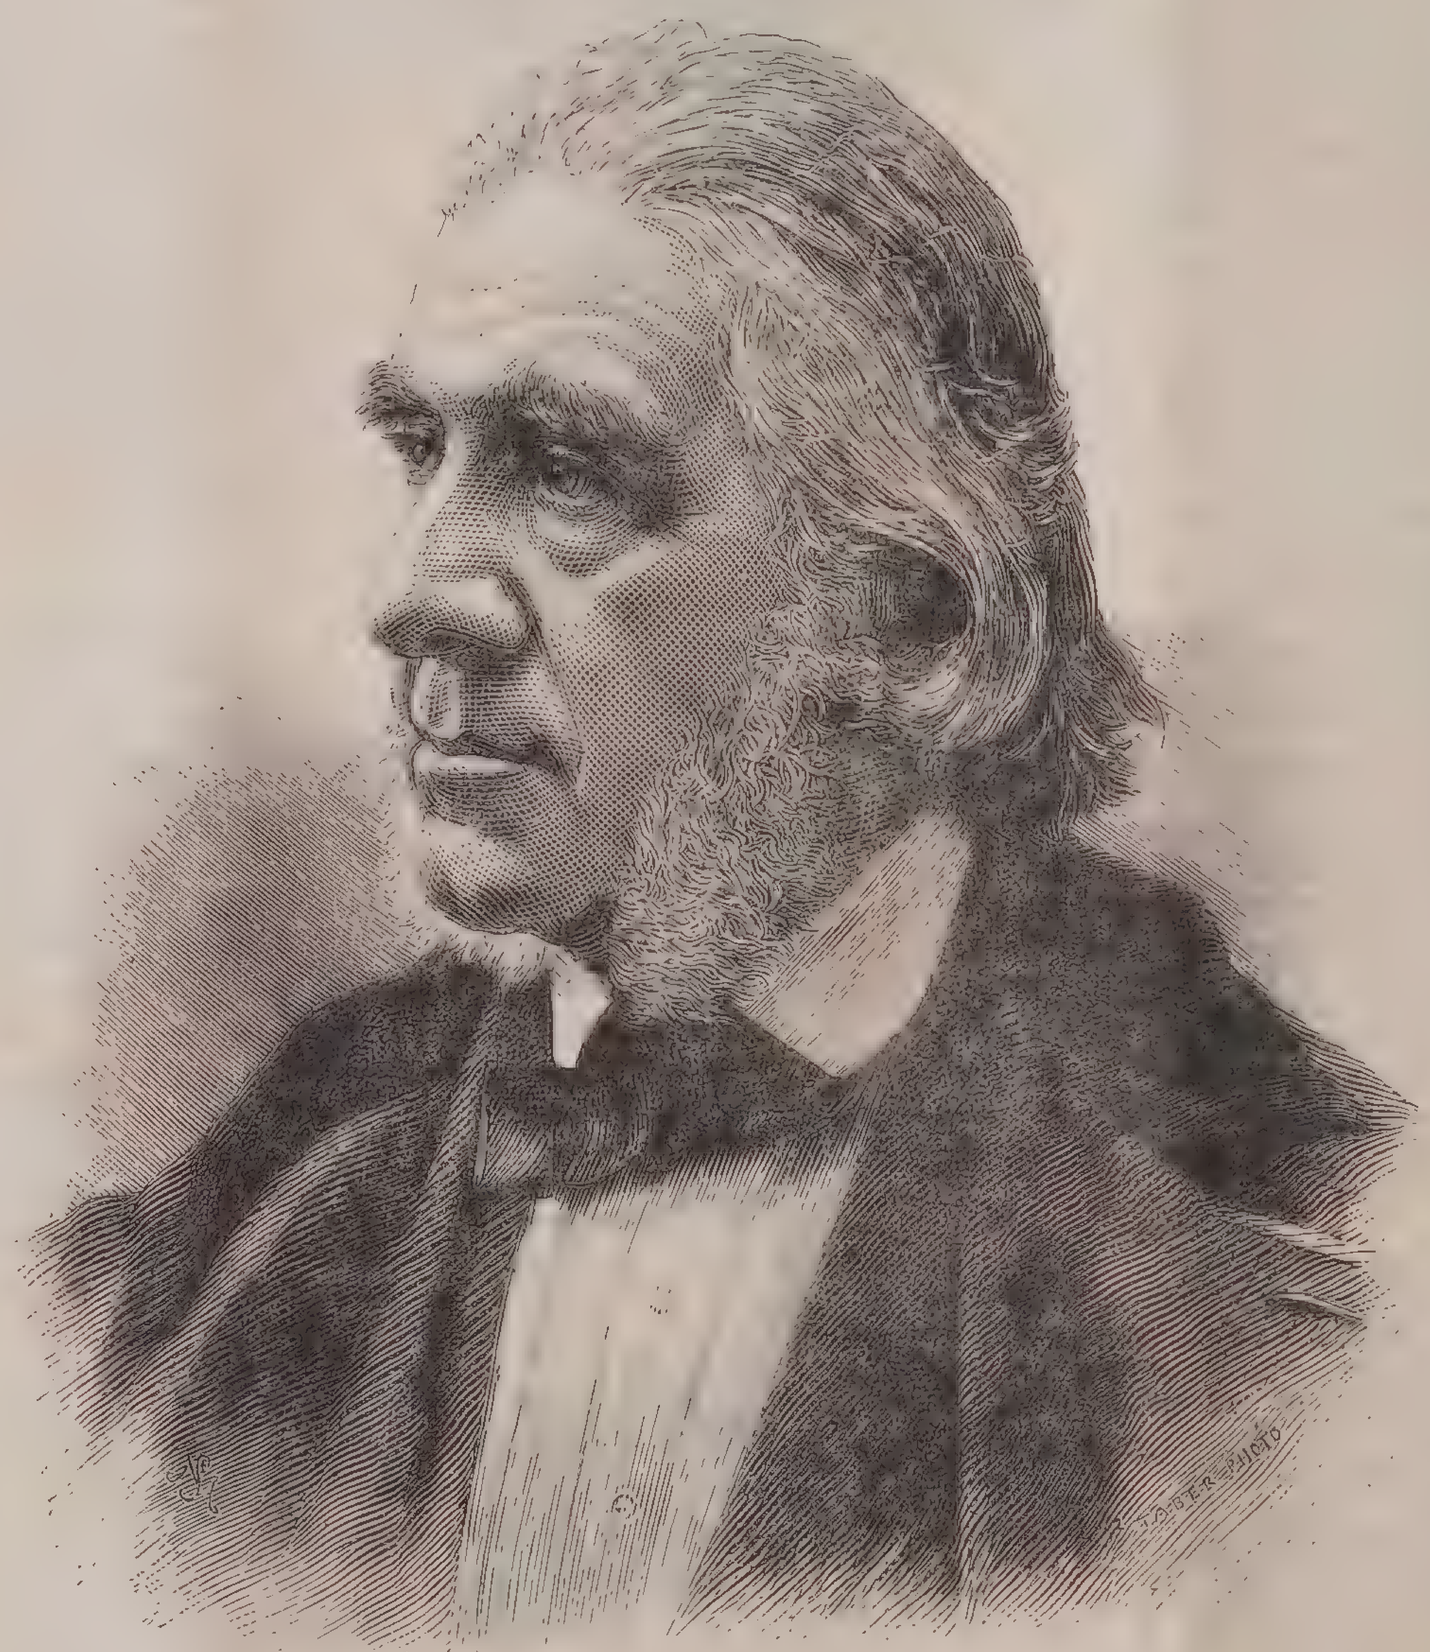
THE LATE ALESSANDRO GAVAZZI,

Italian Patriot and Orator.

BY REV. J. R. MACDOUGALL, FLORENCE



WITH the death of the Christian patriot, ALESSANDRO GAVAZZI, there has closed one of the most remarkable careers of the present century. His long life of eighty years was crowded with events of national importance, bearing on the intellectual, political, and, especially, the religious reformation which has been slowly but surely developing in Italian thought and Italian institutions.

Gavazzi was born in Bologna in 1809. His paternal grandfather, while yet a young man, became Vice-Chancellor of the Portuguese Legation, and was held in honour by the King and Court of that realm. His maternal grandfather was President of the Supreme Court of Appeal, and bore so high a character as to be called, "The Just Man." His father was Professor of Law in the famous University of the town, and trained many men who afterwards became distinguished at the Bar and in the Senate.

Brought up in a pious family, Gavazzi early showed the religious bent of his mind. At fifteen years of age, of his own choice, he became a monk of the Barnabite order, at that time one of the most learned and liberal of the Papal orders. He was not long in making his mark. Possessed of a splendid physique, a brilliant mind, and a rich and resonant voice, he was not only appointed at the age of twenty Professor of Rhetoric in the College of Naples, but, shortly after, was ordained priest, and started as one of those popular preaching friars whom the Church of Rome shows its wisdom in sending forth to hold the masses in thrall. Wherever he preached, the churches were filled to excess. The genius of the orator and the loving heart of the man were equally appreciated. Sympathy was awakened by his daring appeals for reform in the Church, and a return to the simplicity of the Gospel; as a consequence, persecution arose, which dogged his steps through life.

Italy was then broken up into many kingdoms, and tyranny held sway in them all, with consent of the Pope in Rome. When the friar's powerful voice spoke out on the depravities of the rulers and the sorrows of the ruled, the Jesuits were terror-stricken, and had the preacher removed, on suspicion of liberal sentiments, from Naples, that home of despotism under Ferdinand II. So Gavazzi stayed for a while in Leghorn as Professor of Belles Lettres, though the chair had little attraction for him compared with the pulpit.

It was here that doubts first sprang up in the mind of this earnest and honest believer in Popish doctrines. "Alessandro," said his venerable confessor, "you will one day become a great heretic." But, seeing the grief this caused Gavazzi, the old man added, "These doubts you must look upon as temptations of the devil, and spit in their face every time they return"; an injunction which our hero used to say he often obeyed; but the doubts came back faster and stronger.

Gavazzi's lot was next cast in Piedmont, where he spent eight years, preaching before the Court and the people in Turin, Genoa, Vercelli, Alessandria, and other towns, with extraordinary fervour and growing popularity. The watchful eye of the Jesuits was upon his movements, and the King's confessor was induced to influence the mind of Carlo Alberto against the intrepid Barnabite, either to destroy or thrust him forth from the kingdom. The latter expedient was resorted to, at the very time Gavazzi was preaching a course of sermons and raising money to found hospitals and asylums in Turin. It is understood that the Superior of his order yielded with great regret, and appointed him to Parma, where he remained four years—from 1841 to 1844, often preaching ten times a day. In fact, the boxes of manu script left at his death bear out the statement that in fifteen years he had preached four thousand sermons for all ranks and conditions of men.

A visit paid by Gavazzi to Bologna at this time brought him into fresh trouble. The "Immaculate Conception" was to be his theme; but the Austrians had invaded the Marches with 23,000 men, and the patriotic feelings of his fellow-citizens were on fire. Catching the flame, he poured out his eloquent soul on the fallen condition of Italy, and was suspended from preaching by the Pope. Happily, the Parmese Government highly esteemed his labours, and appointed him Chaplain-General of Prisons. As many as five thousand prisoners, of four different classes, were under his care. And it was while here, and meeting with great success among some of the vilest of men, that he printed his first brochure, insisting upon the reformatory aim in prison discipline, and how best to secure it.

The Barnabite order standing in need of his services, the recall of the Papal suspension was secured, and Gavazzi appeared at Perugia, where his popularity reached an unparalleled height. A year was spent here and at Spoleto, Assisi, Ancona, and Città della Pieve. Avoiding reference to present times and characters, he adopted the historical method, and, under the thin veil of evils in the past, both in Church and State, held up and denounced by this new Arnaldo da Brescia, Central Italy was roused from the torpor of ages. Again the Papal prohibition fell upon him, and in its severest form. He had to spend eighteen months in the Convent of San Severino, a hotbed of reactionaries. Anyone even professing friendship for the noble champion of "God and country" would have been proceeded against by the Holy Office. The torture was thus complete though no prison apparatus appeared.

The death of Pope Gregory XVI. led to his release, however. With the election of the new Pope, Pius IX., the hopes of the liberal party rose high. The enthusiasm of the people became unbounded. Deputations of Jews came from various parts of the Mediterranean, in the belief that in Pius IX. the long-looked-for Messiah had come. Gavazzi, as a friar, expected reform from a Pope, and believed Pius IX. to be sincere and honest. His admiration took the shape of a volume of poetry, written and printed by himself in splendid type, and with the Pontifical escutcheon gilded on the handsome binding. Through the Pope's brother, whose acquaintance he had made when preaching at Sinigaglia, he presented the work in person, and was graciously received by the Pope immediately on his arrival at the palace. Contrary to usage, the Pope refused to allow Gavazzi to kneel to kiss his slipper, giving him instead the fisherman's ring to kiss. And yet His Holiness was so urgent that the friar should not rouse the aspirations of the people that in half an hour's conversation Gavazzi felt his illusions passing away.

On the anniversary of the so-called reforming Pope's election, and when the Jesuit plot against his life had failed, through the energy of the Romans, Gavazzi preached by unanimous request the sermon of thanksgiving to God for the deliverance of the country. In doing this, he so pictured the abuses of the last Pontificate and so set forth the religion of love and Christian brotherhood in opposition to the Papal system of blood and cruelty, and so insisted on the necessity for teachers of the Gospel in place of those who had made Italy a nation of atheists, that, instead of receiving thanks from the Pope, he was again forbidden to preach.

The atrocities of the Austrians in Padua caused such a ferment in Rome in the early part of 1849, however, that Gavazzi was forced to break the silence imposed on him. The flower of Roman citizenship had marched to the Pantheon, and, seeing the great orator present, cries of "Speak, Gavazzi," arose from the vast audience. He spoke to such purpose that, though imprisoned in the Polveriera Convent, 5000 visiting cards were left at the gate, and the people demanded his release. This the Pope promised to grant that very night; but, instead, he had Gavazzi removed to the Convent of Genzano, where, after much search, he was discovered by the students of the University and brought to town.

Then began the great series of oratorical triumphs on the part of Gavazzi. The Pope was obliged to grant a constitution. France and Austria were in revolution, Northern Italy had risen against the foe, and banished them from Venice, Mantua, Verona, and Milan. The unarmed citizens of Milan had fought for five days against 14,000 Austrian troops, and expelled them. A cry of distress and sympathy arose. The Romans longed to share in the struggle. And the time and the man to guide them had come. As if inspired, Gavazzi preached in the Square of the Capitol, in honour of the dead who had fallen in the five glorious days at Milan, and proclaimed that the time for action had come. For two months he preached daily in the Colosseum to 60,000 people, and enrolled volunteers. Preacher and hearers vowed to die for their country. The Cross was chosen for the standard by the new Peter the Hermit. The Pope gave his consent, promised help, and appointed Gavazzi Chaplain-General, blessing him and his patriotic countrymen.

Then began the march northwards. Gavazzi refused horses and carriages, and went on foot alongside of the men, cheering them amid difficulties, suppressing by a word any mutinous feeling, and preaching in Ancona, Bologna, Venice, alongside of Manin, where the people acclaimed him as "Bishop Savonarola," and raising the sinews of war, which the Pope failed to supply. Wonderful are the stories told of this triumphant march through the Roman States and Tuscany. Troops of damsels strewed flowers in the way and sang national songs, as the Hebrew maidens did before King David. The people everywhere gave of their wealth most enthusiastically for the prosperity of the war.

Alas, for the Roman legion! The Austrians had made a stand at Treviso and Cornuta, and were more than a match for undisciplined troops. But Gavazzi was ever among the foremost, despising danger and defying death. At Treviso, against the remonstrances of the troops, he bore away a wounded man, amidst a storm of bullets, and never ceased his exertions during the retreat, till every wounded man was safe in the ambulance waggon. The excitement of the Romans was so great against the treachery of the Pope that a revolution was imminent. His Holiness fled, under the guise of a lackey, and in the darkness of night, to Gaeta, and so enabled the people to shake off the Papal tyranny, and proclaim the Republic in the memorable year of 1848.

Again Gavazzi came to the front. The gates of the Ghetto were broken down, and the Jews restored to freedom. The prisons of the Inquisition were opened, and many a political prisoner released. Great things were planned in those days of liberty by the Triumvirs. But France sent her legions against the city. A splendid defence was made by Garibaldi. Gavazzi and Ugo Bassi were inspectors of hospitals, and attended to the wounded. Many of the patriots who fell, Mameli, Dandolo, Panizza, and others, were comforted in their last hours by Gavazzi. But every effort was vain. The French entered Rome, and Gavazzi owed his safety to the kindness of the American Consul. But for his passport, Gavazzi would have shared the fate of Ugo Bassi.

Reaching London, Gavazzi gave lessons in Italian, and had great difficulty in keeping the wolf from the door. After months of semi-starvation, two of his orations to his fellow-countrymen were, happily, translated in The Daily News by Father Prout, and Gavazzi became famous. Then he went through Great Britain and Ireland, Canada and the United States, during three or four years, crowding the largest halls and enlisting universal sympathy by his monk's dress, his platform action, his eloquent denunciation of Pio Nono and Romish oppression, and his earnest warnings about the Puseyite viper which was being fondled in the generous bosom of England. No such feat is on record, of a stranger, speaking a foreign tongue, entrancing the English-speaking race for years. To his honour be it said, all the proceeds of his labours were given to his brother exiles and to the Protestant schools of Dr. Desanctis in Turin.

In 1858, and as a result of close study of the Bible and contact with earnest Christians, the greatest event in Gavazzi's life took place—his conversion to God, and the new departure of consecration to evangelical work. Dr. Desanctis was most helpful at this juncture, when, in the house of a friend near Sheffield, Gavazzi was on his knees under conviction of sin, crying out, "What must I do to be saved?" Thereafter, "the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible" was his motto. He had come out of Popery, bringing not a rag of the old system with him, so that hundreds of Protestants even were edified by his sermons on "Salvation by faith alone, but not that faith which is alone."

Though, as a Christian patriot, he was again with Garibaldi in 1860 in the Sicilian campaign, which ended in the handing over of the kingdom of the Two Sicilies, with eight millions of people, to the sway of King Victor Emmanuel; and again in 1866 in the Tyrol and at Mentana in 1867, it was to care for the wounded, and to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and to circulate Bibles and tracts. When not so engaged, he was busy from 1858 to 1870 in preaching and holding conferences in all the large towns of his native land. He did so with such happy effect, that in Italy to-day you can scarcely meet with an individual in any rank of life who has not heard Gavazzi at some period or another, and been set free from some doctrine of Popery, or led to the reading of the Bible, or savingly brought to Jesus Christ.

From the time of his conversion no subject so exercised Gavazzi's mind, as the unity of the Evangelical Church in Italy. His first attempt was to found a National Catholic Church in Florence in 1859. Then with Desanctis he drew up a Project of Organisation of the Italian Evangelical Churches. Later on he greatly longed for the union of the various denominations working in Italy, and still later for the union of the Waldensian and Free Italian Churches. None of these plans prospered, except the second, and that only after the lapse of years; for it was not till 1870 that the Free Italian Church took its rise in Milan. It was under its auspices that Gavazzi preached every winter in Rome, and travelled in deputation work abroad during the summer months.

The notable feature of Gavazzi's character was simplicity. He was truly without guile. Neither policy nor cunning entered into his plans. He had no element of the ecclesiastic in his nature. As simple as a child, he believed in those around him, and therefore needed, like his friend Garibaldi, to be well surrounded. He was equally simple in his faith. The listening crowds who heard him speak of the Saviour as il mio Gesù (my Jesus) heard his whole confession. In his mode of living none could be more simple, whether in the humble room in the Roman College or in his plainly furnished cottage above Pistoia. In his love of country we find the noble and unselfish principle that saved him in his earlier career. Many other patriots have feathered their nests well, and not all the Garibaldians were worthy of their leader; but Gavazzi died as he had lived, a poor man, leaving a few francs, books, and manuscripts, and two gold medals awarded him in America.

The same simplicity was incarnated in his efforts to Christianise Italy. His only aim was the spread of Christ's kingdom—not in a sectarian, but a spiritual form. It was, therefore, a great pleasure to work with him in the same cause, and enjoy unbroken harmony, and sympathy, and affection in pressing forward the cause of the Redeemer.

The versatility of Gavazzi's genius was so great as to impress men with a sense of his prodigious industry and acquirements. Though he carried the monkish habit of shyness to excess among strangers, he readily poured out his abundant stores of knowledge among friends, though ever modest and reticent in everything regarding himself or his achievements. He was a profound theologian, especially on all controversial subjects. Well versed in botany and all the natural sciences, he was also an adept in medical lore, thoroughly acquainted with music, and a keen observer of men and manners and scenery during his extensive travels. Had he been a disciple of Soyer, he would readily have made a fortune.

His voice was a marvellous instrument for the expression of every feeling of the human heart. Quiet and pleasant in ordinary conversation, it became firm, sustained and persuasive in logical demonstration; rising to tones of thunder, as he denounced the godlessness and iniquity of men, and especially the gross errors and absurdities of the Papal system; again melting into accents of most touching pathos, as he carried the dying saint across the Jordan, into the paradise of God.

The manner of the speaker was in full sympathy with the mind and speech. No listener could doubt for a moment that the orator was, like the poet, born, not made. The action was ever suited to the word. Unconsciously, the whole body of Gavazzi, in its moving features, speaking eye, and expressive gestures, rendered immensely more effective the powerful reasoning and the sympathetic voice. Many an admirer was absorbed in the beautiful fitness of the gesticulation, from the simple movement of the finger to the natural and graceful action of the whole manly frame.

Gavazzi in his influence on Italy was a reformer before the reformation. A man remarkably fitted for his time, he had not the business faculty, nor the constructive power, among his many other gifts. He was the nearest approach to a reformer, but still not a reformer. When the seed-sowing time has passed, for which Gavazzi so successfully broke up the ground, others will be raised up by God to build the walls of Italy's Zion.

In accord with his earnest wish, Gavazzi died in harness. Last June he had a persistent bronchitic cough, which was not improved by his visit to the Pan-Presbyterian Council in London in July; so that in October his chest was weakened, and the doctors recommended caution. But on the morning of his death he was well and hearty. After lunch, he had dressed to go to the Pantheon to see the flowers on the grave of King Victor Emmanuel. A fit of coughing came on, and a vein was ruptured; in a minute, falling into the arms of his friend Conti, and moving his lips in prayer, he was taken home to his rest and his reward. Crowds of people of all ranks came to see the body. All the newspapers, not excepting the clerical, have paid noble tributes to the greatness and goodness of the deceased Christian patriot. In all the large towns of Italy commemoration services are being held. The funeral was attended by Christian men of all the Churches, by Garibaldians, and by the general public. According to his own desire, frequently expressed, on hygienic grounds, the body was cremated; the ashes will be placed in a tombstone of the Roman Evangelical Cemetery, with the simple record, at his own request, "A Christian Patriot."

As the years roll on, especially when his biography and autobiography appear, Gavazzi will stand out more and more as a great personality, and one of Italy's noblest sons. May many of her young men of to-day be baptized into the spirit of this mighty man whose presence has passed away, but whose name and fame will long abide.

MR. GEORGE MULLER has been stirring up the churches of Calcutta. He took active part in the meetings there during the week of prayer, which was a time of much blessing.

AT WORK IN CHINA.

THE following are extracts from the diary of Miss Mary E. Scott, who is working at Ta-ning in connection with the China Inland Mission:—

We are much interested in a poor woman in the city who appears to be slowly dying. She is a very heavy opium smoker, and it has wrought such havoc that she is almost reduced to a skeleton. Her husband came a few days ago to ask us if we would give her some medicines for one of her ailments. We went to see her, and I think I shall never forget the sight—she was such a miserable-looking object: for opium smokers soon lose that self-respect which leads people to care for being clean and tidy; and they will sell or pawn anything to obtain the awful drug. Of course we did what we could, though feeling that, humanly speaking, she was beyond our aid. This has proved to be the case; for her husband came again in a day or two to see if we would try some other remedy. We were sorrowfully obliged to tell him that, considering the quantity of opium she smoked daily, we feared any English medicine would be useless; but we would be pleased for good Elder Chang, who is himself a native doctor, to try his skill. The husband, who is an intelligent man, began to question us as to where the opium came from; and once more we had to blush for England's shame...

Yesterday we had plenty of people here, both old and new friends. One man brought a little child five years old, whose face and one arm and hand were covered with dreadful sores, which had been left by small-pox a few months before. It took more than an hour to cleanse and dress the child's wounds; but I cannot remember ever seeing a more patient little sufferer. In the afternoon, when the sun went off the courtyard, we had a splendid gathering of men and women to listen to the Gospel; there were about sixty men, eight or ten women, and many children. Excepting these little rogues, whom it certainly required some exertion to keep quiet, one could nowhere wish to see a better behaved audience. The meeting lasted for about two hours; as, when some left, others kept coming in.

During the course of it I took our woman and went to visit the poor opium smoker again. Mrs. Yang talked very faithfully and lovingly to her, and to two or three other women there; but the sick woman's faculties seemed so numbed by the opium that she is constantly taking, that we feel only God's power can save her. She and another woman had a turn at their pipes while we were there: a more saddening and heart-sickening sight one cannot imagine. Opium is a frightful form of the great enemy's power; they are no imaginary chains with which these victims are bound, but real iron fetters, as hard and painful to break as the cutting-off of a hand, or the plucking-out of an eye...

This morning the child who had been suffering from the effects of small-pox was again brought: and it was very gratifying to notice a slight improvement in the condition of the wounds—a definite answer to prayer; for we both felt extremely sorry for the girl. We told the father what a great pity it was that she had not been brought to us sooner; for her eyes were in a fearful state in consequence of neglect and want of proper treatment. Yang-kiao-in then told us that some months ago he had advised the man to bring his child to us; but bad men had warned him not to come for fear we should deceive him! It appears now, that through a relative who knew us, the man was induced to bring his child; and he seems both pleased and gratified with the attention we are bestowing upon the little invalid. I like the man very much, for he is so very kind and gentle to his girlie, who seems very fond of him.

At breakfast time Miss Miles [the lady missionary working with Miss Scott] proposed that I should ride out to a village about 10 li from here, that we visited once before, and see how our sick friends there were getting on. Accordingly I started off about 3 p.m. with our "boy" Wen-kong, leaving Yang to help Mr. Lo with our courtyard meeting. When I returned Miss Miles had a most interesting account to tell me of the cure of a man badly stung by a scorpion, who had come for help.

I found all the sick folk in the village better. One man, who had been very weak, and unable to work, I believe, also rheumatic for some months, we found was off in the fields! We had given him quinine, and some splendid liniment which Miss Miles's hospital sister sent out. The chief invalid, a man with a very bad ulcerated leg, was so far recovered as to be able to leave his k'ang and sit on his mat in the courtyard. He declared he was much better, could eat, &c., and he appeared most bright and thankful. After all this encouraging news came something very sad, namely, that a young girl, with diseased feet, had passed away. On the occasion of our previous visit to the village we, just at the last moment, had been asked to go and see her: as we were obliged to hasten off to reach the city before the gates closed, we could do very little for her. We have often since prayed for her, and felt truly sorry that we had not been able to do more for her; so that it was some little consolation to have our good Yang and his wife tell us that hitherto both foreigners and natives had found the disease incurable. The deformed little feet seem riddled with ulcers, and I suppose death arises from mortification. Nen-kong and I had a nice time of singing and talking, with a few words of prayer, before we left our friend's courtyard, for several women and children and a few men had assembled and seated themselves on the ground.

Taking a friendly farewell of these good people we returned home to find our own courtyard meeting just breaking up. A goodly number had been there again, and Mr. Lo seems much encouraged. We do praise God for the many answers that He has given to our prayers: truly they that wait on Him shall not be ashamed.

HACKNEY AND CLAPTON Y.W.C.A.

AN influential and interesting meeting was held at Seymour House on Monday, Feb. 4, with the Bishop of Bedford in the chair. The occasion was the formal opening of additional premises, a large adjoining house having been taken, and communication made between that and the existing building. This is a recently formed, but most flourishing, branch of the Y.W.C.A. So much is Seymour House felt to be a centre of useful, recreative, and, above all, spiritual influence in the surrounding parishes, that all denominations bid it God-speed, and recognise the catholic character of its work.

After a brief opening address by the Bishop of Bedford, the various speakers who followed spoke upon different aspects of the work. Mr. Gardiner specially referred to the noble influence of a true and good woman, and Mr. Habershon to the value of individual effort. The institution is in much need of interesting, elevating books for the library, and any pictures to brighten the walls of the new premises would, we understand, be very acceptable.

GOVAN, N.B.—The Model Lodging House Mission was begun in November, 1887, and is doing a great and blessed work among the lodgers, about two hundred in number. Many have taken the pledge against drink, and a few have professed conversion. Many of the men have no steady employment, and are often at their wits' end how to get the price of their bed and a bite of food. The workers are doing what they can to help them along, and keep them in the paths of honesty. Gospel tracts, books, and left-off clothing will be welcome. The president of the Mission is Mr. William S. Ross, 118, Maclellan-street, Plantation, Glasgow.

Lost—A Heathen Horse Shoe.

IN the heart of Africa is a territory, enclosed by the great northward bend of the Congo which describes a horse shoe. There dwell ten millions of people sunk in heathen degradation, living and dying to-day without Christ, and therefore without hope. This huge heathen horse shoe is lost, and the clear duty of Christians is to go, or send forth searchers, with the lamp of the Gospel, to dispel the darkness and find the Lord's treasure.

This, in a word, was the earnest message with which Mr. GRAHAM WILMOT BROOKE, of the Soudan, prefaced his missionary address at the Conference recently held in the Young Men's Christian Institute, Glasgow. Sympathy is very strong in Glasgow with missionary endeavours. The platform and hall were filled with representative ministers and laity of every denomination, although the two hours of Conference were wedged into the busiest period of busy men's lives. Young women, members and associates of the Y.W.C.A., slipped in for half an hour of their dinner time, and left with evident reluctance. A few of their number are already in the mission field, and it is not improbable that, as an immediate result of Mr. Brooke's searching appeal, their ranks will be recruited.

The people mainly spoken of at the Conference were the Balolo, a nation of conquerers, and probably the most powerful amongst the many dwellers in Equatorial Africa. In physique they are generally superior to Europeans; their physiognomy is in marked contrast to the Negro type. With all these favourable points, they are yet sunk in gross darkness; are childishly superstitious; believe in charms and witch-doctors; and have not the faintest conception of future reward or punishment. Strange as it may seem, they are not idolaters; no idols, to the best of the missionaries' belief, are to be found in the upper reaches of the Congo. In their superior intelligence, the Balolo, with wistful, groping spirits, reach through to the idea of one Supreme Being. They have traditions of the Creation, while a common expression among them is "God is the Maker of all." In many ways they are advanced; in as many other ways uncivilised and barbaric. Intellect, friendliness, and industry are redeeming qualities in any people, and these are distinguishing features in the Balolo character. Happily they are beginning to emerge from barbarism, and may be said to have set foot on the first rungs of the ladder of civilisation. The Balolos are not so much addicted to cannibalism as the ferocious Mobange tribes, but they practise crucifixion, gross cruelties, and make a funeral an excuse for sacrificing life.

The natives are filled with amazement that white man after white man comes to help them, only to die and gain no money, while "white man" who deals in rum at the coast waxes rich and has much prosperity! A deep and lasting impression was made on these poor people when the pitiless sun scorched up the grain, and, unless rain came, famine was imminent. The "witch-doctor's" incantations proved ineffectual, and, at last, in despair, the chief came to the missionaries and said, "White man, ask your God to send us rain." This was a time of terrible anxiety for the missionaries. They might lose the little influence they had if rain came not; they might gain many souls if it did fall. They prayed over the matter, and resolved to call a general meeting of the natives and chief, that prayer might be offered up. Two hours after that pathetic prayer-meeting, rain fell; the effect was magical. Many simply believed in God from then; a witch-doctor became a Christian and a powerful influence for good. The Church of Christ, as a result of that particular mission, is to-day 250 strong, and from that station alone two of the best preachers—natives—have been sent into the interior to preach Christ. People say we cannot expect the heathen to have the same spiritual understanding as we. Mr. Brooke declared that he knew of no conference so near to Christ as one of converted natives. They are earnest and abiding in the warmth of their love to God.

Mr. Brooke and Mr. Todd, with Mr. John McKittrick, first leader of this mission to the great horse-shoe territory, hope to leave in March for the Lakes District. They desire to establish two new interior stations during the summer. A native boy of thirteen, a small representative of ten millions, delighted everyone by singing in a soft, clear voice, "Jesus loves me": the Balolo tongue seems to be low and liquid in sound. A curious piece of cloth, manufactured and designed by the natives, was exhibited to the audience, also a fur cap worn by the witch-doctor, a wild-looking head-dress used by the peasantry, and a kind of dirk with carved sheath. Will Christians remember that the supply of missionaries is nothing compared with the urgent demand? Who will say: "Here am I, send me"?

HOXTON HALL ANNIVERSARY.

THE eleventh anniversary of the foundation of the Gospel Temperance Movement was celebrated in Hoxton Hall on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday last.

On Saturday afternoon, Mr. William I. Palmer, J.P., presided over a largely attended conference in Hoxton Hall. Mr. Wyndham A. Bewes read a paper dealing with the question of "Co-operation in Temperance Effort." A pleasant hour and a half was spent in an interchange of thoughts and opinions as to details of the work. A message of loving sympathy proposed by Rev. Thomas Evans, seconded by Mr. John Hilton, and supported by Mr. J. W. Leng was sent through the family to Mr. William Noble. Throughout the meetings the speakers expressed their regret and sorrow at Mr. Noble's enforced absence through illness.

The large hall was crowded in the evening, and Mr. Palmer, together with the speakers, was supported by an influential body of temperance workers. Two stirring addresses were delivered by Rev. Pelham Stokes and Rev. Thomas Evans. The former spoke on "Gospel Temperance," and the latter on "Enthusiasm." Mr. Evans's address was intensely practical, vigorous, and sympathetic. The meeting was certainly one of the warmest that has been held in Hoxton Hall.

The Sunday afternoon service in Shoreditch Town Hall was held in strict celebration of the anniversary, as the date fell on the Sabbath. Mr. Palmer, who presided, alluded to a strange coincidence. The day on which Mr. Noble held the first meeting in connection with Hoxton Hall was a Sunday; a snowstorm came over the city in the afternoon, and the key of the hall not appearing, the first service was held in the open air. Rev. Septimus Buss, vicar of Shoreditch, gave an address on "The Blue Ribbon," in which he expressed the belief that its day of usefulness had not gone by, as many would have us believe. Notwithstanding the severe snowstorm, the evening service in Hoxton Hall was well attended. Addresses were given by Messrs. Hawley, Braymin, and Goulding.

WESTERN AUSTRALIA.—Mr. Shearer, of Perth, Western Australia, wishes to thank the many friends who send him books, tracts, copies of THE CHRISTIAN, &c. He also thanks the kind friends who continue to send copies of THE CHRISTIAN regularly. All this good seed he distributes in the colony, and hopes the Lord of the harvest will bless it greatly. He desires prayer for wisdom and guidance in his work, and that a work of revival may break out among all the churches of the Colony.

THE LATE REV. H. FRIEDLANDER.

THE recent decease of this well-known Christian Hebrew removes from missionary life one of whom it may truly be said that his heart's desire and prayer to God was that all Israel might be saved. For fourteen years Mr. Friedländer laboured with great devotion among his people in Palestine, in the hope that he might win some to Christ; and, looking back upon his entire career, we are glad to recognise its blessed purpose and cheering fruitfulness as a testimony for the Gospel.

Born in Prussia in 1832, Hermann Friedländer was brought up after the fashion of Jewish youth in the so-called "orthodox" community. He early imbibed an ardent love for his kindred, and for the land of his fathers. Enjoying a good secular education, he seemed pretty sure of success in life. At the age of thirty, however, he underwent a change, which was in every sense a new beginning to him; he became a Christian, and determined upon throwing his heart and soul into inviting Israel, after the example of Philip of old, to see in Jesus of Nazareth "Him of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write."

In 1863, having taken orders in the Church of England, he joined the missionary staff of the London Society for the Promotion of Christianity among the Jews, and spent some twenty-three years in this service. Of these about three were passed among African Jews in Tunis, and two or three in England. As already intimated, he also spent fourteen years in Jerusalem itself, first among the city residents, and afterwards among the thousands of Jews who sought refuge in the land from Russian persecution. During this period, Mr. Friedländer not only laboured in connection with the Church of England on Mount Zion; but, looking around him with compassion upon the Hebrew population, he ever held himself at liberty to assist such as were desirous of experiencing the peace of God. And his efforts and organisation did not fall short of very successful endeavours to feed the hungry and clothe the naked, as is abundantly clear from the pages of Tidings from Zion, a periodical which he conducted in co-operation with Rev. A. H. Kelk.

Continued heavy strain told at last upon Mr. Friedländer's health, and in 1886 his connection with the London Society ceased. Family affairs called for a visit to his native town of Schneidemuhl, where he remained for some months. Thence he proceeded to America, in full hope of returning to spend and be spent for the Lord among His ancient people in Palestine. But the Master adjudged the labourer's task to be over, and a fever, to which Mr. Friedländer had become subject by living in Palestine, laid him low at New York. On November 12, while in communion with God by the bedside, he "fell asleep."

It need hardly be said that Mr. Friedländer's death is deeply mourned in Palestine. Moreover, he had friends everywhere who lament his loss. It is proposed to show the high appreciation in which he was held, by providing in some measure for the sorrowing widow and three children. Mr. W. Greene, C.E., "Oriolet," Loughton, Essex, has this good work in hand, in co-operation with several well-known friends of Israel, and he will be glad to send a circular to applicants. It is hoped that substantial compassion for the fatherless and the widow will be cordially and promptly shown.

"HARVEST SHEAVES" is the title of a graphically-written and well-illustrated report of the last year's rescue work of the Salvation Army, under Mrs. Bramwell Booth's direction. It is a truly noble work, and seems to be carried on with a discretion that has been rewarded with much success. Copies of the little book may be had from the office of the Army, 101, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C., price 2d.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.

THE work in Spain with which the name of Mr. L. B. Armstrong is so honourably connected is well described in the report of the Association for the Diffusion of the Gospel in Spain, recently issued. In spite of persecution, a goodly number of converts cheer the workers, and there are many indications that they are but the firstfruits of a harvest yet to be gathered. Not only by word, but by deed also, do some of these poor people commend the truth to their fellow-countrymen.

Mr. Armstrong tells of a member of the Valladolid church, who gains his living by selling provisions, but who regards it as his supreme business to make known the Gospel in its purity. The priests have denounced him from the altar, excommunicated him, told the people not to buy from him, and threatened to have him beaten or assassinated; but, being in real earnest, the man holds on his way, saying, "Fear not them which kill the body." The more the priests curse, the more the people buy of this man, who has prepared four villages for the Gospel. Evangelists, male and female, are sadly wanted to take the field. Further particulars as to this promising work may be had from Mr. J. B. Hunter (J. Rew & Co.), Brown's-buildings, Liverpool.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

THE annual devotional meeting of the friends of this effort, convened by Mr. E. W. Thomas, took place on Tuesday week in Exeter Hall, and was very well attended. It has been increasingly desired that this should not be merely a meeting of those specially connected with one association, but that all engaged in the same kind of work should feel in sympathetic touch with each other, and meet unitedly for praise and prayer. Mr. J. J. Drysdale said they had good reason for thankfulness for all that has been done. It is always difficult to tabulate results; but it could with truth be said that a very large percentage of the cases that came under their care turned out well. He spoke with great heartiness of the good which was known to have resulted from the Open All Night Refuge. Mr. Barnes gave a suggestive address, founded on the Apostolic injunction, "Be ye stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

An interesting feature in the meeting was the presentation to Mr. Thomas of a handsome easy chair, together with a writing table, the cost of which had been met by upwards of a hundred of the young women who had formerly been in the Homes, but who were now living in various parts of the country. The good secretary also had given him a large packet of letters which those once under his care had written at the same time that they had sent their little donations; and, as he rose with the letters in his hand, he did not find it the easiest thing in the world to speak. He very cordially acknowledged the kind gift, and proceeded to speak on behalf both of the friendless and the fallen. He believed that in proportion as Christians are united in heart before the throne of grace would they see still greater achievements in the future.

FRENCH IN LONDON.—The annual social gathering of M. Barbier's "Evangelical French Mission" was recently held. This work was founded by Mr. and Mrs. George Pearse, and has been continued more than twenty years with much success by Monsieur le Pasteur G. Barbier. The results of the labour bestowed on the Mission might have been seen in the bright faces of the children who thronged the "Chapelle Evangélique." After a substantial tea the children received prizes of books and clothing. The strictest economy is exercised, but help is urgently needed in more than one department of the work. M. Barbier's address is 10, Charlotte-street, Great Portland street, W.

MISS DE BROEN'S MISSION.

M. ROSSEEUW ST. HILAIRE, of l'Institut de France, whose death we recorded last week, recently wrote as follows concerning the work of Miss de Broen's Mission, Belleville, Paris:—

"I am glad to join my testimony to that of all those who have already recommended Miss de Broen's work, and, as a Frenchman, to pay my debt of gratitude to the devoted Christian lady, who, immediately after our disasters—twice laid waste by war and by the Commune—dared to undertake this work which God has blessed. May the Lord preserve to this dear sister the strength she requires to carry on this laborious work, and may the Christians of France, seeing all that our English brethren have done, and daily do, to spread the Gospel throughout our land, be moved to jealousy to contribute, in their turn, to the expense of an enterprise of which all the cost belongs to England, and all the fruit is ours."

FARNINGHAM BOYS' HOMES.

LAST week a conversazione was given by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress in the interest of the Homes for Little Boys, Farningham and Swanley, at the Mansion House. A very numerous and brilliant company assembled in response to the Lord Mayor's invitation. In the saloon and other parts of the Mansion House there were to be seen improvised workshops, at which a number of boys from the Homes were engaged in the various trades and industrial occupations in which they are being instructed in the Homes. The skilful manner in which they handled their tools afforded great interest to the visitors. In other parts of the building there were a number of stalls stocked with specimens of the work done at the Homes. Accommodation is now provided for 500 boys, and there are 486 in the Homes at the present times. In the Homes the boys are divided into families of 30 each, with a Christian man and his wife as heads of the family. They are fed, clothed, educated, and taught trades, while particular care is paid to their religious training.

After some time spent in witnessing the boys working at their trades, the visitors adjourned to the Egyptian Hall, where a meeting was held, and several short speeches advocating the claims of the Homes delivered. The Lord Mayor, in a short speech, said he was glad to offer every facility his position enabled him to any institution that existed for the good of the people. The Little Boys' Homes was one of the best institutions of its kind in the world. The boys were admitted because they were either orphans or homeless. Mr. B. Clarke (secretary of the Homes) made a statement as to the work in connection with the Homes, and said they certainly had a claim upon the great City companies, and after this meeting he trusted those claims would be fully recognised. Brief addresses were also given by Rev. H. W. Webb Peploe, and Rev. A. Rowland.

THE BISHOP OF LIVERPOOL ON PREACHING.—In the course of a sermon from the text, "Preach the Word," at the opening of a mission hall in Liverpool the other day, Dr. Ryle said there is no occupation more important than that of the minister of Christ, and no one whose labours produce more lasting results. Preaching consists in telling in simple language the things of the Gospel, and so long as the world stands no instrument can be compared to it for doing good. Christ was sent into the world as a preacher; Christ commissioned his Apostles as preachers; preaching established Christianity; preaching brought the light of the Reformation into Germany and England; and preaching accomplished the great revival in England in the last century. What is wanted now is not more ceremonies and forms, but more simple preaching of the Gospel. A revival among ministers is needed.

Evangelistic Notes.

Messrs. Crossley and Hunter, the evangelists, are holding successful meetings in Brandon, Manitoba.

Major J. H. Cole is labouring in Chicago. The blessing of the Lord attends his labours everywhere he goes.

Mr. George Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society, has conducted a month's mission to young and old, at St. Giles' Christian Mission, Little Wild-street. Many anxious ones have been spoken to.

Rev. W. E. Shaw has held a week's mission in Carmarthen-road Congregational Church, Swansea. Many were led to decision for Christ, and so much blessing was received that the mission was continued another week.

Mr. G. B. Studd, who has been assisting Mr. Moody in his work on the Pacific coast, is now following up the work by tarrying in the towns visited after Mr. Moody has left. Mr. John H. Burke, from Chicago, a singer of unusual power is associated with Mr. Studd.

Mr. Leonard Weaver has held a twelve days' mission in connection with the Leicester Evangelistic Mission. The Lord helped his servant to deliver the word faithfully. Believers were greatly quickened, some professed conversion, and many were deeply convicted.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken has held special missions at St. Silas Church, Liverpool, and St. John's, Waterloo, which have been attended with much blessing. On Sunday next a ten days' general mission is to be commenced at Newcastle-on-Tyne. Mr. Aitken will conduct the services at the Parish Church, Jesmond. Prayer is requested for much blessing upon this work.

Christchurch, Hants.—An interesting mission has closed in this town. The results are very encouraging. The mission was arranged for fourteen days, in the Town Hall, conducted by Messrs. W. Spencer Walton and John M. McAuliffe. The blessing given and the interest awakened were such that the mission was continued by Mr. McAuliffe for another week. The meetings were closed on Sunday, February 3, by two earnest and faithful addresses by Lord Polwarth.

Mr. E. P. Telford, who is now at Bournemouth, has just completed a six weeks' mission at Byrom Hall, Liverpool, where about a hundred and twenty souls professed faith in Christ. He preached several times in the shipyards and railway shops during the dinner hour, and on Sunday afternoons at Mr. Radcliffe's Strangers' Rest. Mr. Telford has consented to hold a week's mission, beginning next Lord's Day, at Westbourne Baptist Chapel, Bournemouth. The month of July will be spent at Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, where he has preached during a month in each year for thirteen consecutive years. He then purposes to leave with Mrs. Telford for a tour round the world, crossing the Atlantic, passing through the States from Boston to San Francisco, then to Australia, India, and the Cape, holding missions in all those countries. He is an evangelist whom God has much used in convincing men of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment; and so basing their subsequent peace on a sure foundation.

Rev. W. Haslam's engagements are as follow:—St. Silas, Heaton, Newcastle-on-Tyne, February 16 to 26; Consett Parish Church, March 3.

Major and Mrs. Evered Poole.—Special evangelistic mission, Holy Trinity Schoolrooms, Lutheran-place, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W. February 19 to 22; each evening at 8 p.m.

THE CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY has opened its twenty-seventh lodging-house for boys in New York. Eighty-five thousand boys have been rescued from the streets, from crime and vice, and sent to Homes by this Society.

THERE IS A GROWING SENTIMENT among the Jews in favour of transferring the religious observance of their Sabbath to the Christian Sunday. The present system works inconveniences, and sometimes positive hardship, and occasions a laxity of observance which causes a good deal of concern.

Apostolic Evangelism.

WE append some extracts from letters sent to us by Mr. E. F. Baldwin, who is labouring in Morocco. The letters are dated in November last; but the remarkable events they record will not be stale to the sympathetic reader. After telling of encouragement found in nightly dealing with inquirers after the way of life, and in baptizing the converts, Mr. Baldwin describes how some of these converts were arrested and haled before the governor. He then proceeds:—

A work of grace begun. Soon I was meeting from twelve to twenty inquirers and young converts every night. This has continued now nearly three weeks. We have had baptisms in different places. Conversions occur almost daily. The Church of Christ in Mogador is now a fact, with its native bishops and deacons. Nineteen baptized believers (including ourselves) sat down last Sunday night to the Lord's Supper. The night before last, after fasting and prayer, we set apart two native Christians, converted since I came here, to go forth to preach in the mountains. They are wonderfully taught of God and full of faith and zeal. Both are superior men. They believe scores of churches will spring up where they go, and thousands be saved. I firmly believe it too. So do the believers here. There is not a convert who does not both speak and pray every night at our meetings. There are at least three others who anticipate going forth to preach when better instructed. Also Mr. Martin and I are soon starting. This makes seven of our infant church who are either actually committed to mission work or who wish to be, and have definitely proposed it.

All the converts are young men. They are laying aside on the first day of the week as the Lord prospers them. Almost all are Sous or Shluh. Some are of good position, and read well. Others the reverse. Night after night they relate answers to prayer, some of them remarkable. The Christians are some of them always here. We have purposely given them no material help that could influence them. One of them has already been to Morocco city, where three believed, whose faces I have not yet seen. One, Musa, was evidently a God-ordained missionary and pastor, for he began at once to preach. He is an educated man. The other man-convert (for the third was a woman) was a rich merchant. Soon the entire household of the latter, some seven or eight souls, mostly men, believed. Also many others, Musa writes me. Also eight men from a distant Sous town in a populous district, who entreated Musa to go with them, saying many would believe. All these entreated Musa to baptize them. Even now are springing up native Apostolic churches, to which God is daily adding those who shall be saved, following exactly in the steps of the early Christians, full of faith and love and zeal and the Holy Ghost, and knowing nothing of the traditions of men, but cleaving to the Word, which they search with delight.

November 12.—The work goes on here steadily and blessedly, and quietly, but with power. There are always new inquirers coming, and there seem no exceptions to the rule that everyone who comes fairly under the word is converted. Two, I trust, came into the light yesterday; one, I trust, to-day, and one other the day before yesterday. This latter travelled 250 miles to see me about the way of life, and the third day after arriving he was rejoicing in Christ. He is a man of position and intelligence, and 65 years old. We baptized him to-day—only four days after he first heard of Christ as the Saviour, and who, four days ago, was grounded by a life-time's training and prejudices in Mohammedanism.

...As to our trip, I cannot now write much. It was a wondrous experience. I never felt so subdued and low before God, and so full of praise. Mr. Martin alone accompanied me. The native Christian who was to have gone, and who knew the country, was forcibly detained at the very hour of embarking. We penetrated a country seldom visited by Europeans, and in 21 days went on foot from Mazagan, S.E. to Morocco city, and then W. to Mogador—about 250 miles by the roads we took. How I praise God for our rich experience of his guidance, providing, defence, and teaching. We were without purse or scrip—nothing but the native clothes we wore. Yet daily God fed us and kept us. About 15 nights out of the 21 we were received, lodged, and fed in the native mosques, where we daily preached Christ to all who came, and with a help and power I have never before known. This reception in mosques is hardly believed by the Europeans here who have heard of it. We received not a mouthful except from the Father's hand, and how sweet it tasted direct from Him! How it nourished thanksgiving in our hearts, as well as strength in our bodies! What He gave we ate, and never was there a morsel too much. When He withheld, even for an entire day, we rejoiced to taste fellowship with Christ and Paul, and humbled ourselves with this unmistakably appointed fasting, and learned to live, not on bread alone, but upon every word of God.

We had many, almost daily, experiences like this. We had been walking from before dawn until noon in a wild part where were few people, and had accomplished perhaps 20 miles, but had not tasted food. We prayed by the roadside that the Lord would kindly feed us. We rose and went on, and almost at once met a man with a basket on his shoulder, which he let down, and disclosed a dish of hot kous-kous, saying "Eat," which we did. He, of course, knew nothing of us. We were daily kept in great peace and blessing. Notwithstanding occasionally sleeping out, even in the rain, and always on the ground with never once a bed, but generally matting; repeated fastings, and much cold and rain and exposure, and wading many icy streams from the near-by Atlas snows; some pursuits by robbers and bad men, and threatenings of violence, and arrests; being brought before governors and rulers—yet we had perfect health. We had never once a headache or cold, though I started with a stubborn headache, and Satan made a great onslaught to drive us back at the first.

[We have since received further particulars of this journey.]

OBITUARY.

M. EDOUARD PANCHAUD.

THIS veteran pastor, who has, through illness, been for some years compelled to live in retirement, died a few days ago at Lausanne. In early life he laboured long and earnestly at Havre and Brussels, and was one of the founders of the organisation known as the Belgian Missionary Church.

MR. SHADRACH LEADBEATTER.

This well-known servant of God passed away at his residence, 38, Hope-street, Southport, on the morning of February 7. Mr. Leadbeatter has had an active life of service for his Master. He has been laid aside from preaching and teaching for some considerable time, suffering from paralysis. The day before his earthly course was ended, speaking to the writer, he told him of the prospect he had in view of joining "the great multitude which no man can number."

A NEW FOUNTAIN PEN.—We have tried a good many "patent" pens, but have found none which bear an all-round test so well as the "WIRT FOUNTAIN PEN" (10s. 6d.), sent us by Mr. C. W. Robinson, 16, Holborn Bars, W.C. It neither requires jerking to start the flow of ink, nor does the ink fail at any point until the barrel is empty, a steady supply being maintained throughout. The holder is fitted with a gold nib to suit the handwriting of the purchaser. It is very simple in construction, but thoroughly reliable in use.

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

MEETINGS for Dock labourers are being held every week. Hundreds of these half-fed, dispirited men come seeking food and shelter. Last year many hopeful cases came out of similar gatherings. The men are gathered two hundred at a time, and supplied with bread and butter and as much hot tea as they require.

While the meal is being eaten, some cheerful singing drives away sadness from many faces. This is followed by short loving addresses full of tenderness and sympathy, setting forth the Lord Jesus as a Saviour and friend. We ask prayer that we may be made wise to win many to Him this season. JAMES SHARPLESS.

LONDON YOUNG WOMEN.

THE Y.W.C.A. Institute, 14, Finsbury-square, E.C., is becoming an increasingly important centre of work among the young women of the Metropolis. During the last three years its agencies have become very numerous, and there has been much cause for encouragement at the way in which the advantages of the Institute have been sought after by those whom it is specially desired to reach. Last week a new hall, which has been fitted up as a gymnasium, was opened in connection with the branch, and the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress graced the proceedings with their presence. As Lord Kinnaird said on the occasion, the fact that the chief citizen of London had shown an interest in the movement will do much to convince such as have not yet inquired into the work of the Association that this is no private fad or sectarian affair, but rather an important philanthropic undertaking, with a view to benefiting the young women of the City.

After some hearty words tracing the history of the branch, by the Bishop of Bedford, Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser spoke admirably on the Y.W.C.A. as a moral power. The educational and spiritual aspects of the work were also dwelt upon by Mr. H. Cunynghame and Sir T. Fowell Buxton. The Lord Mayor, in a thoughtful address, spoke in high terms of the Association, and also of the Y.M.C.A., and expressed himself delighted at opportunities of recognising their great value. At the close of the meeting about £170 was received in donations towards defraying the cost of the new hall. The superintendent of the Institute is Miss Baldwin.

MR. H. WIGGAN is delivering lectures each Monday evening, on Scripture Characters, with dissolving views, at the Tabernacle in Herries-street, Queen's Park, W. There have been crowded audiences, and not a little converting power has accompanied the addresses. During the last few weeks many have professed a change of heart and life. We are sorry to learn that the Tabernacle is still encumbered with a debt. Several friends of the work, including Messrs. E. M. and T. A. Denny, have generously contributed; but some £150 yet remains to be subscribed.

MESSRS. BARON AND BARNETT, of the Mildmay Mission to Jews, accompanied by a young man named Saadi, from Harley House, Bow, were to have left London yesterday for a three months' evangelistic tour to North Africa. It is estimated that there are a million Jews in the various countries in North Africa—Morocco, Algeria, Tunis, &c.—and amongst them these brethren will find large scope for the distribution of the Scriptures, and the preaching of the Gospel. They travel through France and Spain, and hope on the journey to visit the Jewish communities in those lands. They ask prayer that the Lord will accompany and go before them, and open wide doors for the reception of the truth amongst the sons of Israel.

Northern Lights.

DR. PENTECOST'S mission in Glasgow is brightening the churches. From Tuesday until Friday of this week an important series of Bible-readings are being held. But perhaps the most important of all his meetings was that in the Young Men's Christian Institute on Monday evening, instead of Mr. W. A. Campbell's famous fellowship meeting, which is a spiritual tonic to hundreds of young lives. Dr. Pentecost's subject was "The Conditions of Revival."

In the little Scotch village of Busby, near to the Covenanting farmhouse of Lochgair, which still shelters descendants of the fine old Howie stock, is to be found a United Presbyterian Church, whose minister will yet distinguish himself. Like more than one noted divine belonging to this body, he is intensely in sympathy with the Jews. One would hardly expect to find so much brain-power, individuality, and oratory in this sleepy little spot. One of Mr. Melville's "old wifies," more than usually impressed by her pastor's denunciation of some political iniquity, thus delivered her opinion: "Oor Mr. Melville would ornament the hoose o' Parliament mair than the hoose of the Lord!" That was her rather curious way of complimenting the minister. Mr. Melville is a sturdy Orcadian.

A very interesting drawing-room meeting was held in Glasgow, in the house of Mr. Alex. Stephen, in order to give Mr. Arnold, secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, an opportunity of speaking about the persecuted in foreign lands. A touching story of two persecuted Persians, who walked to Germany in order to get ship for England, to lay their story before the Alliance, moved the meeting very much. The Shah of Persia, strange to say, gave his aid to the oppressed Christians, and subscribed £100 towards a fund for restoring their property which had been ruthlessly destroyed. In Russia, terrible persecution is rampant, Lutheran pastors being smuggled away to Siberia. This meeting will stimulate sympathy already existing in the North. H.

JERUSALEM. — Mrs. Meredith is making arrangements for a trip to Jerusalem on very moderate terms. Any spiritual and prayerful Christian friends who would wish to accompany this small party are invited to communicate with Mrs. Meredith, the Conference Hall, 143, Clapham-road, London, S.W.

CENTRAL LONDON OPHTHALMIC HOSPITAL.—During the forty-five years this Institution has been opened over 200,000 patients have been partakers of the benefits it affords. There is accommodation for a large number of in-patients, and several thousand out-patients receive treatment every year. We regret, however, to state that, through great falling off of income, wards are being closed. Mrs. Frank Snoad, of The Lillies, Lee, has written a powerful appeal for help, entitled, "Can you see to read this?" We trust it will be widely circulated, and replenish the resources of the Institution, the treasurer of which is Mr. C. Reeve, 214, High Holborn, W.C.

SCOTCHMEN IN LONDON.—A social gathering of Scotsmen was convened last week by Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Matheson, at the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. There were tea and music, the latter including several songs in the broad Northern brogue. Then came several short addresses. Mr. Matheson drew attention to the advantages of the Y.M.C.A., as well as to the benefits resulting from living the Christian life. Rev. J. R. Gillies, of Hampstead, spoke a few words on "Daniel" as a model for young men. Mr. Arthur Robertson, secretary of the Caledonian Christian Club, followed with a short address based on "Overcoming the world." We understand that this is not to be the last gathering of the kind at Aldersgate-street; it is intended to invite, in turn, young men of other nationalities, Irish, Welsh, French, &c., to similar receptions.

Personalia.

Rev. H. Grattan Guinness has been lecturing to large audiences in Boston, U.S., on "Romanism," "Missions to Africa," and other topics.

Mrs. Leavitt was lately invited to preach in the Royal Chapel before the Queen of Madagascar, and was heard with great attention. The Queen gave her £20 as a mark of interest in her temperance work.

Dr. Lightfoot, Bishop of Durham, who has been very ill at Bournemouth, has been making steady progress during the last three weeks. It is expected that he will be unable to resume his episcopal duties for several months.

Mrs. Watts-Hughes continues to carry on her valuable work at Mountford House, Barnsbury-square, where she offers a home to a large number of boys, and enables them to earn an honest livelihood. She sends them to the Board Schools, and by advice and counsel supplies the place of a mother to them.

Mr. Denham Smith's condition is one of increasing weakness. Although unable to notice much that passes around him, yet now and then he brightens up and speaks a sentence or two which show that his mind is still calmed with the same peaceful joy and bright hope. We are glad to hear that he suffers but little pain.

Mr. David Walker, secretary of the Sydney Y.M.C.A., received a hearty public welcome on his return to his post after his European and American tour. In his address Mr. Walker said he and his companion, Mr. Fairfax, had travelled some 40,000 miles. He spoke in very encouraging terms of the progress of Y.M.C.A. work.

The Pundita Ramabai reached Japan on December 19. The Tokio W.C.T.U. welcomed her as an honoured guest, and the papers were filled with interesting accounts of her journey and arrival. Her first lectures were received with great attention and enthusiasm, as were also the addresses of Dr. Emma Brainard Ryder who accompanied her.

Rev. E. R. Young, who has spent nine years in Gospel work among the Cree and Saulteaux Indians of the far North-West, is now on a visit to this country, where he hopes to deliver lectures descriptive of his work. These lectures have been highly spoken of by American papers. Mr. Young may be communicated with, care of Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, 11, Bedford-place, W.C.

Rev. John Pyper, of Belfast, well known in connection with "Bible Temperance," is making his annual visit to London. Mr. Pyper is a powerful advocate of this phase of temperance work, and his lectures and addresses are exceedingly interesting and profitable. Among other engagements, he will speak at a conference to be held on February 22, at Finsbury Park Hall, N.

Rev. Dr. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, writing on his sixty-sixth birthday, says:—For unbroken health and an unbroken faith, I thank God to-day. If any kind friend were called to write my humble obituary to-morrow, there are three things he could honestly set down to my credit, viz., that I have never spent a Sunday in a sick-bed, I have never made a new hymn book, and never read "Robert Elsmere." Life is too short to waste time in hunting all the devil's rabbits.

Mr. D. L. Moody hopes to be in Chicago April 1, and for sixty days will conduct a Bible Institute. Students from theological seminaries and colleges are specially invited to the opening sessions for two weeks. The work of the Chicago Evangelisation Society, which has been so near Mr. Moody's heart for many years, will be fully organised while he is in Chicago, and he proposes to follow up the work closely for a year, giving it his personal attention and supervision.

Mr. Frederick Stanley Arnot.—Meetings to bid farewell to Mr. Arnot, and to commend him to the care of God previous to his return to Central Africa, are to be held at Exeter Hall, Strand, on Tuesday, March 19, at 3.30 and 6.30. Mr. Arnot intends to take half a dozen barrows with him, constructed after a pattern of his own invention. Each will carry the loads of five men, thus effecting an immense saving. Mr. Arnot takes with him quite a troop of missionaries who are to settle in the country of Chief Msidi, near the sources of the Congo and the Zambesi. Mr. Arnot's narrative will shortly be published, and to ensure its being widely read he has determined that the price will not exceed 2s. 6d.

Dr. Guinness has been obliged through illness to give up the tour on which he had started, in connection with the departure of the first party of missionaries of the new Balolo Mission to the Upper Congo. Meetings were arranged at Edinburgh, Aberdeen, Glasgow, Belfast, Dublin, Cork, Leicester, and London. These places will, however, be visited by Mr. John McKittrick, and his colleagues of the outgoing party. We are very thankful to say that Dr. Guinness is quite out of danger, and is regaining strength.

Mr. Spurgeon.—At the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday, a letter from Mr. Spurgeon to his congregation was read, in which he stated that the wounded limb had steadily improved, but as yet he could not use it much. He hoped that in the days of rest which still remained, he should continue to gather strength so as to be able, on his return home, to stand out a sermon and to walk respectably. Mr. Spurgeon sent his special thanks to the several pastors who had successively occupied his pulpit since his departure from London in November last.

Rev. T. Lardner, pastor of Battersea Park Baptist Tabernacle, who has been suffering from a very painful and protracted illness, consequent upon the breaking of one of his arms, which necessitated amputation, has resumed his pastoral work after about twelve months' absence from his flock. At a meeting held a few days since, to welcome him back, he expressed his cordial appreciation of the sympathy which has been extended to him during his time of affliction by his friends and by the ministers of all denominations in the district, including clergymen of the Church of England.

Rev. J. M. Vila, a pastor of the Reformed Spanish Church, who had been so indefatigable in proclaiming the Word of God to multitudes of eager listeners in the villages, besides ministering to a large permanent congregation in Malaga, was last year sentenced to more than two years' imprisonment for writing and publishing a pamphlet against idolatry. The Government have at last granted an amnesty; so Senor Vila is free. "Blessed be God," writes this persecuted pastor; "now I shall be able to visit our Mission stations. The Lord has dispersed the clouds which overshadowed me, and I am left in peace. I shall now be able to visit the villages, and preach the blessed Gospel."

Father Damien.—An interesting letter from Mr. E. Clifford telling of his arrival in Molokai, the leper island, appears in The Church Army Gazette. Of Father Damien, he says:—"He is just what you would expect him to be—a simple, sturdy, hard-working, devout man. No job is too menial for him—building, carpentering, tending the sick, washing the dead, and many, many other such things form part of his daily work. He is always cheerful, often playful, and one of the most truly humble men I ever saw. The leprosy has disfigured him a good deal, but I never feel it anything but a pleasure to look at him; and already the gurjun oil which I brought is making a manifest difference in his face and hands, and in his power of sleeping. How far the cure will reach it is of course impossible to say. He is such a busy man that I sometimes fear he will not find time to do the medicine full justice. The English affection and sympathy touch him very much indeed."

Miss Ada Leigh, of the Homes for Englishwomen in Paris, is to be married to the Bishop of Ontario on Feb. 20. In Echoes from Paris for February, Miss Leigh gives a sketch of the origin and present position of her work. She says:—"By my marriage with one whose life and first recollections were years ago linked with our late revered president, the Earl of Shaftesbury, and with other esteemed friends, and whose labours God has greatly honoured, I feel that I shall entwine more matured experience with my hitherto single-handed toil in the work of our association. I shall retain my position as President and Honorary Secretary of the Association, and though I may leave my tried and greatly valued helpers for longer intervals than hitherto without my personal supervision, I shall always hope to be in Paris when occasion may necessitate. During my absence, Miss Moon will represent me in Paris; Miss H. G. Hensley, in London, at 22A, Queen's-road, Bayswater; whilst many of our friends will welcome Miss Carmichael upon occasional deputation work, and our Chaplain."

Rev. Philip Gast, 12, Noel-street, Islington, minister of Spencer-place Chapel, Goswell-road, pleads for the poor of St. Luke's and Clerkenwell. The distress just now is truly great—many well known to me are needing food and coals and clothing.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the Union, and take its Monthly Notes, which are different from these.

SUNDAY, FEB. 17.—Genesis XXXII.

TRAVELLING onwards from Laban, Jacob met a troop of angels. This vision was intended to assure him of his safety, and to prepare him for the hostile troop he was soon to encounter. God's hosts are always near us, though we see them not (Ps. xxiv. 7; 2 Kings ii. 11).

(1) A great alarm (6, 7).—It was no small matter to anticipate meeting Esau in a rage, and, in spite of all Divine assurances, Jacob sought for expedients to avert the blow. Obsequiously he speaks of himself as Esau's servant, and then invents plans by which Esau might be appeased, and at least something saved from the general wreck. There is no harm in making arrangements against approaching trial, if they are dictated by God. But there is great harm in originating them from our own fears, and relying on their sufficiency. Faith does not plan, but trusts.

(2) A touching prayer (9, &c.).—If only this prayer had come first, and he had entirely trusted God, nothing could have been better. What a strange mixture are we all. His humility (10), his pleading of promise; twice, "Thou saidst" (9, 12); his thankful recognition of the past (10); his direct entreaty for deliverance (11). Strange that we need to be put into great straits, ere we learn the true art of prayer!

(3) The mysterious conflict (24).—Alone, and in the dark, amid silence broken only by the murmur of the brook, he was drawn into conflict with a mysterious combatant. The Angel Jehovah wrestled with him. In the energy of his self-will he held his ground. So do we refuse to yield to God's Holy Spirit, who prevails not till He touches some cherished sinew of strength. Then we leave wrestling for clinging, wrapping our arms in desperation around the person of the unknown Angel. Then we prevail over God and man, and win the blessing, which enriches our lives for ever, and pass from Jacobs into Israels, who are princes with God.

MONDAY, FEB. 18.—Genesis XXXIII.

The old nature dies hard. Notwithstanding the wrestle and the blessing of the previous night, we find Jacob still scheming instead of trusting. And he surely abdicated his true position as a Prince with God, when he bowed himself seven times to the ground before his brother. How slow we are to trust God, and to believe that He will literally do as He has said! What could be more explicit than God's guarantees of his safety? (xxviii. 15; xxxi. 3). Unbelief cringes and schemes and trembles. Faith is erect, and bold, and sings (2 Chron. xx.).

(1) An unlooked-for deliverance (4).—The hearts of all men are in the hand of the Lord (Prov. xxi. 1). He can give us favour in quarters where we least expect it, changing the dreaded foe into a friend (Isa. liv. 17). The clouds we dread break in mercy; iron gates open of their own accord; crooked places straighten; mountains sink into the plain.

(2) Prevarication.—Such a blessing ought to have banished all further misgiving from Jacob's heart; but it seemed impossible to eradicate the subtlety of his crafty nature. He told his brother he would come to Seir, which he never for a moment intended to do (14). As soon as Esau was well out of sight, Jacob made for Succoth, and there built a house, with the evident intention of settling.

(3) Here, also, was disobedience (17), for he had been distinctly sent to Bethel (xxxi. 13). Soon after, he bought a parcel of a field, in the close proximity of an idolatrous city. This was worse and worse; it was what Abraham would never have done. Why buy a yard of the land wherein he was a stranger? And why settle so near Shalem, with the memory of Lot's troubles at Sodom, and when all the land was before him?

TUESDAY, FEB. 19.—Genesis XXXIV.

Poor Dinah! she was the only daughter. She went out into society. How she fell! What a pity she did not take her mother with her! Or perhaps she had seen too much of the duplicity and division of home to respect her parents; and she thought she could do well enough for herself. But she was caught in the outer circles of that fatal whirlpool, which has engulphed so many, sinking never to rise again. Curiosity is the parent of mischance.

(1) The results of worldly conformity.—If Jacob had not gone so near Shechem's city, he would never have brought all this sorrow on his home. Alas! professing Christian parents will have a very serious reckoning some day concerning their children's souls, ruined through their own inconsistency. And even though certain young men of the world may be more honourable than most (19), they are not suitable partners for the daughters of Israel. What can be more specious and lifelike than Hamor's proposals (8, 9). This is what the world is ever saying to the Church.

(2) A dreadful retribution (25).—This deed of blood and treachery was never forgotten by Jacob (xlix. 5, 6, 7), it left a terrible memory in the land (30), and it led to a rapid breaking up of the encampment, and a flight to safer and holier dwelling-places. Sin is always followed by disaster. What we sow we reap. It is pitiable to hear Jacob's miserable whine, I shall be destroyed. This for months now had been his one cry; how little did he realise that though he were faithless and sinful, God would not run back from his exceeding precious promises (xxxv. 5). By mistakes in education, parents make rods for their own backs.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 20.—Genesis XXXV.

Back to Bethel! Hated, fugitive, dreading the consequences of his children's unbridled violence, Jacob knew not what next to do. Then this summons came to him. When we are in straits, God will often take advantage of them to suggest our return to a happier, holier past. The prodigal must have heard that voice, when he said, "I will arise and go to my Father."

(1) Preparations for return (2).—The idols are altogether unfitting at Bethel. There are things in our lives which we permit when we are living at a distance, which we feel instinctively are inconsistent with Bethel, with its memories of the ladder, and angel-haunted dreams, and holy converse and sacred vows. Probably the one thing which keeps you and yours from a Bethel experience is the permission in your tents of idols and strange gods. Remember 1 John v. 21.

(2) The Divine response (9).—It is long since God appeared to you. For long you have lived on an old and threadbare experience. But if you would yield up the accursed thing, He would appear again. You would be recalled from Jacob to Israel (10). Promises of fruitfulness would rejoice your heart (11). And the gifts of God would come thick and fast into your life (12).

(3) Three deaths.—Often a great blessing comes to prepare us for a great sorrow; and the sorrow confirms it, as a kiln burns in some fair colours on the vase. Deborah (8). How many of us can point to oaks of weeping, hard by altars of deliverance. Rachel (20). And Isaac, at whose grave the rival brothers buried their differences for ever (29). And then a crime, worse than death, broke in on the home, the crime of Reuben which cost him the birthright (xlix. 3, 4). Instability, weakness of character, may lead to the direst sins.

THURSDAY, FEB. 21.—Genesis XXXVI.

Though the story mostly concerns Jacob, yet here a whole chapter is devoted to Esau and his descendants. This book does not profess to record all God's dealings with the race, but those only which concerned the children of Israel, through whom such great blessings were destined to come to the world. We must ever remember Christ's words about the other sheep, which did not belong to the Jewish fold; and we must believe that God has followed the wanderings of all mankind with loving interest, noting their very names, supplying them with good things (Acts xvii. 25, 26), and giving them sufficient evidences of his being and law to lead them to Himself (Acts xiv. 17).

(1) Entire deliverance (6).—Many a time the proximity of Esau was a menace that filled Jacob with alarm. What a relief it must have been when the elder brother chose to remove further. So when dreaded evils have served their purpose in the education of our souls, they drop away. God will not be always threshing. He does not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men (Isa. xxviii. 28).

(2) A royal line (31).—We have a long line of royal dukes. Esau is a specimen of men of the world. Bluff, jovial, impulsive, quick equally to resent and to forgive, robust and pleasure-loving. Their portion is in this life (Ps. xvii. 14). What a contrast to the Jacobs, with all their sorrows, their stern discipline, their fiery trials. But, after all, these are the men who become the spiritual leaders of the race, and who conduct the pilgrims of eternity to new acquirements and conquests.

FRIDAY, FEB. 22.—Genesis XXXVII.

The Hebrew terms indicate that the coat of many colours was not the patchwork quilt, which we thought it was in the days of our childhood, but a long-sleeved garment of delicate and beautiful texture, which was worn by the upper classes, the gentry, the men who were not intended to soil themselves with manual labour. What a contrast to the coarse tunic of the other shepherd sons of Israel! It was this that made them jealous. The suspicion that their father meant to keep the son of his favourite wife from the common toils of the home, and even to make him ruler and heir. This partiality was a mistake, repeating that of Isaac and Rebekah, and bringing about similar miseries. It may also have induced a tinge of vainglory and conceit in the lad, which showed itself in his dreams, and aggravated his brothers' hate.

(1) The history of a crime.—Envy (11); hatred (4); unkind speech (4); conspiracy (18); deceit (31). At first the old man acquiesced in the story, but after a time his suspicions were turned on his sons (xlii. 36). And a terrible Nemesis awaited them. They were destined to hear the piercing cries of that young lad pleading for mercy for many years to come; and, in a moment of supreme anguish, they were to have that scene re-enacted before them (xlii. 21).

(2) There is here the foreshadowing of the Cross.—He was sent by the Father to his brethren. He came unto his own, and his own received Him not. They said, "This is the heir, let us slay Him, and seize upon the inheritance." He was sold for thirty pieces of silver, and thrown into the pit of death, where He did not tarry. In each case envy lay at the root of the crime; yet all unconsciously the schemes of the murderers were over-ruled to fulfil the purposes of God (compare l. 20 and Acts ii. 23).

SATURDAY, FEB. 23.—Genesis XXXVIII.

Another of these dark chapters! Stained deep with sin. Surely, if crimson and scarlet be fast colours, these might be employed of such a record as this, yet even such sins as these may be forgiven (1 Cor. vi. 10, 11; 1 John i. 9).

These sins are faithfully portrayed, because the Bible is God's looking-glass, held up to human nature, that men may know what is in them (James i. 24, 25). Here is a portraiture of the results, not of religion, but of its lack. It is like a background to show the need for the death of Jesus, and for the advent of the Holy Spirit (Tit. ii. 14; Gal. v. 17).

The record of such sins has not done the harm which some allege; for most read without realising how much evil is concealed beneath, whilst those who understand the depths of Satan are warned that all who commit such things are worthy of death. Many reading certain verses in the Bible are made to realise, perhaps for the first time, the true nature of practices into which they may have been thoughtlessly betrayed, but which they can never again commit in ignorance of their true nature.

We must be pure in heart. Without purity the strongest Samsons must become castaways (Judges xvi.), and we cannot see God (Matt. v. 8); but if we would attain this priceless jewel, we must incessantly claim the purity of Jesus, and trust Him to maintain intact for us the chastity of a pure heart.

A TRAINING SCHOOL FOR GOSPEL SINGERS is to be one of the additional features of Northfield, Mass., next summer. Prof. D. B. Towner is to conduct such a school of instruction, to commence in June, 1889, and continue during July and August. The increasing demand for competent leaders of singing in Gospel meetings, Sunday-schools, and Young Men's Christian Association work, as well as the social meetings of the church, is generally recognised.

PANTOMIME CHILDREN.—There can be little doubt (says The Queen) that according to recent decisions the employment in theatres of children under the age of ten is illegal, and that the days of youthful actors on the stage are numbered. Many of us are old enough to remember the troops of children hurried into the factories before the era of the Factory Act; some may even look back to the time of the small chimney-sweep. These types of childish labour have disappeared, and many will not be sorry that the pantomime children have been abolished with them.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, February 24.

THE GREAT TEACHER AND HIS TWELVE DISCIPLES.

MARK vi. 1—13. GOLDEN TEXT: ver. 12.

LEAVING Capernaum, which, with its surrounding district, had been the scene of our Lord's great popularity, He went to "his own country" (1)—Nazareth, "a district of quiet and seclusion as compared with the densely crowded district of Capernaum."—Morison. It was situated about twenty miles south-west of Capernaum, and would be easily reached in a day's journey. It was not his first visit. See Luke iv. 16—30. But his experience of his townsmen's former rejection and violence did not prevent his repeating the visit. Note the persistence of his love. His yearning desire for their salvation was not quenched. His only revenge for their former cruelty was greater love, and another opportunity to receive Him. Note, also, how He exemplified in his own conduct the instruction given to the healed demoniac (Mark v. 19), "Go home to thy friends." See John vii. 5. "Neither did his brethren believe." He would not neglect them, even for the sake of eager multitudes in other cities.

"His disciples follow Him" (1).—In view of the mission upon which they were to be sent (7—13), this statement is significant. Their companionship with Jesus was no unimportant part of their training. They had witnessed his popularity; it was well that they should witness also his rejection. They must be trained to endure hardness. The lesson of forgiving love which our Lord's visit taught was one they needed to learn. See Luke ix. 51—55.

His work began on the Sabbath Day (2). Notice how the sacred day, the synagogue, the work of teaching, were all honoured by Jesus. There is no better way of using the Sabbath still. The synagogues were local houses of worship. Unlike the Temple, where only priests could officiate, the synagogues were open to any who had a message. His hearers "were astonished," and apparently interrupted his teaching by their questions. Their questions emphasise two things—on the one hand, the words He spake, the wisdom He manifested, and the works He performed. Each of these prompted a question (see R.V.). On the other hand, the person and position of the Saviour. This appears not only in the questions of ver. 3, but is suggested in ver. 2, R.V. "This man," and "his hands"—the hands they had seen at work in the carpenter's shop; the man whose kinsfolk were still among them. "Carpenter" (3).—Every Jewish parent was required to teach his son a trade. There is nothing ignoble in manual labour. Jesus has consecrated it. "Son of Mary," probably Joseph, his reputed father, had been dead some years. The previous history and connections of Jesus made the people unwilling to recognise Him as the Messiah. Was there not a sinister suggestion behind their questions? "Wisdom given unto Him"; "works done through his hands." They seemed to recognise a power behind Him; but were unwilling to admit that it was the power of God. "They were offended," scandalised, made to stumble. They rejected the message, notwithstanding its "wisdom," because they were prejudiced against the messenger. "A prophet" (4).—A proverb which Jesus often repeated (Luke iv. 24; John iv. 44), telling of frequent experience of rejection in some form.

Their unbelief hindered Him (5). He did so little, not because He had not the power, but because they lacked the moral condition necessary. "He marvelled" (6). Unbelief is always marvellous, because—without excuse—guilty (1 John v. 10); and most disastrous in its consequences (Mark xvi. 16).

Rejected by the Nazarenes, He still pursued his work of preaching and healing in the surrounding villages (6).

The disciples' first missionary commission (7—13).—He had called them at the first not only to save them, but to use them (Mark i. 17). He only sends those whom He has called (7). "Two and two," "that they might help and encourage one another, and take counsel together."—Morison. "Gave them power," authority. Whom He sends, He qualifies, as He did Moses, Gideon, and the Apostles in their final commission (Exod. iii.; Jud. vi. 14; Acts i. 8).

Their instructions were strange. Compare 8 and 9, with Matt. x. 9, 10. "Take nothing" (8).—Not even a superfluous staff, or coat, or pair of sandals, or money in their girdle. God undertakes to provide for those whom He sends. "Who will look after my business and my family while I am away?" asked one, when his king wished to send him on an important and difficult mission. "You look after my business," was the reply, "and I will look after yours." God makes it his business to care for those who make it their business to serve Him (Matt. vi. 33). Yet God would provide for them not in any miraculous way, but by means of the custom of hospitality that prevailed in Eastern countries (10). "There abide."—They were not to weaken the value of their testimony by appearing fastidious as to their own comfort. Not their own self-indulgence, but their hearers' repentance must be their constant object. "Shake off the dust" (11).—A most significant and solemn testimony against those who rejected the message (Acts xiii. 51). The following clause is not in the Revised Version, though it is found in Matt. x. 15. It need not be overlooked. Rejection of great light involves greater guilt, and must lead to severer doom.

Their work (12, 13).—They preached repentance. This was John's message (Matt. iii. 1); our Lord's (iv. 17); and the Apostles' after Pentecost (Acts ii. 38). It means not merely sorrow for sin, but turning from sin to God through Christ. The miracles (13) were intended to enforce this message. They exercised the authority Jesus gave them (7). Let all Christian workers learn not only to do God's work, but to make full use of "the power from on high" given to them.

A Y.M.C.A. has been formed at Nairn, N.B. About thirty members were enrolled at the first meeting.

REV. C. MELVILLE PYM, whose death we recently announced, had a remarkable career. A member of a well-known Bedfordshire family, and born in 1834, he started in life as a midshipman in the East India merchant service, and later on held a commission in the army. During the Indian Mutiny he faithfully discharged important duties, and in 1863 retired with the rank of captain. Embarking in farming operations in Ireland, he lost his entire fortune, but he did not lose courage, for in the meantime his mind had been seriously engaged upon religious matters. Well nigh penniless, he became an itinerant open-air preacher, and worked with great zeal until he was ordained by the Archbishop of York, and appointed to a curacy. From 1873, till his death, he discharged in a praiseworthy manner the duties of rector of Cherry Burton, Yorkshire.

COMMANDER V. LOVETT CAMERON, C.B., R.N., delivered his lecture, "How I crossed Africa," at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Wednesday evening, last week. The story of his journey from Zanzibar to Benguela, viâ Unyanyembe and Ujiji (at the latter of which places he found the last journals, &c., of Dr. Livingstone, and sent them home to England) was listened to with deep interest by an audience of young men which crowded the lecture hall, and who frequently applauded the lecturer as he related stirring incidents which occurred in the course of his travels. Commander Cameron spoke forcibly of the evils wrought by the liquor traffic and the slave trade, and in closing drew attention to his scheme for the suppression of slavery in Eastern Africa. The plans are to be discussed at a great meeting to be held at Exeter Hall, London, on Tuesday, February 26, at 4 p.m., the Archbishop of Canterbury in the chair.

THE "JOYFUL NEWS" MISSIONS.—Joyful News gives its readers a great deal of fresh missionary information. In last week's number there are letters from the evangelists in Shimoga and Perambore (India), Lagos, and Ceylon, the intelligence being of very recent date. The evangelist in Madras reports that he has got right in the midst of the natives, one of whom has told him that if he would win them to Christianity, he must love them, and spend as much time as possible with them. He also added that one reason why more converts are not gained in India is that Europeans are apt to treat the natives as dogs. It is touching to see the way in which the poor are supporting the Joyful News Mission. Rev. Thomas Champness has now upwards of seventy evangelists, most of whom he clothes. This having become known, numbers of godly women in many parts of the country, unable to do much, are constantly sending Mr. Champness home-knitted socks, and other articles, and thus reducing in a considerable degree his outlay on wearing apparel. —Methodist Times.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

ABRAM'S AGE ON LEAVING HARAN.

[QUESTION.]

SIR,—Can you explain the following difficulty? It is said in "Notes on Genesis": When Terah was dead (Acts vii. 4) Abram left Haran. Terah was 70 when Abram was born (Gen. xi. 26), and Abram was 75 (Gen. xii. 4) on his departure from Haran. This would make Terah only 145, so that he must have lived 60 years longer, as his age at death was 205 (Gen. xi. 32).—Yours, &c., B.

[ANSWER.]

The explanation appears to be that Abram was not the eldest son of Terah, as is generally inferred from Gen. xi. 26, but the youngest, as stated in the "note." His name is given before the others because of his superior place and importance in the narrative; similarly Shem is mentioned first, although Japheth was Noah's eldest son; and Moses is generally mentioned before Aaron, although the latter was the elder. Terah's eldest son was born when he was 70 years of age. If, then, Abram was born when his father was 130, on leaving Haran at the latter's death at the age of 205, he would be 75 years old.

THE READY BRIDE.

[QUESTIONS.]

DEAR SIR,—Can any of your correspondents throw light upon that very obscure but most important passage in Rev. xix., "The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready"?

(1) How is she to prepare herself?
(2) Where is the preparation to be made?
(3) When is it to take place?

[ANSWERS.]

(1) Since every member of the body of Christ is already clothed in God's righteousness, symbolised by the white raiment already given to him or her (Rev iii. 5) by God, it would scarcely seem that this can be the explanation.

(2) A very large portion of the redeemed family having already quitted the earth, being now with their Lord in the heavens, since they form part of the bride of the Lamb, in what way is their preparation to be made?

(3) According to the text, the preparation precedes the marriage. But would the marriage be complete previous to resurrection, since it is then only we are to be changed into the likeness of our adorable Lord, both in spirit, soul, and body.

While we contemplate the glorious and happy future, the question forces itself upon our attention, whether any portion of this preparation is to be made, corporately, by those who are still in this body of humiliation. ROBERT NELSON.

IRELAND'S NEED.—In an address to his Roman Catholic fellow-countrymen, Mr. William Pentland, of Mullingar, once a member of the Church of Rome, powerfully urges a return to the old paths of Gospel liberty. He points out that God's message to men is one of full and free salvation, and asks the Irish people to shake off the fetters of the Papacy. He does not ignore patriotic sentiment, but says: "Embrace the true faith of Christ, and of St. Patrick, the religion of Ireland for nearly one thousand years, before she was enslaved by Rome, under the combined influences of Pope Adrian IV. (an Englishman) and the arms of Henry II., King of England. Awake from your slavery under Italian rule, and be free in the Gospel of Christ your Saviour."

EAST-END POVERTY.—SIR,—We are now in the midst of our winter's campaign against the honest poverty and suffering of East London. We are desirous of providing fifty thousand free meals for starving children during the cold winter days. For one pound we can provide 250. Our other agencies embrace distribution of shilling food parcels, securing suitable employment for industrious poor, redemption of honest workmen's tools (and often even bedding) from pawn, loans for purchase of stock to struggling tradesmen, sending poor convalescents to seaside and other homes, providing outfits for seamen, &c., coal and bread tickets for the respectable unemployed, clothing, boots, &c., for poor children, and general mission work carried on in two halls by a large voluntary committee and one paid Bible-woman. A report is sent to every donor.—Yours faithfully,

SUNDAY CLOSING IN ENGLAND.

DEAR SIR,—We earnestly request of your readers that on Sunday next, February 17, special prayer may everywhere be offered, beseeching God to lead our legislators to pass the Bill for stopping the sale of intoxicating liquors throughout England during the whole of Sunday.—Yours truly,

ROBERT WHITWORTH.

OVERWORK ON RAILWAYS.

DEAR SIR,—I am stirred to address you, seeing a suggestion for the formation of an "Association of Christian Railway Shareholders" to protest against overwork and overtime, and, I presume, Sunday excursions.

I am a shareholder in several railway companies (property which has come to me). The number of such must be very large who feel their responsibility, and would rather work for a reform than "sell out." If we did that we must still use the lines. I hope some influential Christian men will take the matter up.—Yours very truly,

ABOUT MISSIONARIES.

SIR,—I have lately been deeply pained by the statements that are being made about missionaries in the religious Press. It seems as though we are fast becoming regarded as "a mercenary army," not only by Canon Taylor, but also by some who are really zealous for the glory of God and the advance of Christ's cause in the world; and, had we not a happy assurance to the contrary, we might feel as though devotion of heart and life were something in which we had no share.

Surely it is asking but little to plead that missionaries of the old societies should be assumed to be men who have the love of God in their hearts, and are actuated by a desire to bring souls to Christ. I would even say that they can claim to be those who have been sent out by the churches in response to the direction of the Holy Ghost, even as Barnabas and Saul were sent out by the church at Antioch. There is not, I believe, a missionary of the L.M.S. whose dedication to the work was not in the first instance the result of the working of God's Spirit in the individual heart. This was followed by a solemn setting apart to the work by the Church, and the sending out and maintaining in the field by those whom the members of Christ's Church have selected for the special work of ministering in these things. All this is in danger of being ignored at the present time; and the importance of individual action is estimated as of far greater value, and as being much more likely to be blessed of God, than the united action of the churches.

I rejoice in the good that is being accomplished by individual action, and should rejoice if all the Lord's people were prophets. At the same time my experience has deepened the conviction that there are dangers connected with individual action which, to say the least, are as great as those which it is now supposed must necessarily be connected with co-operate action. I have seen an individual enterprise commenced which was to eclipse all that had been done by the old workers; but after a while the enterprise was abandoned, and only those who had been working in the old grooves were left to carry on the work. I have also been brought into personal contact with individual workers on new lines and noted the results. I remember some years ago an enthusiastic young fellow arriving at a mission station after a journey of a hundred miles, which he had accomplished with scarcely any money in his pocket. His story was that God had put it into his heart to go into the interior of Africa and work for Him; and being thus called, he could, of course, rely upon his wants being supplied by the way. The station at which I met him offered a good sphere for Christian work; but our friend did not find it fit in with the plans of his life to help us to do it. He must go further. To go further, he was offered an opportunity by a waggon, but to avail himself of this help would, he thought, be manifesting distrust of God's power, if not tempting God. He must go on foot and alone. After a careful preparation, I grasped his hand, and wished him God-speed as he set out laden with the things absolutely necessary. His was a kind of faith I did not possess, but I could appreciate it, nevertheless. Two days after, a pitiful message arrived, asking that help might be sent out to bring him back to the station. The first stretch of heavy sand had proved too much for his strength. After staying on the station some time engaged in business, he returned to England.

All honour to the men who feel constrained to attempt great things in obedience, as they believe, to the leading of the Spirit of God. Let fair consideration be also given to those who, led by the same Spirit, are content to labour for years in quiet endeavour to sow the seeds of Divine truth, and prepare the hearts of men for the coming of the Lord. There are many members in one body, and it does not seem to me that evangelists can yet say to the settled missionary, "We have no need of thee." JOHN BROWN.

Taungs, British Bechuanaland.

"THE STREET CALLED STRAIGHT."

SIR,—I have not seen Canon Tristram's account of Damascus to which your refer in a recent issue; but as one who has visited the city, and seen that remarkable quotation from Ps. cxlv., I venture to correct two mistakes which I think cannot be Canon Tristram's.

No Moslem to-day passes beneath the grand portals, nor reads the words carved there as he enters the grand Mosque. The fact is, that the beautiful doorway over which these wonderful words are sculptured has been blocked up for centuries, and the only way of seeing them is by climbing over the roofs of the houses composing the Silversmiths' Bazaar. Nor is the Mosque in the street which is called Straight, but much more in the centre of the city. The fact alluded to by you, and the use you make of it, are so important that I am jealous they should not be weakened by descriptions not strictly true.—Yours,

JOSEPH WEATHERLEY.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

SIR,—Rev. J. Brown's letters from Bechuanaland seem to call for some explanation from us. We are perfectly content to leave him to settle any question in discussion with the London Missionary Society; and the Society, with their subscribers, will, we rejoice to believe, continue to consider the urgent matters of missionary management and expenditure which are receiving so much attention on all hands.

But Mr. Brown tries to discredit our system, first by describing the great necessities of two of our pioneers, to whom he and a brother missionary showed kindness, and then by querying the correctness of the reports in our Cape War Cry.

Now we regret as much as anyone can that any allusion to missionary opposition should have been made publicly, either in speech or writing, by any officer of ours. But surely Mr. Brown is the last who should complain. When, by his own confession, he had seen nothing of our work, he took occasion from the visit of two officers, who were upon an altogether exceptional pioneer journey, to write to THE CHRISTIAN a letter calculated to injure us in the eyes of persons all round the world whose knowledge of our work and plans was no greater than his own.

We hail with joy the evidence he has supplied, that to the utmost extremities of our lines, our officers maintain that spirit of eagerness to advance upon the kingdom of darkness, and that disregard for their own comfort, which we think true love for God and souls demands. In the early records of the Society to which Mr. Brown belongs, as well as of every other missionary society, he can find stories of exhaustion and privation, and accusations of over-sanguine reporting too, not less creditable or discreditable than those he tells of the two dear lads trying to find out their best route to Bechuanaland.

But though we glory in tribulations necessarily involved in going after the lost sheep, we never authorise any journey to be undertaken without proper planning. And whatever pioneer journeys may be required, they are no indication of our ordinary system of work. We deprecate the frittering away of strength and time upon mere passing calls, and require every ordinary officer to be stationed where, by steady, persevering effort, he can raise up a native force that will not only support him, but, in turn, provide men and women to push the war on further. Our six officers amongst the Zulus, after only a few months' residence there, are, thank God, entirely independent of help from this country, and assure us that the people will support any more whom we can send to live amongst them in their own style. Surely missionaries who cannot now learn to stoop so low as this need not try to depreciate those who are determined to do so, even if in their first steps they often blunder and stumble.

We hope this incident will supply a fresh caution to our dear officers at the Cape and anywhere else. We have little doubt that the inquiries we have addressed to Colonel Thurman and Staff-Captain Lewis will bring us complete replies. We can readily imagine confusion in reports received from different persons hundreds of miles apart.

"THE CONVERSION OF ENGLAND."

SIR,—Mr. Scott confuses the conversion of England with the conversion of Britain. St. Augustine's mission was not the first mission to our island, but there is, I suppose, no room for question that it was the first to those heathen English who had driven the Celtic races of Roman Britain into Wales and Cornwall.

The true ground for opposing the Roman claim, based on the mission of St. Augustine, seems to be, not to deny to the Italian missionaries the honour due to them and to Gregory the Great for their care for the souls of the heathen Angles, but to point out that the Rome of Gregory was wide apart from the Rome of to-day. It would take too much space to go into full particulars here, but allow me to recall to your readers that it was Gregory the Great who wrote to John Jejunator, Patriarch of Constantinople, those memorable words: "Whoever calls himself or desires to be called 'Universal Bishop' is the precursor of Antichrist."—Yours faithfully, L. D. D.

YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—A friend of the Young Women's Christian Association has offered £25 for the best essays by members of the Association on the subject, "What is Protestant Christianity?" For conditions, please send a stamped addressed envelope to the Secretary, United Central Council, 316, Regent-street, London, W.

PAISLEY LODGING-HOUSE MISSION.—Many have had cause to thank God for this Mission, now only eighteen months old, but fully established as a means of blessing to very needy classes. Houses are visited regularly, and tea and Gospel meetings are also held by a band of voluntary workers, whose hands are cordially supported by Christians who cannot themselves give active help. As far as possible clothes are provided for the naked, and shelter for the homeless. Cast-off clothing, religious literature, and other assistance is welcome from all quarters. Communications may be addressed to Mr. B. J. B. Ledgerwood, 28, Argyle-street, Paisley.

AMONG EAST END POOR.—The Mission and Institute, Abbey-street, Bethnal Green-road, E., in connection with the Victoria Park Congregational Church, Approach-road, is an agency of much usefulness and growing importance. The Sunday and Ragged-schools are a blessing to many little ones, who are also welcomed in large numbers to Robin dinners. Free breakfasts and clothing are given to the adult poor, who sadly abound in the district. The depth of the poverty may be realised in some measure when it is stated that between six and seven thousand meals are provided every week to grown-up people. The sick are likewise helped, and, in order that this may be done more effectually, a convalescent home will, it is hoped, soon be opened at Pitsea, Essex. The hon. superintendent of the Mission is Mr. B. Wire, 57, Church-row, Bethnal Green, E.

FOR PERSISTENCE IN WELL DOING commend us to Anthony Comstock and the Society for the Suppression of Vice. It held its anniversary lately, and addresses were made by Dr. John Hall and Chauncey M. Depew, both of whom had received letters warning them not to appear. During the year the Society has expended only 9523 dollars, and yet it has made 94 arrests, secured 101 convictions, seized four tons of immoral books, 338,725 vile pictures, 230 negatives for obscene photographs, 26 copper plates, over 200,000 lottery circulars, 33,200 pool tickets, 674 lottery tickets, besides other gambling instruments. The good done by this Society is very great, and the thanks few. No man in this city gets more curses than Anthony Comstock, but he goes straight forward, and the Courts sustain him, and so do the churches, and so do all good people.—New York Independent.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

St. Bride's Church, Fleet-street, is open for rest, meditation, and prayer from eleven in the morning until four in the afternoon.

The biography of Archbishop Tait is being written by his son-in-law, the Dean of Windsor. Much interesting light will be thrown upon the part which the Archbishop took during the Tractarian struggle at Oxford, and also upon his relations with Bishop Wilberforce.

There was a remarkable gathering of working men at Holy Trinity Church, Bordesley, Birmingham, on a recent Sunday afternoon. The vicar (Rev. Henry Sutton), delivered an earnest address to the men, fervently exhorting them to put their trust in Christ.

Canon Blencowe, of Christ Church, Chester, has prohibited the holding, by laymen, of children's services in his schoolroom on Sunday evenings, because he objected to the hymn-book in use. The book, "Songs of Love and Mercy," had been used by three previous rectors.

Rev. H. E. Noyes, who has been appointed to the parish of St. Stephen's, Walthamstow, has been working for some years back in Kingstown, Ireland, where his labours have been very successful. Mr. Noyes is an evangelical preacher of much power, and is an earnest labourer amongst young men.

METHODIST.

At the instance of Rev. Charles Garrett, the Liverpool ministers connected with the various sections of Methodism attended a soirée in Brunswick Chapel. Mr. Garrett presided, and expressed the hope that they would frequently meet under such happy conditions in the future. After addresses by Revs. W. Welford and W. Middleton, the Lord's Supper was administered.

Three years ago St. John's-square Chapel, Clerkenwell, was a melancholy desert of empty seats. It was then made the headquarters of the Central Wesleyan London Mission, under Rev. Edward Smith. The result has been that out of the closely packed population of Clerkenwell a church of converts has been built up that at the present time fills every inch of space at the services. Mr. Smith has announced that unless a larger church is built for him, he must withdraw, as there is no further room either for converts or the unconverted. It is estimated that a new building will cost £20,000.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Richard Leitch, Newcastle-on-Tyne, has recently given two lectures againgst the growing Ritualism of the Church of England, and its tendency to weaken the Church. These lectures have been much appreciated.

A new church, in a prominent position, has been opened at Brondesbury, N.W. The minister is Rev. R. E. Welsh. This church was formed as a branch of Dr. Monro Gibson's congregation at St. John's Wood, and has grown very rapidly, until it has become a separate cause.

The Peel-road Church, Liverpool, has made marked progress during the past year. The church roll numbers 368, there having been added during the year seventy-two new members, nine of whom were attendants at the Sabbath-school Bible-class. A branch mission has been started. A band of earnest Christians took up the work, and God has graciously blessed the efforts put forth.

Rev. Dr. Ross, late of Reading, is meeting with much encouragement as successor to Rev. J. B. Meharry at Trinity Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne. There have been many accessions to the membership since Dr. Ross's settlement, the present total being 890. There is a successful mission church in Melbourne-street, and an effort is being made to organise a band of lady readers or deaconesses to visit the district.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. George Wilkinson, in consequence of failing health and strength, has resigned the pastorate of London-road Congregational Chapel, Chelmsford. Mr. Wilkinson has for years enjoyed the reputation of being a most forcible preacher.

New and more commodious premises have just been opened for the Chesterfield-street mission of Castlegate Church, Nottingham. A good work has been carried on for many years by the missionary, Mr. T. Taylor, who has now retired from systematic work, though able still to render efficient aid. Much admirable work is being done at some of the mission stations of Castlegate Church in the poorer districts of Nottingham.

The new Islington Congregational Chapel was opened last week, Rev. Dr. Allon preaching the inaugural sermon. The church of which this is a perpetuation was founded in 1788. In 1880, when the cause was in a very low condition, Rev. Robert Berry became the pastor, and in a short time the membership increased from thirty-eight to 370, and the Sunday-school became renewed in life. The new chapel provides seating accommodation for about 1000 persons.

After nearly twenty-six years of faithful and effective ministry at Cambridge Heath, Hackney, Rev. William Marshall has resigned his pastoral charge. For some time past he has suffered from insomnia and consequent nervous exhaustion, and has been advised by the doctors to take a long rest. At a largely attended special meeting of the church, held on Monday week, a resolution was passed expressing affectionate sympathy with Mr. Marshall, and earnestly requesting him to withdraw his resignation, to take the rest he requires, and return to the sphere of work in which he has been so greatly blessed.

SALVATION ARMY.

Stoke Newington has been made into a training depôt. There is every prospect of the corps carrying on a successful work.

During the three months that Capt. Willerton and Lieut. Treby have been at Derby between forty and fifty have become "soldiers."

A meeting has been held at Portsmouth for the purpose of hearing the experiences of a number of converts, whose reformation has been brought about through the instrumentality of the Army. Police-Inspector Porter testified to the great good done by the Army in the town.

BAPTIST.

The spring term of the evening classes in connection with Mr. Spurgeon's Pastors' College has commenced.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the settlement of Rev. D. Russell, at Edmonton, was lately celebrated at a public meeting, presided over by Mr. Joseph Howard, M.P. Mr. Russell became the pastor of the church five years after its formation thirty years ago, and has continued actively at work until the present time.

Rev. G. T. Gillingham, at the celebration of the second anniversary of the Ripple-road Church, Barking, presented an encouraging report of the year's work. There were seven additions to the church during the year, making the membership sixty. Various agencies in connection with the church are the means of much good being done in the district, especially amongst the poor.

The annual meeting of Upton Chapel, Lambeth-road, church and congregation was held on Monday week. The work of the church has greatly extended, and sufficient funds have been received to cover all increased expenditure. The pastor, Rev. W. Williams, stated that he had received £120 for mission work outside the church. Conversions are more numerous now than at any former period.

New Baptist chapels have been opened at New Brompton, and Stapleton Hall-road, Stroud Green, N. Ten years ago work was commenced at the former place by the present pastor (Rev. W. W. Blocksidge), and from that time the work has, under his direction and God's blessing, been so successful that to-day there is a church numbering 235 members. The chapel at Stroud Green is named the "Dowson Memorial" after its founder, the late Dr. Henry Dowson. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. F. B. Meyer. Rev. H. H. Pullen, the pastor, commenced his promising work at Stroud Green on the first Sunday of this year.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

A new mission church was opened last week at Newcastleton.

Mr. George Robinson, blind evangelist, is conducting a special mission at Dreghorn, Ayrshire.

Dr. Pentecost is conducting a mission during this week in the Christian Institute, Glasgow; daily Bible-readings held at noon.

Special mission services have been held at Strathmiglo, Fife, where the claims of the heathen upon Christian congregations were forcibly illustrated.

Mr. James Walker, of the Scottish Evangelistic Association, Edinburgh, has been conducting services in the Town Hall, Turriff, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. The meetings have been fairly attended.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

It has been decided to erect a Soldiers' Home at Belfast, and already an eligible site has been secured, and subscriptions amounting to about £2000 promised.

Arrangements have been made by which the missions of the U.P. Church of Scotland, in Spain, are to be placed under the care of the Irish Presbyterian Church.

Fifteen days' Gospel services have been held in the Methodist Church, Armagh, by Rev. R. Crawford Johnson. The meetings were seasons of great blessing to many.

The late Mr. Henry Campbell has left to Belfast about £150,000 to found, either a school, in which the sons of ministers would have special privileges, or a hospital, as his executors may determine.

Major Whittle and his son have left Ireland for Edinburgh. Before leaving Belfast a farewell meeting was held in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., at which Major Whittle delivered an earnest Gospel address. They commenced work in Edinburgh on Sunday last.

In the current issue of The Christian Advocate, Rev. James Robertson earnestly pleads for an extension of the time limit in the Methodist itinerancy from three to five, or seven years, on the ground that the three years' system is unfavourable to pastoral efficiency, spiritual enterprise, and vigorous mental growth on the part of the minister.

"The Forward Movement" is taking hold of Belfast Methodism, and rousing it to action. A largely attended public meeting was held in Donegall-square Church on Monday evening, when addresses were delivered by leading ministers and laymen on "Our duty to the tens of thousands in Belfast for whom no church home has been provided." Some striking incidents of success were related by the missionaries, who for some time have been engaged in this work.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Enniskillen, Mrs. Gamble, an earnest Sabbath-school worker.—At Mosside, Board-mills, Mrs. Kirkpatrick, a zealous Christian worker among the poor.—Rev. William Morris Colles, D.D., vicar of Melton Mowbray, Leicestershire.—Rev. John Gibson, Canadian Presbyterian missionary to the East Indian immigrants in Demerara, British Guiana.—Rev. A. M. Dobbs, rector of Loughgall, Armagh, son of Major-General Dobbs, whose death was announced a short time ago.—Rev. C. Mackenzie, for nearly thirty-five years Free Church minister at Golspie, N.B.—Rev. Canon H. F. Brock, vicar of Brodsworth, Yorks.—Rev. Jonathan Cadman Richardson, of Bridgetown, Barbadoes, a prominent Wesleyan minister in the West Indies.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

PARIS.—As in former years, soup is being distributed among the poor of Paris, under the auspices of Young Men's Christian Unions.

LAUSANNE.—A chapel capable of accommodating about eight hundred worshippers is to be erected at Lausanne in connection with the Free Church.

A NEW HYMN-BOOK FOR INDIA.—Rev. Dr. B. H. Badley, American Methodist missionary, of Lucknow, has compiled a hymn-book for the use of the natives of Northern India. It is printed in Roman-Urdu, and issued by the Methodist Publishing House, Lucknow. The book contains 405 hymns, including many of "Sacred Songs and Solos." The latter have been translated from the English by Rev. Isaac Fieldbrave, a native Christian missionary at Cawnpore.

CORSICA.—M. J. Brémond, who for some years has done colportage work in this island during the winter season, recently visited Sartene and Bonifacio, where he was accorded a hearty reception. As a result, much evangelical literature was put into circulation. The priests of the latter place, furious at the welcome the people had given to copies of the Bible, ordered the members of their flocks to give up the "Protestant books" on pain of excommunication. In a letter to L'Evangéliste, M. Brémond says that some of the people among whom he moved are having their eyes opened.

ICELAND.—To the north of Iceland, just outside the Arctic circle, lies the island of Grimsey, which has a population of about a hundred souls, mainly, but with difficulty, subsisting on birds and fishes. From the beginning of January to the end of August the island is icebound, and communication with Iceland itself is restricted to two or three visits a year from trading vessels. The spiritual needs of the people are ministered to by Pastor Gudmundsonn, who, in a letter which has been published in the French religious papers, says that the specially hard times of recent years seem now to be at an end.

CENTRAL AFRICA.—Letters have been received at Zanzibar from Mr. A. M. Mackay, of the Church Missionary Society, dated from Usambiro Nov. 26. He writes that a further revolution has occurred in Uganda. Kiwiwa, who after the deposition of Mwanga, was made king by the Arabs, has been deposed, and a younger brother of his set on the throne in his place. Before his deposition Kiwiwa killed with his own hand two Arabs who were the principal instigators of the expulsion of the English missionaries. Uganda is described as being in a state of civil war. Colonel Euan Smith, the British Consul-General at Zanzibar, is strenuously endeavouring to rescue the English missionaries at Mpwapwa, and has made arrangements which are calculated to ensure success.

THE NEW HEBRIDES.—Rev. J. G. Paton, the venerable New Hebrides missionary, urges the necessity of sending out more workers to these islands, the natives of which are eager to have Christian missionaries amongst them. Rev. Joseph Annand, an agent of the Canadian Presbyterian Church, has lately settled upon the island of Santo Espiritu, where heathen customs still prevail; he has been busy studying the language, and most likely is able by now freely to preach the Gospel to the people in their own tongue. Mr. Paton says that Mr. Annand is in need of two fellow-workers. There is not in the world, he thinks, a more needy, or a more inviting field, "or a field more likely to yield a richer harvest of converted souls to the Master's glory." Mr. Paton's four sons are studying for the ministry, with a view to labouring in the New Hebrides. "If I had a hundred sons, and were able," he says, "I would consecrate and educate them all for the heathen field, thus endeavouring to help in the fulfilment of Christ's command to preach the Gospel to every creature."

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—A pathetic interest attaches to the welfare of the leper community inhabiting one of these islands. Father Comardy, the Romish priest who lately went to the assistance of the devoted Father Damien, has written a letter descriptive of the state of affairs. From an extract given in Le Réveil, of Neuchâtel, we learn that while the life period of the lepers varies from five to ten years, in the great majority of cases the shorter term is not exceeded. Father Damien has seen the population replenished three times, but such are the fearful ravages of the malady upon him at present, it is not expected that he will live much longer. Father Comardy says that the repugnance which he once had for the scenes of the place has now gone; he gives the reason: "I am becoming leprous myself." He adds, heroically, "I am in the hands of my God; my mission is here, and here I remain." The poor people are building a small chapel of stone and wood, the masonic work being superintended by an Irish leper.

Cockenzie, N.B.—An appeal is made for help in building a mission hall for the fishermen of Cockenzie. A great work has been going on there, and the mission hall, built twenty-four years ago, only seats 150 people, while 400 are ready to come. £300 are still required in order that the hall may be begun. Donations will be received by Mr. WALTER THOMSON, secretary, Cockenzie, near Edinburgh.

THE EARLSWOOD ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS has accommodation for 700 patients. The present income enables the Committee to receive not more than 600. 150 applicants are earnestly seeking admission by election. Many of these must be disappointed unless funds are forthcoming. Contributions are urgently required. Ample provision made for private cases on payments regulated by the Board of Management.

REFEREES.

ROBERT BARCLAY, Esq., of Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co.'s Bank, 54, Lombard-street, London.
SAMUEL GURNEY SHEPPARD, Esq., 57, Old Broad-street, London.
MR. R. C. MORGAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London.

AFTER labouring for over 30 years among the poor of the East of London, starting and sustaining, with my own money and that of a few personal friends, several religious and philanthropic agencies their claims have now become so onerous, that I am compelled either to leave the work undone or—for the first time in my life—to make an appeal to the public for help.

This Hall was opened in 1872. In addition to the usual religious Services every night, Open-air Preaching, Temperance Meetings, Sunday Schools, Missionary Visitation, Soup Kitchens, Free Teas, Dinners, &c., Medicine and Advice by Dr. G. C. Hamilton.

A Free Night Shelter for Women was, with the assistance of the local police, opened in October last; bare seats, with fire, a cup of coffee and a slice of bread being given in the morning before departure. Thousands availed themselves of this slight accommodation until the rush became so great that the neighbours complained of it as a nuisance, and the sanitary condition being unsuitable more commodious premises have been secured at 26, Duke-street, Spitalfields, in the very midst of

THE SCENES OF THE LATE MURDERS.

Many lives have been lost entirely through the absence of these FREE SHELTERS.

EXTRACTS FROM "THE ECHO."

"It must be understood that he (Mr. Hamilton) offers no attraction whatever. He does not even provide a bed for the visitors. All he does is to allow the wretched women to come and sit there for the night. There is just a fire, some wooden benches, and the bare boards. * * * * * Yet, so great is the demand for these scanty privileges, that his assistant, when he goes to the door to give the admission tickets to those who are patiently waiting for them outside, is often carried off his legs in the eager clamour to get in. It is a different party who gather there every night, and he seldom has one twice following. * * * * * One of the saddest stories I heard there was from a nice-looking, and quite young, woman, who seemed to feel her position acutely. She had been a servant, and had been dismissed from her situation seven months ago. She had picked up a few odd jobs occasionally, but had sunk and sunk, and could only dejectedly answer the question as to how she got her living by saying, 'Just how I can.' 'Would you like to go back to service?' I enquired. 'Ah! just shouldn't I,' she replied; 'but who would take me as I am?' * * * * * What are they to do? What are we to do for them? It is an increasing class. Many come there, and honestly say they don't want charity, but employment, and could they once get that they would ask no more."

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

An article in The Gentleman's Magazine, in which "wine and music" are said to be "wedded," has elicited earnest protests from composers and others.

At a meeting in Glasgow a few days since Sir William Collins said he knew that great merchants were making enormous profits out of the drink traffic with native races.

The Session of North Church (U.P.), Langholme, introduced unfermented wine at the Sacrament without consulting the congregation, and the Annandale Presbytery has concurred.

Arrangements have been made by the Marylebone Temperance Federation for a series of addresses on various aspects of the temperance question by well-known speakers. The meetings will be held in St. Mary's Hall, Crawford-street, W., on the evening of the third Monday in every month until October.

In connection with the Birmingham North Wesleyan Mission, of which Rev. J. G. Mantle is the superintendent, a Coffee Bar and Artisans' Club, with reading, &c. rooms, have been opened close to the chapel. The Mission has for several months been reaching a large number of men, most of whom have been addicted to intemperate habits, and it has become necessary to provide a home for them in lieu of the public-house. One hundred and fifty-four men have already joined the club, total abstinence and membership with the congregation at the Mission Chapel being conditions of membership.

FOREIGN.

Prohibition has become law in the State of Pennsylvania.

The idea of prohibiting the liquor traffic, says The New York Witness, is becoming continually more popular, in spite of the various schemes resorted to to turn the minds of religious thinking men away from it. Several States are getting ready to test the question at the ballot-box.

Dr. Walter Smith, of Edinburgh, in a recent lecture on his visit to America, said he had, on one occasion, while residing in a hotel in one of the Prohibitionist States, been surprised to see the inmates eagerly purchase what seemed to be copies of the "Pilgrim's Progress," but on investigation he found that the books contained, not the noble work of the Bedford prisoner, but small flasks of brandy.

Rev. Thomas Evans, who has accompanied Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., during the greater portion of his tour through India, says that the advanced natives appear to wake up to the sad fact that strong drink is fast desolating the land. Had not the people of England taken up this question so energetically as the members of the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association in London have now done, there is no doubt but that ten years more of the progressive excise programme would result in flooding the land with a perfect deluge of drunkenness.

The World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union has appointed Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, of Indianapolis, Indiana, U.S.A., Superintendent of Temperance Work in World's and National Expositions. The White Ribbon Pavilion, arranged by her at the New Orleans Exposition, did an incalculably excellent work in acquainting the people of all sections with the modern methods of temperance reform. Mrs. Nichols will now, in the Paris Exposition, repeat this work of making the temperance reform speak winsomely to the people of all nations. A directory of friends of temperance will be kept at the Pavilion in the Paris Exposition; it will be the rendezvous of temperance people from all countries; the World's Petition will be there offered for signatures, and a vast amount of varied and useful information gained by all who go there.

DONATIONS RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1888.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

PERMANENCE of CURE.

N.B.—The work "ON CONSUMPTION," by itself (in paper covers), may be had for SIXPENCE (post free) from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E., or from the Publisher, Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The Twenty-Eighth Series of Weekly Cases is now publishing.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN"

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

REFERENCE TO CASE LXXXII. (p. 31) of APPENDIX—MR. T. W. BATES.

On reference to this case (which was one of ADVANCED CONSUMPTION, following a severe attack of pleurisy)—an interesting case, and one of perfect cure—the result of determined and praiseworthy perseverance with God's blessing—it will be seen that four years have elapsed since the patient's recovery. I have heard from him recently (Nov. 12, 1888), he says:—"I am very happy to inform you that I have been quite free from the disease ever since, and am perfectly well. My case was a very bad one. I have sent you many patients, and should like some of your books to lend with advantage."

N.B.—This testimony is useful and encouraging for patients to hope for THOROUGH PERMANENT CURE by steadfast perseverance, and by not discontinuing the treatment too early.

While speaking of this, I might mention that another old patient, E. ROWLES, of BANBURY, just writing me about a case says:—"You set me up twenty years since."

Rev. T. F. BRYANT, Wesleyan minister, of Fernbank, Pontypridd, was seriously ill about three years ago, when minister of ST. JUST, Cornwall; was for eight months under my treatment, and recovered. His case has not been published, but since then he has recommended it to many, and writing Oct. 17 for members of his charge, says:—"I am thankful that I continue hearty and well."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Thousands of Fishermen are engaged all the year round in providing OUR TABLES with fish. These men, who FOR US hazard their lives and toil through furious blasts and sleety storm (not only cut off from the comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid), may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy. THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS, carrying to the Fishermen the message of Divine mercy and love, affording relief in sickness, and cheering dull lives by their presence.

HELP WANTED FOR THE TOILERS OF THE DEEP.

NINE Mission Vessels now cruise with the Trawling Fleets, each being at once a CHURCH, DISPENSARY, LIBRARY, and CLUB. Funds are required to provide a Mission Vessel for EVERY FLEET, and for the maintenance of the HOSPITAL MISSION SHIPS Queen Victoria and Albert. The urgent necessity of these floating Hospitals is shown by the fact that during last year nearly 4,000 cases of accident and sickness were successfully treated on board the Dispensary of the Mission Vessels. WHO WILL HELP? Large or small Offerings will be thankfully acknowledged.

Watercress and Flower-Girl Mission and Brigade.

PRESIDENT .. .. .. THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.

PROPOSED HOME FOR LITTLE ORPHAN FLOWER-GIRLS.

OUR Missionaries and Bible-woman, who spend much of their time on the streets at night, and during the small hours of morning, meet with many homeless children, for whom they now ask sympathy and aid.

There are really hundreds of such, who are literally driven into the streets by the depraved men and women who have charge of them, in order to get money by selling, begging, or stealing; and while the resources thus obtained are squandered in self-indulgence, the children—who may be said to range from five to twelve years of age—are ill-used if they disappoint the expectations of their unnatural taskmasters or depraved mothers.

Some of these little ones are really orphans; others belong to struggling widows; but in any case they may be described as NOBODY'S CHILDREN; and because they inevitably yield to evil surroundings, they are classed with fallen girls, even before they are out of their childhood. To save such is now the aim of the Committee.

Already

from thirteen to sixteen years of age, have been taken from the dangers of the streets; and after training, as members of our Brigade, have gone forth into respectable situations. The Committee now ardently desire to save those girls of the same class who are of more tender years.

Suitable freehold premises in the North of London, and capable of accommodating from thirty to forty children, have been offered.

ONE THOUSAND POUNDS

will enable the Committee to complete the purchase, and to furnish the house. A Lady has promised £100 on condition that £900 is raised at once, so that no time may be lost in saving these little girls.

DONATIONS will be thankfully received and acknowledged if sent to the Office of "THE CHRISTIAN," 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.; or to Mr. J. A. GROOM, Hon. Supt., 8, Sekforde Street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

This Mission was formed in Paris during the time of the last Exhibition there, and it has proved a great and permanent blessing.

Its model is the London City Mission, both in constitution and action.

Sixteen leading Pastors, Ministers, and Laymen form its Committee, including Pastor Theodore Monod, Rev. F. Howard Gill, and Rev. R. W. McAll.

Eight devout and earnest Missionaries—seven French and one English—now carry a knowledge of the glorious Gospel to the poor of Paris; teaching from room to room and in public places, defending and circulating the Holy Scripture. So pressing is the

that the small and overpressed French Churches will contribute a third, and in some cases half, the support of new Agents.

The International Exhibition of this year opens an effective door for evangelising Paris and France.

CONTRIBUTIONS are earnestly needed to sustain and increase this testimony of Jesus.

Statements about the Society will be sent free by the Hon. Secretary for England, J. M. WEYLLAND, 31, Carlton Hill, St. John's Wood, N.W., who will gladly receive Contributions.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Professor Franz Delitzsch, of Leipzig.

We are glad and thankful to correct the remark made in our last, that a number of Salvation Army officers had been ensnared in the Agapemone delusion. We had been misinformed; although the statement was so categorically made to us, and on such authority, that we did not verify it by actual inquiry, as we admit we should have done. It appears that only two have fallen into the snare.

We are not often in accord with The Catholic Times, but we cordially agree with that journal in some remarks dealing with the recent paper on Agnosticism by Professor Huxley in The Nineteenth Century:—

> What we protest against is the facility with which Atheistical or anti-Christian articles find their way into the Reviews of the day. There is hardly a Review published (except those which are devoted to politics, or which are distinctively religious) that a Christian man, be he Protestant or Catholic, can safely place on his library table. If he does so, the chances are that he is putting before the eyes of his children, not only the most shocking blasphemies, but infidel arguments, cleverly put, and of course not answered, which may take root, spring up, and that bear fruit after their kind in years to come.

The stock defence of the search after truth cannot be urged in defence of these Reviews, for the tone changes with almost every issue, and it would be difficult, indeed, to discover from the numbers for a year the real mental attitude of the editors and proprietors.

Seldom, perhaps, has a more heartless defence been set up than that preferred by Mr. Lockwood, Q.C., on behalf of Mr. Leslie in the miserable divorce case which last week occupied the attention of Mr. Justice Butt. After his client had treacherously broken up a happy home, into which he had been received as a trusted friend, ruined a young wife, and coolly told her outraged husband (a man many years his junior) that he "had his remedy," Mr. Lockwood considered that it was "purely a matter of pounds, shillings, and pence, and must be looked upon from a common-place standpoint." But the Judge emphatically resented this, and directed the jury that they "must not be too niggardly in assessing damages," with the result that a sum of £5000 was awarded to the petitioner, who, be it said, appears to have acted most generously towards his erring wife.

The whole case affords yet another indication as to how far the stage can legitimately claim to be an exponent of morals. Certainly, if Mr. Leslie runs his theatre under that pretext, he cuts a sorry figure as its director. In defence, he urged, in effect, through his counsel, that the petitioner, after allowing his wife to go on the stage at all, might have anticipated the result. Fathers and husbands had better bear this dictum in mind, coming, as it does, from a theatrical authority. But it reflects upon the selfishness of those who patronise the theatre for their own amusement, regardless of the snares to which those who afford that amusement are inevitably exposed.

Mr. W. S. Caine's letter from India, criticising missionary methods and results in that empire, forms a serious indictment. He maintains, in brief, that the fruits of missionary effort in the past have not been at all in proportion to the advancing expenditure; that in many cases there has been decay instead of growth; and that plans of work need radical revision. As coming from an ardent friend of missions, Mr. Caine's views and animadversions ought to carry more weight than if they proceeded from an opponent or an outsider. At the same time Mr. Caine's criticisms are themselves open to remark on many points.

According to the Madrid correspondent of The Daily News, the establishment of a Spanish Anglican Bishopric in that city, as proposed by the Archbishop of Dublin, is regarded with serious misgivings by Protestants generally in Spain. He says:—

> Protestantism is now only tolerated within the walls of chapels and schools, and within the precincts of the burial-ground, but on the condition that no outward sign, inscription, or act shall be attempted that can convey to the outer world the existence of heresy. This state of things explains why the pastors and the native Protestants, except the Anglican clergymen and their very small congregations, deem that the contemplated creation of a Spanish Anglican Bishopric at Madrid is an ill-advised step, to say the least, and that it may be fraught with evil consequences for all the Protestant missions and communities in Spain.

We sincerely hope that the Archbishop will be so advised as not in any degree to jeopardise or discourage the small struggling communities scattered over the Dark Peninsula. It has been announced that he will not proceed further without first obtaining the sanction of his episcopal brethren, who will, we hope, have wisdom and grace to enable them to decide the matter aright.

The reign of superstition is not yet over. During the past year 79,483 pilgrims have visited Lourdes, the list including two cardinals, and seventy-four archbishops and bishops. These are exclusive of the large numbers of people who did not join in any public pilgrimage; 93,525 bottles of Lourdes water also have been sent all over the world, with what result we do not know. The gifts were, of course, something almost incredible, and a pile of costly buildings now testifies to the popular belief in the distempered visions of a sickly girl.

The New Testament published by a Roman Catholic firm in London, to which we recently referred, is said to have reached its third edition. It is being sold at sixpence a copy, and the publishers are advertising it with testimonals from certain Roman Catholic bishops as to its value. The Archbishop of Glasgow says, "Every Catholic ought to possess a copy,"—an opinion in which we heartily concur, as we do also in the wish of the Archbishop of Edinburgh that it may have a large circulation. Other bishops promise to do what they can to increase the circulation, and "to make your work known," so that altogether the publishers have reason to be glad that up to the present the Jesuits have not got hold of the precious book as they did of Lassere's edition of the New Testament in Paris.

A lady writes:—I wish some meetings could be arranged in London for Christians who are living in luxury, to wait on God in prayer (not to hear addresses) that He may show them how to obey his commands in respect to the inward and outward consecration, spoken of by "A Missionary," in your issue of December 28.

America has an experience of Sunday newspapers to which we have not yet attained. Lest it should be thought that those who are protesting against the innovation of a seven-day paper are crying out with no sufficient cause, let American Christians themselves be heard. We say Christians, for we are persuaded that opposition on merely humanitarian grounds will not avail to stop this abomination. The current number of Our Day, the foremost American monthly on religious and social questions, contains an address by Rev. Prof. Herrick Johnson, D.D., at the Washington Sabbath Conference, December 13, 1888, which exhaustively discusses the subject, and conclusively proves, from every point of view, the exceeding evil of the Sunday newspaper—an evil to which all Christians, and all who value the God-given day of rest, are earnestly alive.

The same number of Our Day contains a painful article on "Pagan Idols of English Make," showing that "it is not an uncommon occurrence for an East Indiaman, from Liverpool, just through the Red Sea and the shadows of Sinai, to touch at Madras and Calcutta, then lie up at Rangoon, at each wharf landing a missionary from her cabin, and unloading a crate of graven images from her hold."

One of the manifestations of true spiritual vigour in our day is a more widespread disposition than formerly prevailed to accept without qualification the New Testament ideal of Christian life and duty. All believers are priests upon whom it is incumbent to offer spiritual sacrifices unto God. The responsibility of witnessing for Christ is not confined to a class or order, but rather it accompanies the privileges of saintship. There is, in fact, no religious work or office which may not be entrusted to any believer who has the ability and grace to discharge it with acceptance to those among whom he moves. In a letter on this subject, a valued correspondent writes:—

> It is a remarkable fact that in all great revivals there has been a breaking down of all that savours of the priest system, and men have spoken as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. But I long to see the time when, not only under the special power of an exceptional movement, but as the recognised privilege of all believers, the Church shall be edified by that which every joint supplieth.

The feeling thus expressed is entertained by not a few ministers, as well as many church members. The former often have thrown upon them duties which, as teachers and pastors with hands well filled, they would gladly delegate to competent fellow-labourers.

The Bishop of Bedford has landed himself in a hornet's nest by some ill-judged remarks he dropped at a recent Y.W.C.A. meeting in the City with respect to dancing. In briefly reporting the proceedings on the occasion, we did not deem it needful to refer to the matter, as the whole thing was a bit of jocular by-play between the Bishop and Mr. W. T. Paton, and was not to be taken seriously. Seeing the wide publicity that the matter has received, and the encouragement that many lovers of promiscuous dancing will doubtless draw from the incident, we cannot but regret deeply that Bishop Billing should have been betrayed into any approval, even without serious intent, of a pastime which has been found detrimental, in so many cases, to spiritual life, to say nothing more.

It is remarkable that while the Bishop of Bedford recommends dancing, the Methodist clergy in America are urging the omission, on moral grounds, of President Harrison's inauguration ball, and many join them in their protest. They do not consider public dancing so innocent on that side the water as the Bishop seems to do on this. Their plea is that its conditions are unhygienic, and many of them immoral, and that its concomitants tend to sensuality. It is a serious matter to link a Christian institution with amusements around which modern fashions have thrown customs that lead to the weakening of moral instincts.

Sinlessness in the Flesh.

In an article, in another column, on the Faith Mission Pilgrims, we refer to the Agapemone and its disastrous heretical teachings. The book from which in that article we have quoted the last words is entitled, "Br. Prince's Journal; or, An Account of the Destruction of the Works of the Devil in the Human Soul, by the Lord Jesus Christ, through the Gospel." The foundation of Mr. Prince's heresy, with its terrible results, is the asserted eradication of sin from fallen human nature in the present life. The logical result of such a delusion is the Agapemone. And wherever the same doctrine is taught, its disciples are in danger of that pit.

It is quite true that, while the heart is loyal to Christ, this or any other false doctrine is held in check; but the danger still remains of leading others into slippery places, even though the leaders may stand themselves. But when, as in Mr. Prince's case, men blinded by spiritual pride lead souls blind by ignorance, both fall into the ditch.

It is not only necessary to be preserved from erroneous doctrine, but from holding true doctrine in an exaggerated way, and out of proportion with other truths. No denomination can claim exemption from the peril of this corruption. And it is not the worldly and pleasure-loving Christians, but souls trying to be perfect, for whom this trap is laid. 2 Peter ii. is a very necessary study at this time. We believe we are only at the beginning of troubles from this pernicious heresy.

THE OPIUM CURSE.

In a letter on this subject, Mr. Donald Matheson, chairman of the Society for the Suppression of the opium trade, Broadway Chambers, Westminster, S.W., writes:—

Chinese traders are learning that the seductive drug can be sold at large profits among the South Sea Islands, and thus it is being introduced to the certain destruction of the aboriginal races throughout the Eastern Archipelago and the Pacific, while in countries like Burmah and Australia, and wherever the Chinese emigrate, opium smoking accompanies them as a deadly virus.

From Japan we have the gratifying spectacle of a nation rising with rapid strides in civilisation, and in the acceptation of Christian truth. We ask, How is this? It is mainly in consequence of the prohibition of opium.

TOTAL PROHIBITION HAS SAVED JAPAN.

The inference is that the one and only means of preservation from the curse of opium smoking is total prohibition. Yet our Indian Government are proposing a policy in Burmah which may be described as simply childish—namely, to allow the use of opium by the Chinese in Burmah, but to prohibit its use by the Burmese themselves, as if such a distinction were possible for a single year. The only safety for Burmah and for any other country liable to this plague is in total prohibition.

The man who should have the credit of this suggestion is the leading Chinese merchant in Australia, Kwong Tai. He says, in connection with the agitation about the immigration of Chinese: "I wish to make it as clearly understood as possible, that were a law to be passed against the importation of the (poppy) juice, it would not only be an inestimable blessing bestowed upon the Chinese in general, but upon all classes of the community." He adds, after illustrating the misery produced in his native land: "Why not, then, try to stop it in this young country, before it reaches a state equal to what I have described?"

Has our British nation no reason to be deeply humbled by such a state of matters? We are sending thousands of pounds to save the millions in China now dying of famine, but we have withheld our sympathy for the millions more, dying year by year in increasing numbers, from a vice which we have ourselves introduced among them, in spite of the long-continued protestations of the Chinese Government, not to speak of the remonstrances of Lord Shaftesbury and others from 1843 onwards. Can we not at least show our regret for the past, before it is too late, by severing our Government connection with the opium traffic? In a few years more the Indian revenue from this source may be reduced to a small figure. Might not total prohibition be our policy in every country and island in the East where our influence prevails?

I commend to your readers' attention "The Christian Union," lately formed for prayer and action in this matter (104, Petherton-road, N.), as well as the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade, which has been much longer in existence. We may look with confidence to the increasing influence of Christian missions in China to assist in checking the evil, as total abstinence from opium smoking is an invariable rule on the part of all missionary societies in the admission of Chinese to church membership.

ADULT SCHOOL CONFERENCE.—A conference of friends interested in Adult Schools in London was held at Bunhill Fields on Saturday. Sixteen schools were represented, and some 300 delegates attended. At the afternoon session several interesting papers were read, bearing on the methods of teaching. In the evening it was resolved to organise an Adult School Union, with a view to the consolidation and the extension of the work throughout London. The proceedings were very hearty, and must have a potent influence on the future of this excellent movement.

A NOTE OF PRAISE.

I thank Thee for the darkness
That drew me close to Thee;
For tender care and guidance,
For perfect sympathy.

I thank Thee for the wisdom
And love that hath denied
The things that seemed so precious,
For which I often sighed.

I bless Thee for the knowledge
Thy will is always best;
In perfect acquiescence
The heart has perfect rest.

I thank Thee for the sunlight
That through the clouds has shone,
For triumph over suffering,
For every victory won.

I praise Thee for the lessons
Learned at thy blessed feet:
Of love, of faith, of patience,
And confidence most sweet.

To Thee, O gracious Saviour,
I raise the note of praise,
For goodness and for mercy
Vouchsafed me all my days.

Mary E. Bumstead.

WORKING MEN'S MISSION, NEW CUT.—At the recent anniversary meeting of the Sunday-school in connection with this Mission, it appeared from the report that much good work is being done. Many of the children remain behind from time to time to be prayed with and spoken to, while some of the elder ones have already been admitted into church fellowship.

MISS MACPHERSON'S HOMES.—A party of lads, to sail for Canada next month, attended the noon prayer-meeting at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Monday, and were commended to the Lord, and affectionately urged to make Him their trust. With lads from other institutions, Miss Macpherson hopes to send out a party of about eighty on March 14. Some earnest words were addressed to those present by Mr. T. A. Denny.

THE LATE LADY KINNAIRD.—Sir,—As a memoir of the late Dowager Lady Kinnaird is in preparation, I am authorised to say that it will be esteemed a favour if your readers will kindly send to me (addressed 2, Pall Mall East, S.W.) any letters or other interesting information relating to the late Lord and Lady Kinnaird, which might be helpful in compiling a record of the various works with which they were associated.—I remain, yours truly, W. T. Paton.

CAPE GENERAL MISSION.—On February 27 we have three Christian railway-men sailing for Cape Town. At our Eastbourne Conference the claims of South Africa touched their hearts. They offered themselves as self-supporting missionaries; situations on the Cape Government railways were procured, and now they are going out to work as stokers, and speak for Jesus. If any of your readers could send me at once some tracts or little books for them they would be most acceptable. I have several more applying for information, and hope to have a good band before long working out there at their trades and professions, and at the same time carrying the glad tidings to the heathen and colonists. W. Spencer Walton.

MR. GEORGE CLARKE has accepted an invitation to hold a lengthened mission in Ireland, which will commence in Belfast on the 24th inst., and which, it is hoped, will embrace the principal cities and towns throughout the country. A large and representative committee has been formed, including many well-known clergymen and laymen who have been long identified with home mission work. As few towns in Ireland have buildings large enough to accommodate the numbers likely to attend, the Committee have been making an effort to obtain money to purchase a moveable wooden hall, seating about 1500 people, and they earnestly trust that funds will be forthcoming for this object, as well as for the general purposes of the mission. Mr. John R. Fowler is hon. treasurer, and Rev. D. Mullan and Mr. Robert Cotter hon. secretaries. The offices of the committee are in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin.

Faith Mission Pilgrims.

SINCE our notice of Rev. C. A. Salmond's lecture on "Perfectionism" we have received a copy of "A Defence of Righteousness and True Holiness, by James F. Govan," and have carefully examined the pamphlet of the Chief Pilgrim (an odd title, by the way) on "The Holy Life," and the Reports of the Faith Mission. We have too much sympathy with the work and aims of that organisation to act the part of an unfriendly critic. The standard of Christian life generally is so low that we rejoice in every effort to lead to a fuller experience of holiness and power. But, while there is no subject on which the Church needs more exhortation, there is none which is more likely to be injured by unscriptural teaching. The most subtle errors lie close by the most spiritual truths. Let teachers of holiness be very true to the Scripture, and guard against the extremes which not only array against them those who are instructed in the Word, but which are often the beginnings of very serious falls. It is because a tendency to these extremes already appears in some of the utterances of Faith Mission Pilgrims that we venture to utter an earnest word of warning.

At the same time we should be doing them an injustice if we were to believe that they distinctly teach all that Mr. Salmond's lecture seems to suggest. They, as strongly as he, repudiate a Perfectionism which does not recognise the need of further progress.

We cordially admit that the experience the Pilgrims describe is, as to victory over sin and zeal in seeking and winning souls, very real and true, and entirely scriptural. But it is possible to draw a false inference from a true experience, and to describe the experience in language involving erroneous and dangerous doctrine. This is the mistake which we are convinced the Faith Mission Pilgrims are making. They have fallen into the error referred to in our note of February 8, and described by Mr. Meyer on page 18 of that issue. The following quotations will be sufficient proof of this, and will also show that Mr. Salmond is right in saying that they lower "the demands of God's holy and perfect law, by giving a definition to sin, which enables them to count as misfortune and infirmity what God counts guilt and corruption."

In "The Holy Life," by W. J. Govan, we read, "He can take away sin from our inmost spiritual being" (p. 9). "We find in James that every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Then, when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin. When a man feels a desire drawing towards sin, it does not say that he has sinned, but only that he is tempted" (p. 11). Similarly, Mr. J. F. Govan writes, in his "Defence of Righteousness and True Holiness," "The underlying and abiding disposition of the heart must be holy before a man can claim to be as perfectly conformed to the will of God (for him) as the inhabitants of heaven are'" (p. 4). "It is only when we have purified ourselves as He is pure that we steadily press on to perfection" (p. 5). The italics are ours.

We most seriously object to these statements, because they distinctly claim sinlessness in the flesh. The pilgrims mistake deliverance from the power of sin for deliverance from the presence of sin. The first we will not question that they habitually enjoy; the second, they think they have, but only because they have lowered the standard. In what sense is "sin taken out of a man's inmost spiritual being," if he is still conscious of "a desire drawing towards sin"? And how can one conscious of such a desire "claim to be as perfectly conformed to the will of God (for him) as the inhabitants of heaven are"? Are the inhabitants of heaven conscious of "a desire drawing towards sin"? And how can those who are conscious of such a desire say, "We have purified ourselves as He is pure"? Is He conscious of any such desire drawing towards sin? We are far from believing that the writer of the "Defence" had thought out his words to their logical conclusions.

This remarkable claim of the Faith Pilgrims is accompanied by several unwarrantable interpretations of texts of Scripture. What, for example, could be more mistaken than the interpretation given above of 1 John iii. 3? Surely, if the purity of Christ is the pattern, then the purifying process is continued while life lasts. The most exalted saint may say, not "I have purified," but "I am purifying myself, as He is pure." The cleansing from all sin in 1 John i. 7 is put side by side with the cleansing in 2 Cor. vii. 1, as though they both referred to the same thing. The blood by which the cleansing is effected is thus referred to—"the 'life'-blood of Christ in our spiritual nature cleanses us from all sin. So we must continually drink" (Holy Life, pp. 14, 17). These are very forced interpretations. The last is especially mistaken and misleading. The obvious teaching of 1 John i. 7, 8 is, that if we are walking in the light as God is in the light, and are enjoying fellowship with Him, the light reveals sin otherwise undetected by us, but it is not allowed to break our communion, because the blood cleanses us from that which the light reveals. And even then, though we are not consciously sinning, yet "if we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves." Sin is not "taken away out of a man's inmost spiritual being," even when he is enjoying unbroken fellowship with God.

These misstatements are more serious than may at first appear, and may lead to results greatly dishonouring to God. Br. Prince's Journal closes with these words: "He hath granted me according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man, so that Christ doth dwell in my heart by faith; and I, being rooted and grounded in love, am able to comprehend what is the breadth and depth, and length and height, and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, and am filled with all the fulness of God. Yes: I say it in all sobriety and seriousness, 'I am filled with all the fulness of God'"—(his own italics)—a claim not very much unlike the words quoted above. We do not say that the Faith Mission Pilgrims must go to the disastrous lengths which Br. Prince has reached; but we do say that these teachings are on the lines which lead thither; and if, as they appear to imply, they "claim" that sin is taken out of them—that they are as perfectly conformed to the will of God (for them) as the inhabitants of heaven are—that they have purified themselves as He is pure—we fear that such teachings will bear bitter fruit, if not in the writers, yet in others who may follow them out to their natural results.

We write with sincere affection for them, and cordial interest in their earnest endeavours to win souls, and we earnestly hope that they will calmly and seriously consider what we have said, and that a good work may not be marred by these serious mistakes.

SEAMEN IN RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—A large company of seamen assembled on Monday evening, last week, in the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's Chapel, in Ratcliff Highway, to hear a Gospel address from Vice-Admiral Grant. The Admiral said that as a sailor of fifty-two years experience, as one who owed his life to a sailor who had saved it at the loss of his own, he was glad to come among brother seamen, and talk to them of the Saviour's love. He then gave an earnest Gospel address, to which the men listened most attentively. Rev. G. J. Hill and Mrs. Hill also addressed the men. At the close several signed the temperance pledge; others remained to be conversed with, and expressed their desire to lead better lives.

The true evangelists of the world care for the body as well as the soul. A deputation from Dundee Social Union lately besought the Commissioners of that town to take steps towards improving the miserable dwellings in which the poor live. It is gratifying to learn that the sanitary staff are investigating the slums, and that owners who refuse to make their properties habitable will be prosecuted, and very properly. Those who work among the poor know how much need for radical reform there is in such quarters.

Dr. Pentecost says that one-third of the converts won during his present remarkable mission in Glasgow have been Church members! For all these cold, loveless years they had sat in their pews, listened to sermons, partaken of the Lord's Supper, with their souls asleep in their breasts. Ought it to be possible for this to be common in a Christian land? How could their ministers pass them through a communicant's class? It is a terrible responsibility to be a Christian minister; yet, in the light of Dr. Pentecost's information, the weight rests lightly on some shoulders.

In 1560 there were only twelve ministers in the whole of Scotland; in 1567 there were 252, who, with other agents, composed an army of 689 at the back of Knox. There was much moral grit then in the religious instructors of Scotland.

While it is said that Rev. J. McNeill, late of Edinburgh, must have made not a few enemies by his blunt, outspoken ways, he left none behind when he steamed away from the modern Athens. There is a sorrowful blank where the faithful pastor-evangelist's presence was. His induction to Regent-square Church, London, takes place February 28; Principal Rainy will conduct the service.

The Boys' Brigade is a great religious movement, using military methods for the evangelisation of boyhood. Every meeting is practically a fresh laying of Christ before the boys. THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Situation surveyed, Defects disclosed, and the Church recalled to her Lord's Instructions.

XIII.—Christ's Instructions for his Missionaries:

THE DIVINE PHILOSOPHY OF THEIR DETAILS.

THE divine beauty and deep wisdom of these instructions unfold themselves little by little to the gaze of a studious and reverent faith. Principles eternal as God's throne underlie them. They are no arbitrary enactments or temporary expedients. They inhere in the inner nature of the spiritual concerns involved. To show this is now our purpose.

THIS MISSIONARY CONSTITUTION GIVES THE NECESSARY AND APPROPRIATE FORM IN WHICH THOSE MUST BE FOUND WHO ASPIRE TO LAY THE FOUNDATIONS OF CHRIST'S SPIRITUAL EMPIRE AMONG THE NATIONS. Every spiritual truth, every thought of God, must receive an outward expression before it can be intelligible to man. While it abides in the unspoken silence in which it has ever lain in the Divine mind, it is undiscerned and inoperative. It must needs be embodied. Without creation how would his eternal power and Godhead be expressed? Without the law how would his holiness be perceived. Human government shadows forth the truth or thought of Divine rule.

So God has appointed that all moral and spiritual truths should take on to the original essence in which they consist an external form by which they become intelligible. And when God comes to express outwardly that which lies deepest in his heart, viz., the truths of redemption, He constitutes all creation tributary to it in a ministry of symbolisation. His Word utters it in human language, and forth-shadows it in type and parable. All created things have tongues to speak somewhat of its glory. Human relationships picture spiritual ties.

But all this is not enough. He incarnates it in a human life, the life of Christ, that lives and throbs before the eyes of men; that which may be looked upon and handled. This is the sacred "mystery" and brightest glory of this chiefest work of God. This gives it its strange power over men, so that even enemies admire while they blaspheme. The Lord Jesus was the perfect expression, the exactly adapted impersonation, of Jehovah's salvation. And when God would give this salvation to men, and win to it their love and homage, it must be through human lives and lips. The written record is good and indispensable, the living voice is also needful; but embodying and interpreting all must be the lives of the heralds. They must be "witnesses" as well as "ministers." They must be living samples of what the Gospel can accomplish in a human heart and life.

Is it conceivable that He would leave the outward form that these messengers should take on, to the caprices of men and the changing rulings of each succeeding age? It is incredible. He who gave creation to express his divinity and might, and Adam to represent headship, and David to give his thought of a human king, and heaven and hell to tell of his approval and his wrath, and baptism and the Lord's Supper to utter their eloquent teachings, and the pastor and deacon, with their nicely adjusted positions and duties, would He not give an outward, exact, appropriate, unchangeable form to those most honoured of the sons of men who go forth to win men to admire and believe the story of that redemption to which all else in eternity and time has but led up?

This He did. It is in this missionary charter. Here is outlined the appropriate character; here are given the suited conditions. As the Christ of Scripture stands unchanged and unchangeable for all time, so does the office of the missionary. It may not be added to or taken from. Man's wisdom may not tamper with it. The Church may have changed, and in her practices departed from this ideal; but it is changeless, and stands before us to-day to correct our folly which has brought in weakness and defeat in place of the primitive vigour and success.

Thus have we seen that this form of the missionary scheme is that with which, by the certain operation of spiritual law, it clothes itself for its proper manifestation. But more than this, IT IS EXACTLY ADJUSTED TO ACCOMPLISH ITS WORK IN DELIVERING MEN FROM THEIR BONDAGE TO THINGS SEEN AND TEMPORAL. The world in its need, as well as the truth in its manifestation, requires this. Man lives in the visible and tangible. The things at hand are potent. He sees nothing better than that they should yield to him his chief good. Therefore he eagerly pursues them. He prefers them to God. He comes into absolute bondage to them. These oppose the entrance of the Gospel, as the thick winter ice of the Polar Seas bars the way of the explorer. Their fallacy must be discovered, and deliverance wrought from this idolatry of the seen and temporal. What shall do it? What shall effectively proclaim the valuelessness of these seemingly valuable things? Will preaching alone do it? especially preaching fat and flourishing in the soil of those very things out of which men must be delivered? Never! It is, indeed, by the foolishness of preaching that God will save; but preaching whose foolishness consists, not only in the substance of the message, but in the accompanying and appropriate foolishness, to human sight, of the proclaimers—that foolishness of condition which pertains to the God-equipped missionary whose portraiture we have been studying, and which is "wiser than men," and wiser than the prudent methods on which they now send out that same Gospel, which accords not at all with the framing they give it. New wine in old skins is as unsuitable now as it was in the days of our Lord.

In the world-realm things seen and temporal crystalise chiefly about the lust of money, possessions, physical pleasures and accommodations, travel, and human society and friendship. These, perhaps, cover the entire range of those forces and appliances by which the world is used and retained, and represent the chief human refuges and pursuits of ambition. The hollowness of all these must be shown. Therefore, the Gospel herald appears before men like a messenger from the skies. He heals their bodily ills. Their attention is gained. They listen. He offers them soul health, but demands faith in the unseen, and shows how vain and transitory are all those things of earth which receive their devotion. They scrutinise this strange being. They quickly discover that He is denuded of these five chief items of human preference and pursuit. He has no purse, that is, no certain income; no scrip, that is, no possessions; no change of raiment or shoes, that is, no provision for bodily ease; a staff only, that is, without convenient appointments of travel; saluting no man by the way, that is, separated from the ordinary engrossments of human friendships.

Here is faith, strong and serene, not because it has a certain emolument, or "much goods laid up for many years," but because, stripped of all else, it daily and evidently receives its supplies from the hand of the "living Father." Here is disinterestedness and self-denial, breathing in living utterances, and patience and love wearing the lowly garb that befits them. This, THIS is intelligible to men, refined or barbarous. It is instinct with a new, unfamiliar power in their eyes. Theories they can dispose of; but before the hard fact of a life like Christ's or Paul's, or Brainerd's, or Bowen's, of Bombay, their philosophy is dumb. Here altogether is an object-lesson which the Spirit can mightily use, and without which the Gospel is like an eagle with one wing clipped.

But not only does the truth itself and the world's deep need call for this type of missionary; IT REPRESENTS THE OUTWARD FORM OF THAT DEGREE OF SPIRITUALITY WHICH MUST BE ATTAINED BEFORE ONE IS FIT FOR THIS HONORABLE AND PERILOUS VOCATION. When once that altitude of faith and self-denial is reached that enables one to take on this heavenly pattern, how great is the attainment! how unspeakable the advantage! how complete the deliverance from all that comes in on the material side of life and service! What hosts of cares troop out of the soul! How anxiety ceases to distract! How restful is the Father's bosom, and how quieting the assurance of his care! What is there to feed ambition and vain-glory? How foolish pride would look in such a dress! How the opportunities for the actings of self are minimised! Even the engrossments of social intercourse may not now detain his footsteps. He is delivered out of the responsibility of making and retaining friends in the human sense. He has ceased from commerce with the things of sight, but he tastes of the powers of the world to come.

This high standard was intended to act as a wholesome check upon men entering unadvisedly upon this service. In this also is God's wisdom seen. If the five thousand missionaries of the present day were put through the meshes of this sieve, what would be the result? How many weaklings have succeeded in securing appointment, and have gone forth only to discredit their own teachings! Had our Lord's instructions been adhered to, this could not have occurred. As has been well said, "Christ wished none but spiritual men to take this office upon themselves; and, of the spiritual men in the Church, He wished those who were strongest in the faith, and those only, to venture forth. Therefore, He set the mark to the most unearthly standard...If anyone would undertake it, He would not permit him to be ignorant of the cost, but instructed him in the measure of faith which was indispensable to the work, saying: 'Unless the things of the Spirit have prospered thus, and thus far, with thee, thou art not prepared for the work; but, if otherwise, then go thy ways, and, lo, I am with thee unto the end of the world.'"

Such a type of missionary was also necessary for the reason that THE COMMANDS OF CHRIST REQUIRED HIS PEOPLE TO BECOME AND CONTINUE POOR IN THIS WORLD'S GOODS. How then could they undertake elaborately organised and costly missionary enterprises! The Church of the first century was without wealth, and her missionaries such as Christ appointed, and she fulfilled her task of giving the Gospel to the then known world. But now the melancholy picture is before us of a Church "rich and increased in goods," with abundance of means of sending out multitudes, even upon the costly lines she has devised for herself, and yet with empty treasuries and the work limping. Comparing one church of Apostolic days with another, we find the word going forth with marvellous power from the church at Jerusalem, whose possessions had been sold and distributed to those who had need. From the Thessalonians, of whose deep poverty mention is made, "the word sounded out, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place their faith to Godward was spread abroad." But concerning the rich church at Corinth we have no such honourable record. In more modern times, witness the Moravian Church. Recently Dr. Robert N. Cust, in "The Heroic Missionary Society," says of this church:—

> They were first in the Protestant mission field, and they are one of the few associations that have obtained a footing in every one of the five portions of the world....Their agents wore the garb of poverty, and were poor in spirit also...content with the poorest and most unsavory fare, labouring with their own hands, trying not to be a burden to their own church, which was so poor that it has still to be sustained by the alms of universal Christendom; for they were doing work which no other Society could do. They literally went about as the disciples of Jesus, without scrip or change of garment, and their examples of self-denial carried the hearts of the people by storm...There were and are no Exeter Halls to trumpet their praise; in their church there are no rich men to subscribe annual thousands: and yet they have left a mark on the world which no time can efface.

It is evident that, if our Lord's ordained type of missionary again prevailed, it would sink the financial question of missions to its proper level.

We will continue this part of the subject in our next.

A MISSIONARY.

A POISONED BOOK.

A SHORT time ago we reviewed a small book published by the Religious Tract Society, entitled "St. Basil the Great on the Holy Spirit." It was one of the "Christian Classics Series," and on its general merits we described it as a timely statement of important Scripture teaching. We have since had reason to feel that part of one section is of a character which ought not to be found in a book published by an evangelical agency such as this great Society.

Shortly after it came out, the book was suppressed by the Society, presumably because in some parts of the text tradition was exalted to an equality of value with Scripture doctrine, and certain added notes showed what cannot but be regarded as Popish leanings. In a second edition, the text appeared as before, but some of the objectionable notes were omitted, "owing" it was explained, "to the controversial nature of their contents." The omitted notes actually adduced passages of Scripture as appearing to countenance the use of the sign of the cross; and stated that praying towards the East "was early adopted by the Christian Church in accordance with the wise rule which accepted all that was good and pure in the religious systems it came to supplant!"

A correspondent informs us that Rev. George Lewis, who translated the book, and supplied the notes, has for many years been closely associated with the Ritualistic party. In the choice of such an editor, the Society certainly made a great mistake. A scholar in full sympathy with the Society's work would certainly not have approvingly passed by such "traditions" as those we have mentioned and others, including "trine immersion," "anointing with oil," and the practice thus described: "We bless the water of baptism, and the anointing oil, and, what is more, the person himself who is baptized." Far from being commented upon with apparent approval, every one of these customs should, in a work bearing the imprimatur of the Religious Tract Society, have been declared to be essentially opposed to the principles and practices of pure envangelical Christianity.

The correspondent to whom we have referred, maintains that the whole of the section favouring tradition and superstitious customs is spurious, and he mentions several scholars of a past generation who were of that opinion. This point, as well as others connected with the controversy, we have submitted to Rev. R. Lovett, book editor of the Religious Tract Society, who writes in reply:—"We hold your correspondent to be quite wrong. As soon as he can adduce any competent modern authority who accepts his view, we shall be quite prepared to substantiate our contention." Mr. Lovett further states that "nineteen-twentieths of Basil's work are taken up with a beautiful, clear, and convincing exposition," and says that, if debarred from publishing a Scriptural work because it happens also to contain "some statements not in harmony with modern views, or the exact opinions of evangelical Christians of to-day," the Society's power for good may be seriously crippled. The conclusion by no means follows from the premisses. We are quite prepared to find classic works reflecting the opinions of the age in which they were written, but we hold that the Religious Tract Society, having the confidence and support of evangelical Christians, must not overlook its serious responsibility in regard to such publications. If it was deemed advisable to publish such a book as Basil's, then it ought to have been deemed necessary to point out the serious errors of the author, especially seeing that the corruptions of his time find much favour among nominal Protestants to-day. Section 66 and the notes thereon, although but a small proportion of the book, is as so much poison, spoiling the whole.

Mr. Lovett declares that there has never been a time when the Committee were more determined than at present to uphold evangelical truth in all rational and intelligent ways. This is reassuring, and we sincerely hope that the administration will so translate this determination into action that there shall not again be reason to complain at the publication of doubtful books, although they be in the form of "Christian classics." We hold that without wholesome annotations, Basil's book ought not to remain in continued circulation, and we trust the Society will see its way to defer to the timely counsel of those who well know to what sinister uses some who are Protestants in name only will be glad to put such a work when issued from such a source. Surely the honourable record of the past, and the real purpose of the Society's existence, should prompt the conclusion that the safe course is the wisest one in the case.

THE HIGHLAND ORPHANAGE.—We are desired to mention that friends wishing information regarding the Highland Orphanage, referred to in a recent issue, may obtain it from Mr. G. Walker, secretary, Ness Bank, Inverness. Clothing and eatables should be sent to Miss Macmaster, matron, at the Orphanage, Inverness; and articles for the bazaar, in July, to Mrs. Forbes of Culloden, Inverness, N.B.

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XVIII.—THE TRUE TABERNACLE.

HEBREWS viii.

THERE were three stages by which Moses, the man of God, ascended into the Mount. To the first, he went in company with Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy elders of the children of Israel, the chosen representatives of the people. "And they saw the God of Israel; and there was under his feet, as it were, a paved work of a sapphire stone, and as it were the firmament of heaven in its clearness; they saw God, and did eat and drink" (Exod. xxiv. 10). This eating and drinking was evidently a symbol of friendship and peace, based upon the shedding of the blood, which is recorded in the previous verses. We, too, may see God, and eat of the flesh and drink of the blood of the Son of Man, on the basis of that precious blood by which we have been made nigh.

When this feast was over, the voice of God called Moses up to a higher range—a further steep. He first bade the elders tarry where they were, and then, accompanied only by Joshua, he rose up, and went into the mount of God, on which the cloud brooded, steeped and bathed in the glory of the Lord, like the long bars of cloud in the brilliance of a setting sun.

But on the seventh day, even Joshua was left behind. God called unto Moses out of the cloud. And Moses went up further into the Mount, deeper and yet deeper into the heart of the burning glory. All his senses were keenly awake to the scenes around him, and entranced; each the channel for tides of rapturous enjoyment, without pain, without self-consciousness, without the paralysis of fear, as if one were borne ever onward by a tide of glory and music, each movement of which was rapture. "And Moses was in the Mount forty days and forty nights."

During that time minute instructions were given Moses concerning the Tabernacle, which was to be erected on the plains below. Those instructions are given in Exod. xxv., xxvi., xxvii., and are exceedingly minute. But nothing was left to human fancy. Beginning with the ark and its mercy-seat as the throne of God, the instructions pass through the table of shittim wood, the candlestick with its seven branches, the boards and curtains and hangings, until they end at the great brazen altar in the court of the Tabernacle, where God and the sinner met. Is not this also the path trodden by the Lord Himself, the substance of all these types, who travelled from the very bosom of the Father into the depths of the cross of Calvary, the brazen altar where he put away the sins of men?

But, in addition to the minute description thus given, there appears to have been presented to the mind of Moses some representation of the things which he was bidden to construct. It was as if the eternal realities which had dwelt for ever in the mind of God took some visible shape before his astonished vision. The Unseen became visible. The Eternal took form. A pattern was shown him. He trod the aisles of the true Tabernacle. He beheld the heavenly things themselves. And it was after this pattern that he was repeatedly urged and commanded to build. "According to all that I shew thee, after the pattern of the Tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it" (Exod. xxv. 9, 40, xxvi. 30, xxvii. 8).

THE JEWISH RITUAL DESERVES DEVOUT STUDY.—It is always interesting to study methods of religious worship, even though the rites have become obsolete, the altars deserted, and the dust of priest and votary has long since mingled in the sand of the desert, or the verdure of the glade. Who can look unmoved at the gigantic monuments which rear themselves in the dense forests of Central Mexico, the remnants of an age of giants who have passed away, giving no clue to the symbols or hieroglyphs which they have carved? Who can walk unmoved through the stone circles of Stonehenge, Keswick, or Penmaenmawr, and not fall into pensive musings.

For this reason, if for no other, the Levitical ritual would ever be possessed of intrinsic interest. When we think of the noble spirits who have bequeathed us our most precious religious records, who sang in the Psalms, and wept in the Lamentations, and flashed with the ecstasy of Messianic prediction and prophecy; and all of whom were trained in the system, of which the Tabernacle was the focus and heart; we cannot fail to examine it with holy curiosity and reverence, as if one should visit the nursery or schoolhouse where loved and honoured teachers spent their earliest years.

But there is a yet deeper interest here. For we are told that these things were made after the pattern of things in the heavens. Every knop, and tache, and curtain, and vessel, and piece of furniture had some analogue, some spiritual counterpart of which it was the rude and material expression. Through these examples and shadows there is no doubt that the ancient saints caught glimpses of the eternal realities. We infer this, because there is such a similarity between their religious life, as expressed in their writings, and our own. But if they, who had nothing but the type to guide them, were able to discern so many deep and holy lessons through its medium, how much more evidently should we be able to see the grand principles of redemption in the ancient ritual, when before us have passed the scenes of Bethlehem, Calvary, the Garden of Arimathæa, and the Ascension Mount.

Sometimes in a shadow we may see details of workmanship which otherwise in the substance we might have missed. One of the most wonderful achievements of the present day is sun-photography, by which photographs are obtained of the sun-disc, under certain conditions. And it is obviously much easier to investigate the nature of the sun from such photographs than to study it amid the unbearable glory of his presence. The eye may quietly pursue its investigations undazzled and unabashed. So we may better understand some of the details of Christ's work, as we study Leviticus, than when we stand with the Apostles amid the marvels of the cross, or with the Seer amid the supernal blaze of Apocalyptic vision.

Turn not lightly then from the Book of Leviticus, which shadows forth the Gospel; and, indeed, gives much of the terminology, the phrases and symbols, to be afterwards employed. And beneath the teaching of the same Holy Spirit as taught Moses of old, explore the sacred meanings which underlie ark and propitiatory; fine twined linen and blue; candlestick and table; altar of incense and altar of burnt-offering; basin and vessel and snuffer. Each is like a hook in the divine household, to which God has attached a sacred meaning, and which will yield up its secret to those who reverently ask, and seek, and knock. Adapting some memorable words we may say: "The invisible things of God from the construction of the Tabernacle are clearly seen, being understood by the things that were made, even his eternal purpose of redemption."

THE TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL ARE ETERNAL REALITIES.—We must not think that they are ever destined to pass away, as the Jewish types did. They cannot. They are the heavenly things themselves. They are the true, the ideal, the Divine. They have always been what they are. They always will be what they are. We may yet have to see much deeper into them; we may need to be taught them in yet higher methods of Divine communication. We may have to be lifted on to a loftier region of experience in order to comprehend them. But they are essentially and for ever settled. The granite of eternal fact. Any structure built on them shall last for ever. The Jews had only the example, we have the reality; they the picture, we the person; they the shadow, we the substance.

It is interesting to feel that Moses saw no other truth in God's revelation than what Paul saw; though to Moses it shaped itself in the Tabernacle with its layers of skins, whilst to Paul it took shape in glowing trains of splendid argument and rhetoric. But ever in the mind and thought of God there has been the same distinction between holiness and sin; ever the need of sacrifice, even unto death; ever the demand for shed life, as the only means through which the sinner may approach his holy Majesty; ever the requirements of the incense of praise, the bread of obedience, the light of an illuminated character; ever the priest to make intercession; and ever the aisles, and courts, and spaces dedicated to worship and intercourse, lofty as the fellowship between the Father and the Son.

Calvary is no novelty, nor the Priesthood, nor the work of Jesus, but the shining forth of eternal facts in the deepest nature of God. To ignore them is to miss union with God on the most fundamental laws and processes of his being. The lamb was slain before the foundation of the world, and He appears in heaven still bearing the marks of his death—"a Lamb as it had been slain."

"THE TRUE TABERNACLE."

OUR PLACE OF WORSHIP.—We must needs assemble ourselves in places of assembly with fellow Christians, but in point of fact not one of them is essential to true worship. The type has passed, and we know that the Jewish Tabernacle is no more. But what do we see? Men are trying to reproduce it, or to invent a substitute for it. Ah! how greatly they misconceive our true position. We certainly neither need the Jewish Tabernacle nor any substitute, because we are constituted priests of the heavenly tabernacle, which no human hand ever reared, and which is the meeting-place between God and all true hearts, yea, of all who love God. "Neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, shall ye worship the Father." When we meet a company of our fellow Christians we are not to think of them as the whole of those with whom we worship.

The true worshipper is one of a great festal throng, which is filling the spiritual temple. We are but part of a congregation consisting of all the sainted dead, and the believing living, in all communions, and throughout the universe of God. The prisoner, the traveller, the invalid, the mother, the nurse, all meet there in unsion, and worship God together. All are priests, and yonder is the High Priest, who has passed through the heavens and ever lives to make intercession. "A minister of the true tabernacle." How ridiculous do those appear in such an assembly who arrogate to themselves priestly pretensions, and who would make us believe that they are repeating the sacrifice of Christ. In this temple at least they are not wanted, for Christ is here to offer the sacrifice Himself.

THE TRUE PATTERN OF OUR LIFE IS SUGGESTED HERE.—We have many plans and schemes and patterns. But how often abortive and disappointing. Would that we could spend longer periods with God in the mount, getting his pattern, the pattern of our life and work. There is nothing higher for us than to build up some resemblance to God's eternal thought. All structures built on that scheme will stand for ever. And God will ever find material, more than enough, for those who dare to be singular, because they are true to the pattern which He shows on the mount. And if it be asked what that pattern is which God will show us in the mount of communion, we may reply, it is the life and character and work of Jesus Christ our Lord, the model and exemplar and pattern of all that is true, and just, and pure, and lovely, and of good report. See that thou make thy life on this pattern, which God waits to show thee in the mount. God calls thee to it, and He will enable thee to perform.

LIVERPOOL TOWN MISSION.

ALTHOUGH the public interest in the operations of the Liverpool Town Mission is much less intense than the active friends of the work would like to witness, yet there have of late been several forward movements, which have, we are glad to say, been attended by much encouragement. Mr. Thomas Matheson presided over the annual meeting a few days ago, when was stated that the Mission has now laboured for sixty years among the poor and perishing of he city. During that period, many new agencies have been started in connection with the various churches; but, as the population goes on increasing, the need for such work as that which the Mission performs seems greater than ever. The average number of missionaries in 1888 was 22; during the year 2762 indoor, and 308 outdoor meetings were held, with an aggregate attendance of over 230,000 persons. The mission schools also have flourished, and many names were taken of those who have professed conversion to God.

Mr. J. B. Bain, superintendent of the Mission, remarked upon some of the sadder features of the work. He had, he said, lived in Glasgow and in London, and in neither of these places had he seen so much wretchedness as he had found in Liverpool. Even in Spain, with which he was well acquainted, he had never seen anything approaching the misery and squalor which exists in Liverpool. Dwelling upon the methods of work, he said that in some streets the missionaries make it a point not to miss a single house. They find their way into every residence, and not in one case out of a hundred is a hearing refused. The mission-halls are fourteen in number, besides which there are seventeen other places of worship.

During the evening a large number of people rose from among the audience, and gave their religious experience, speaking in high terms of the great good of which the Mission agencies have been instrumental in their individual cases.

Dr. Saphir on the Bible.

WE are pleased to be able to state that the audiences continue to be large at Dr. Saphir's addresses in St. John's Presbyterian Church, Allen-street, Kensington. From the outline we give of these sterling discourses, our London readers will rightly judge that if they can attend as hearers they will be availing themselves of an opportunity for exceptional spiritual profit and instruction. Although the weather was most unfavourable on Thursday, last week, there was a very encouraging attendance. In the course of the opening exercises, Dr. Saphir read Ps. xxxvi. 5—12, remarking upon the mercy and majesty, loving-kindness and faithfulness of Jehovah, so beautifully extolled by the Psalmist.

The subject of the address was, "Difficulties and objections raised against the Old Testament Scriptures by persons who profess to believe in the New Testament." The first objection considered was the view of some that the God of the Old Testament is different from the God of the New: the God of the New Testament is love, full of mercy and tenderness, while the God of the Old seems to be one of wrath and anger. This objection, said Dr. Saphir, is rooted in an entire misunderstanding of the teaching of the New Testament. It is easy to think that God loves us when we think we are lovable; but when we see ourselves to be full of sin, and guilt, and pollution in the sight of God, it is difficult to believe that God is love towards us. The New Testament tells us wherein God's love consists; He "commendeth his love" toward mankind in that while we were ungodly, sinners, enemies, Christ died for us. Herein is love, not that we loved Him, but that He loved us, and gave his Son to be a propitiation for our sins. If God was nothing but the mercifulness which the world calls love, why was it necessary that there should be a propitiation at all? The New Testament, however, as well as the Old, brings forward the dark background of our lost condition, and the consequences of sin. True, we read that "the gift of God is eternal life," but what is it that precedes it? "The wages of sin is death." We also delight to read: "God so loved the world." Going on, however, we also read that He gave his Son that we "should not perish." Why, moreover, should anybody perish, unless it be that God in his holiness turns away from sin, and the very love of God reacts against sin—in fact, that God is a consuming fire against it?

The wrath of God, so distasteful at the present time, is found throughout the New Testament: "Flee from the wrath to come"; "the wrath of God abideth on him," and so on. The Old Testament conception of God is, in fact, the foundation on which the very love of God in the sacrifice of Jesus shines forth in the New Testament. The difference between the Old and New Testament consists in the arrangement of the elements of the subject. The Old Testament puts it—God is holy; you are sinful; therefore the wrath of God is upon you. Oh, that a redeemer would come to deliver you! The New Testament, on the other hand, puts it: Christ has come and redeemed you. Now understand how holy God is, that He could not save you except through the blood of Jesus Christ. And now, also, understand how great and foul a thing sin is, that it required the stupendous sacrifice of his own Son to remedy it. In Old and New Testament alike the character of God is the same.

In further remarks to establish his point, Dr. Saphir showed that the judgments of God in the old times were in postponement of the greater judgment which the New Testament brings before us; and in order to render a continuance of God's mercy possible. The New Testament reverses the order, and puts first the "acceptable year of the Lord," during which God is "reconciling the world unto Himself." Those who do not accept the Gospel invitation are "treasuring up to themselves wrath against the day of wrath." So that the God of the New Testament is a God of judgment, as well as the God of the Old. Dr. Saphir also drew attention to the fact that there are in the Old Testament many remarkable expressions of loving-kindness and tenderness and grace on the part of God, including, "I will abundantly pardon," and "with the Lord there is plenteous redemption." Further, he pointed out that the New Testament severity is not less but greater than that of the Old, for the simple reason that now the fulness of truth is come in Jesus Christ. When, in the person of Christ, God was in the world, and men crucified Him, it came out what sin was—that it is "enmity against God." The speaker added here that Old and New Testaments have together declared God unto us. "God is love" must be written over both. The Old Testament tells us who God is; the New Testament tells us what his love is. Therefore we cannot rightly interpret Christ and his work unless we read the New Testament in the light of Moses and the Prophets.

A second difficulty arises from the fact that the Old Testament deals with the nation of Israel. Dr. Saphir showed that, in choosing the people of Israel, God had a purpose of love for the world, and that the election of Israel as a nation was connected with the millenial age. In the New Testament, individuals, and not nations, are dealt with; therefore, if we would know God's mind on social subjects and matters relating to worldly government, we must go to the Old Testament. God has not cast off Israel, and when He resumes his direct governmental dealings with the world, in Christ returned, He will use his chosen nation, the affairs of which are prophetically, as well as historically, explained in the Old Testament.

The third objection is, that the Old Testament, leaving the eternal future in obscurity, contains promises only for the present life, Dr. Saphir explained on this head that God's method with Israel was not so much to tell them of the future life as to encourage spiritual communion with Himself, the Eternal. "Walk before Me," He said. It is quite true that God promised temporal prosperity to Israel, if the people would obey Him. As a Ruler He connected righteousness with happiness, and sin with misery, as the Apostle also said, "godliness hath promise of the life which now is, and of that which is to come." But this promise of prosperity was not so much for the actual present, as all God's saints in the Old Testament had to pass through deep afflictions and trials; rather was it prophetic and descriptive of the times of Messiah, when peace, abundance, and justice shall reign on earth.

Another difficulty is thus expressed: "The saints in the Old Testament are vindictive, asking God to send down judgments upon his enemies." On this point the speaker referred to the words of Paul, in quoting from the Old Testament, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink." Forgiveness of enemies, and acts of kindness and help, are taught in Moses and the Prophets. The so-called vindictive passages were not prompted by personal feeling, but from a desire for God's glory in the establishment of his kingdom in the world. There are precisely similar expressions in the New Testament, especially in the Book of Revelation. One of the passages cited was that in which the risen Lord commends the Church at Ephesus for hating the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, "which," he added, "I also hate" (Rev. ii. 6). In some concluding remarks, Dr. Saphir showed that the objection, which is in reality against the idea of God's ultimate judgment of the ungodly, applies to New as well as Old Testament, but in the light of truth and righteousness it is an objection having no force whatever.

A MISSIONARY JOURNEY

ACCORDING TO MATT. X.

IT is known to many friends that I have long been exercised as to the perpetual obligation of those methods of missionary work laid down by the Lord Jesus in Matt. x., Mark vi., and Luke ix. and x. I believe them to be still binding, and that the Church will never overtake her task of evangelising the world until she returns to these neglected instructions, in which is contained the deep wisdom of her Lord. Just now a series of articles is appearing in THE CHRISTIAN, on "The Question of the Hour:—Foreign Missions. The Situation surveyed, Defects disclosed, and the Church recalled to her Lord's Instructions," in which these methods are advocated, and objections met. I have recently taken a considerable journey, in which I have proved their practicability and preciousness, and, therefore, they are no longer a mere theory to me, but a rich experience.

THE START, AND THE DIRECTION TAKEN.

On the trip to which I refer, I was accompanied by a beloved fellow-worker, as yet unacquainted with the language. Omar, a native Christian, was also to go. Though recently converted, he has been much used in leading others to Christ. But at the moment of embarking he was arrested and temporarily imprisoned, and we were obliged to go on alone. We went by steamer to Mazagan, as we feared being followed and harassed if we started from here. We left that town at dawn, as soon as the city gate was open, one cloudy December morning. We were clad in native garments, and carried with us neither purse, nor scrip, nor change of raiment. The few pieces of silver we had left from the voyage we gave to two beggars sitting in the gate. Never before, we suppose, were they so enriched with alms. We walked on, taking the road to Morocco city, the southern capital of Morocco, deeply conscious of the gravity of our undertaking. We were pressing into a region unknown to us, where few Europeans had ever been seen, with no resources save what faith supplied, and where we knew the message we bore would provoke hostility. Indeed, it is part of the faith of Mohammedans to hate us, and any of them who kills a Christian is, they say, sure of heaven. The daily details of this trip are written in our inmost hearts, but are too lengthy to be reproduced here. Some of them would tax the credulity of those not familiar with the ways of God with those who trust Him.

FIRST EXPERIENCES.

Our first resting-place was about 11 o'clock that first morning, when we were invited to take shelter from the rain in a native khima, or tent, made of the fibrous root of the dume plant. Here we preached to a group that gathered. They asked us if we would eat, and the wife of our host, at the bidding of her lord, hasted to knead and bake a loaf of coarse bread, which they set before us hot, and with butter. We ate with hearts subdued by this early token of the Lord's presence. The brother with me wept for joy, saying never before was bread so sweet to his taste, for never before had he eaten direct from God's hand. Here the woman who prepared us food brought us her child, recently become blind through small-pox, begging us to heal it, and saying she had seen in a vision, the night before, one coming to her, who laid his hands on the child's head, calling on God. We dared not do otherwise than pray over it, which we did with much emotion. It did not please the Lord to show us an instantaneous result, but we confidently believe the answer was not long delayed.

FASTING AND BLESSING.

The question of food was one to my mind of great practical moment. Can missionaries indeed now travel and preach without carrying supplies, in faith of that word, "Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses, nor scrip (wallet) for your journey...for the workman is worthy of his meat" (Matt. x. 9, 10). We believed they could, but wished to prove it by experience, which we abundantly did, amid a strange and fanatical people, whose very Koran forbade them to be friends with us, and among whom we might well expect, humanly speaking, to starve, if indeed we escaped without violence. To the praise of our faithful Lord we can testify that not one of the twenty-one days we were journeying did we lie down without having eaten food, although several days the Lord permitted us to fast until well on in the day, and two or three times until night. But on those occasions we seemed inwardly sustained, and suffered no inconvenience and never grew hungry; although when at home the delay of an hour in taking food would produce faintness. These days of such evidently appointed fasting were generally our best days spiritually, in which prayer and praise abounded, and we learned that "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

We found the more we preached the more regularly and certainly our needs were supplied. If our zeal in speaking for Christ relaxed supplies grew scant. Almost invariably it was those to whom we testified who gave to us. Let no one think we asked food of any but God. We went forth in the consciousness of being the commissioned ones of Heaven, who had untold spiritual treasure to give, knowing it was a small thing that we should receive the little bread that fed the body, and the little space its weariness required for rest. We knew also that they who received us received Christ and Him that sent Him, and brought a sure reward thereby to themselves.

THE LORD PROVIDES.

One morning, having walked since dawn through a desolate region for more than twenty miles, it being now noon, and having eaten nothing, we prayed for food. Immediately thereafter we met a tall native (the first one, I think, we had seen in the road that day) who saluted us, and though knowing nothing of our need, he at once let down a basket from his shoulder, disclosed a dish of hot kous-kous, and bade us eat. Another day at noon, as we rested beneath a tree, and in the very act of praying for food, having eaten nothing, a man from a passing caravan invited us to share with him a loaf of excellent bread. Several times we arrived at villages or houses where, the moment we came in, there was brought us hot food, just "that instant" dished up, being, in God's knowledge, though not in theirs, for his weary servants. God's "instants" are instructive. Note this (Luke ii. 38).

To our surprise we were everywhere received into their mosques, over whose thresholds we had never known Christians to pass. Here we preached the Gospel to the foukies, or learned men, and all others who came. About fifteen nights out of the twenty-one we slept in mosques. Sometimes we were speaking on towards midnight to eager listeners. But many opposed and blasphemed. Occasionally we were treated as dogs, and put out of the mosques and houses, but never at night when we needed shelter.

NARROW ESCAPES.

It was far from being a holiday trip, for, besides our frequent fastings, and eating the coarsest food, with scarcely even a taste of meat, or eggs, or milk, we were four different times in imminent danger from clubs, knives, and stones, with which we were threatened Soaking rains were frequent. Once we were taken by a soldier before a governor, who ordered us to be taken to the Basha, but we escaped, and fled from the city at sunset, sleeping that night on the cobble stones that paved the entrance to an enclosed village. Twice we were detained by wicked men, who threatened us with weapons and stones. In one of these instances we were driven by "follows of the baser sort," at nightfall, into a filthy enclosure, open to the rain that was falling, and exposed to the keen winds from the snows that covered the Atlas mountains near by. We preached Christ to a group that gathered about us, and presently one of them took us into his own house, turning a colt and donkey out to make the needed room. He gave us food for our bodies, but better still for our souls, for he said, "Tell me again those precious words you spoke." We thought of Paul and Silas and the jailer at Philippi. This night a little straw made us an unusually comfortable bed, for we rarely slept save on the ground, sometimes on a piece of native matting, and sometimes awaking to find the rain flooding the place where we were lying.

HEALED THROUGH PRAYER.

After leaving Morocco city, and journeying west towards home, we had to ford many icy streams from the Atlas snows. Yet never once did we take cold. We both had perfect health the entire trip, after getting under way, though Satan made a determined onslaught to turn us back through a stubborn sick headache with which I started, and which hung on for two days. But the Lord healed me of that in answer to prayer, as also He did, the night before we left Mazagan, of a troublesome hard swelling in the throat, which I had long had, and which would not yield to remedies. That night I asked the Lord to remove it as an earnest of his approval of our journey. In the morning there was no trace of it. It never returned. Neither did the headache after it was healed, notwithstanding fasting, exposure, sleeplessness, and the excitement of our oft-recurring perils. I mention this to the praise of God's grace. I also confidently expect that those who go out thus, taking God at his word, will find that He will give them "boldness, by stretching forth his hand to heal" (Acts iv. 29, 30). "Heal the sick" is part of the marching orders of Matt. x., and, according to Mark xvi., part of the heritage of those who "believe." It only awaits faith and obedience.

In crossing a swift stream I lost one of my native shoes. So the latter half of the journey was slowly and rather painfully made, for everywhere the road was strewn with stones. However, the circumstance wrought patience, and showed us that the Lord would not have us push on rapidly, but pause and preach in every possible place. These few trials I mention were the richest part of our experience.

THE WISDOM OF GOD'S METHODS.

The Divine wisdom of the directions of Matt. x. impressed us daily. Among the points of advantage, I may mention our freedom from the cares attending travel with tents and baggage, which so wear upon one's patience and minimise one's time and opportunities for speaking; the ready access we had to the people, the way in which their hearts seemed disposed to attend to our message by their ministering to our temporal wants; the interest and surprise with which they listened when we told how we were travelling, and how the Lord supplied us; the lessons in kindness and patience we learned from God's ways with us; the advantage of being, as to all our circumstances, pliant in his hands, that He might mould and discipline us at his will; the consciousness of illustrating before the people, to some extent, the faith, self-denial, and disinterestedness which the Gospel we preached requires: these, and many other things, showed us the infinite wisdom and value of Christ's own methods in Matt. x. How a return to them would sift out the weak and unsuitable from among proposing missionaries, and secure a Gideon's band in faith and power.

Thinking over this memorable trip, there are

SOME DETAILS OF THRILLING INTEREST

I should like to reproduce, but time and space fail. Only the importance of the subject has led me to write as much at length as I have. I will only add that we sought in everything to conform to our Lord's instructions in Matt. x. We sought not the great, but asked after "the worthy," and abode with them; we fled when persecuted; when brought before rulers on two occasions we did not premeditate, but were given a message at the time; we were as sheep among wolves, yet we feared not the face of men.

Thousands of unmarried Christian men could go forth as missionaries upon these simple and effective methods. A small sum ($100, or £20 a year, per head, at most) would sustain them, living as natives, until they knew the language. After that the question of support sinks almost out of sight, where it belongs, and where it was in Apostolic times. Doubtless the difficulties and hardships may be great, but the joy and reward will also be found to be unspeakable.

The field here in Southern Morocco is vast and virtually untouched. Right here in Mogador can be learned the Arabic tongue, also the Shillah, the language of the Mohammedan Berbers, called Sous and Shluhs, who fill the Atlas Mountains, and from whom most of our converts have been won; also the language of the blacks of the Western Soudan can be studied here. Thus workers would be equipped to travel and preach in any of the vast regions in which these three tongues are spoken.

PAST AND FUTURE.

To those who have not had tidings of our work since we came from Tangier, now nearly nine months ago, I may mention that we have had great blessing; numbers have renounced Mohammedanism, and, showing evidence of faith in Christ, have been baptized. But persecution has seemingly made sad havoc among them. Many are scattered in other places, some, thank God, devoting themselves exclusively to preaching the word, going on the methods in Matt. x. Some still here fear to continue attending our meeting for converts and inquirers, which, until now, we have held nightly for months. A few come with all boldness. Some have caused us deep sorrow. Everything points to its being God's will that we should continually travel and preach. We hope to start out again soon.

As for years past we still continue to prove God's faithfulness in providing for our temporal needs. Though not working as the representative of any society, and though without human promise or prospect of support, we lack no good thing. God so interweaves trial and deliverance, discipline and consolation, that the outcome is ceaseless blessing. We feel we have learned a new and precious lesson of faith in trusting our Lord, not only for funds to be sent us, from time to time, but (which we found at first far harder, and in its issue far richer) waiting on Him in our journeyings, above spoken of, to give us, meal by meal, the food we needed, and places wherein nightly to lay our heads, as well as openings for service.

Mogador, Morocco. E. F. BALDWIN.

P.S.—Just as we are sending this off we are gladdened by full tidings from two beloved native brethren who were, three months ago, set apart with prayer and fasting to go forth as Matt. x. missionaries. They have been travelling since, without purse or scrip, in remote and dangerous parts, and experiencing hatred, rejection, and even severe stoning. But they write in the strength and joy of God, and tell of eager attention, of many believing, and of having baptized forty-five men, including some "honourable" ones. They are pressing on to other towns and tribes. Praise with us. Is not this in confirmation of these Matt. x. methods?

The New Balolo Mission.

BY MRS. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

IT is about four years since our Livingstone Inland Mission was transferred to the management of the American Baptist Missionary Union of Boston. At the time of this change the Mission had extended into the interior for seven hundred miles, a chain of stations from the coast to the Equator had been planted, and the missionaries were working in three different languages. The undertaking had become so important and difficult a one that we thought it better that it should be under the care of a large Society. We have carried on an auxiliary ever since, but have had no direct responsibilities on the Congo.

We are now, however, about to resume such. The Boston Board have not been able to extend the Mission further into the interior, nor up any of the large tributary rivers. This has been a matter of regret both to them and to us, though quite unavoidable. They very properly wished to send out American missionaries, as the Mission is now sustained by the American churches. But the supply of volunteers has been scarcely sufficient to sustain the seven stations already planted, and there has been no strength to spare for extension. Yet the circumstances loudly call for an advance. Our last station at Equatorville was on the edge of a large nation of ten or twelve millions of people speaking one and the same language.

THE BALOLO.

No tongue previously learned had so wide a range, and the climate was healthy. Subsequent discovery had revealed six large rivers—the Lulanga, Lopori, Maringa, Ikelemba, Juapa, and Bosira rivers, all running through this country and opening it up in every direction. The chiefs were begging for teachers to be sent to them. No other Society seemed likely to enter on the field, and it was the very region at which our old L.I.M. had always aimed—the extensive healthy and populous plateau of Central Africa.

Mr. John McKittrick, who has for some years worked and travelled among these people and acquired their language, returned on furlough about a year ago. He earnestly echoed in our ears the cry of the Balolo, "Come over and help us," and our hearts yearned to respond. We knew the friends of Africa in England were willing to do all they could for the Dark Continent. We knew many of our dear students were longing to join the ranks of those already there. We knew that no tongue could describe the deep need of Divine revelation existing in Central Africa, and felt that we ought, if possible, to respond to the cry. Hence, when our dear friend, Dr. Murdoch, the secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union was in England last summer attending the Missionary Convention, we consulted him on the subject. He quite agreed with us that it would probably tend to the more rapid extension of the Mission, if our auxiliary were to be henceforth modified in character, and, instead of rendering mere financial assistance, were to give also active co-operation in the field. It was resolved that it should in future be quasi-independent, that is manned and managed as well as supported from England, though acting in perfect harmony and co-operation with the American Parent Mission, and that it should undertake the definite task of introducing the Gospel among the Balolo.

The new Mission will be like the old Livingstone Inland Mission, undenominational in character. Members of any of the evangelical churches will be welcomed as workers in it. It will offer no attractions in the way of good salaries or other earthly advantages. It will be a work of faith and labour of love, seeking the co-operation only of men and women willing to endure hardness, and if need be to lay down their lives in Africa for Christ's sake and the Gospels. It will be managed, as the original mission was, by the Directors for the time being of the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions, assisted by a council at home, and by a standing committee of senior missionaries in Africa. Dr. Guinness will act as secretary of the Mission, and Sir Arthur Blackwood as treasurer. Rev. Archibald G. Brown, Messrs. Hill, Seagram, Kennedy, Badenoch, Richard Cory, and Dr. Macrae, form the present council.

A steamer for the navigation of the tributary rivers has been promised to the Mission by the Y.M.C.A.'s of Ireland, and especially of Belfast; and the Henry Reed steamer, belonging to the old Mission, has been kindly lent for a year by the Boston Board while the new vessel is being built, carried up in sections and reconstructed.

It is hoped that in the course of the dry season this summer two stations on the Lolanga and Maringa rivers will be established.

THE FIRST PARTY

of missionaries will sail on March 28, and will consist of six or eight. Mr. John McKittrick will be the leader, as being the only one who has had experience in the country, and who knows the language. Two other members of the party have, however, had some years of missionary experience elsewhere, and all are well adapted for a pioneer expedition in a new country. Prior to the sailing of this party, at which we shall be glad to welcome any of our friends, is to take place. It is one in which we feel a special interest. Our dear niece, Miss Frances Theodora Fooks, who has for five years been working in Beyrout and Damascus, is to be married to Mr. John McKittrick, the leader of the new expedition to this Upper Congo mission field. The ceremony will take place at the East London Tabernacle, Burdett-road, Bow, E., at 2 p.m., on Thursday next, Feb. 28. A farewell meeting will be held in the same place at 7·30 p.m., when Mr. Archibald G. Brown will give a parting charge to twelve missionaries, about to leave for the regions beyond, including the bride and bridegroom, who will be present.

A MISSIONARY WEDDING,

There is no connection, save that of warm sympathy, between this Mission and that contemplated by our friend Mr. Graham Wilmot Brooke in the Soudan. There was a slight confusion in last week's notice of a recent meeting in Glasgow, at which Mr. Brooke spoke. He has been on the Upper Congo for a time, but only with a view of entering the Soudan by that route. He is now going with the Church Missionary Society by the Niger route, as an independent pioneer, and is sailing shortly. We hope he will be at the wedding, as also Mr. F. S. Arnott, who is starting soon on his return journey across Africa to the country of the Garenganze.

May God inspire much intercession, and draw out much sympathy for all these devoted young workers, gladly giving themselves to poor Africa. Nowhere on the face of the globe is such moral gloom to be found as in the lost Continent. We are debtors to its dark sons and daughters to tell them of the Redeemer! If we cannot go ourselves, let us bid a hearty God-speed to those who can—those who are willing to resign everything and risk life itself that they may preach Christ to the perishing. There are hundreds who know and love his blessed name on the Lower Congo already. The blood of the martyrs has been the seed of the Church, there as elsewhere. Soon may there be hundreds more on the Upper Congo, and especially among the ten millions of Balololand.

LONDON FEMALE PENITENTIARY.—The new Probational Home, 21, Old Ford-road (near Bethnal Green Museum), will in future be open daily for the reception of applicants. No case will, after this notice, be received at the Training Home. A written application must be made prior to the admission of country cases.

SERMON-STRUCTURE.

By ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D.

There are two principles which lie at the very foundation of preaching, of sermon-making. For lack of better terms, let us call them the Germinal and the Terminal. They pertain respectively to the starting-point and the goal.

The "germinal" law concerns the origin of a sermon. Preaching, when normal, is the simple unfolding of a Scripture germ, or a "Thus saith the Lord." A thorough search into the Word, comparing spiritual things with spiritual, enables the thinker, under guidance of the Holy Spirit, to think God's thoughts after God. He buries himself in the truth, and he gets at the mind of God; he buries this germ in his own heart, and meditation causes germination. The seed sprouts, sends roots downward, and shoots upward. The Word, born of God, is born again of man, and becomes flesh, taking a body in the preacher's thought, love, and speech. It is of the utmost importance that the right beginning be made. In a tree the expanse of the branches corresponds to the expanse of the roots; and so the power of impression determines the power of expression.

Thus preaching has a Divine genesis; it begins in a brooding process, in which the Spirit of God hovers over the spirit of man, brings order out of chaos, and light out of darkness. Preaching that has such a genesis ends in an apocalypse of Jesus Christ, a revelation of truth which fits a man to become God's ambassador and messenger to the churches.

How far such preaching is from a mere intellectual plant, branching into logic and blooming into rhetoric, will appear without argument. And how, before such a burning bush, aglow with a mystic spiritual flame, the hearer will instinctively incline to remove his critical sandals will likewise be obvious. This germinal law demands of the preacher that he get his message from God, and wait till he does; and then deliver it, just as far as he may even in words which are God-given.

This is the true preparation for preaching, scriptural, spiritual. That preacher risks everything who learns to do his work easily. He will mistake facility of thought and fluency of diction for pulpit power, and put the homiletic faculty in place of the intellect and tongue illumined and anointed of the Holy One. The stream rises no higher than the spring, and no preaching will exhibit more power than it first receives from above. When a man gets his theme and the essentials of its treatment from God's Word and Spirit, when the truth has first found its way to the deepest soul of the preacher, then may he hope to spread it over the whole man, applying it to intellect, sensibility, affection, conscience, and will.

The "terminal" law demands a certain end, or terminus, to be kept in view. A sermon is a speech having a definite aim, a result on the convictions, affections, resolutions of the hearer. In pulpit oratory either of three elements may control: the text, the subject, or the object. When the text rules, the result is an exposition or exegesis; when the subject controls, an essay or discourse; when the object to be attained is steadily kept in view, and controls the disposition of the parts and the expression and delivery, we get properly a sermon. For this reason it would seem obvious that the first thing to be fixed, in framing the normal sermon, is therefore the end or result to be reached; then we are ready to choose the best subject to reach the object, and the best text to develop the subject. To start with proposing to treat a subject risks accommodating the text to the theme rather than the theme to the text; and sometimes, the notion which is the germ of the sermon being found in the preacher's brain rather than in the mind of God, begets a use of Scripture so foreign to its original purport and purpose that it becomes a caricature. To start with a text, which seems attractive or effective, usually begets simply an exposition more or less instructive and profitable; and if, in the course of its treatment, no other end is held before us, whatever ingenuity and originality may be shown in interpretation, the preacher will not probably grapple powerfully with the hearer's conscience and will, as in the most energetic and effective oratory.

Preachers who have wielded most spiritual power, however crude and defective their methods, are always seeking after souls; they may set at defiance all homiletical and even grammatical laws; but, whether consciously or unconsciously, there has been a definite purpose, evolved, perhaps, in the process of making or preaching the sermon, and this reacts upon the product. Many a discourse which began in the violation of this fundamental law of the sermon has been remodelled as it was wrought. He who started with a topic or a text ends with an all-engrossing object—the saving or sanctifying of souls, the only way in which any preacher can produce the ideal sermon.

If we are to have a new era of power in preaching, we must have a more definite result, toward which all else moves. An essay may be ingenious, and an exposition original, and yet lack oratorical power; as Whately said, the man "aims at nothing—and hits it." Above all others, the preacher needs the power of an engrossing purpose. Then there will no longer be point in Betterton's epigram to the Bishop of London: "You, in the pulpit, tell a story; we, on the stage, show facts."

Could these germinal and terminal laws govern, they would revolutionise modern preaching. When the "preachers of the Gospel" are content to preach the Gospel; when Christ crucified is their theme, and is treated "in a crucified style"; when the germ of every sermon is some seed thought of God that has found root in the heart and borne fruit in the speech; when the aim of every sermon is to glorify Christ in saving and sanctifying souls, and toward that end every thought, word, gesture converge, results will follow, of which even Pentecost was but a forecast and foretaste.

In the assault on Fort Pulaski, in that first volley of seventy guns, every ball struck within a circle, whose radius was six feet! It was vain to resist such a fire, and down came the flag! Were our guns pointed in one direction, and shot upon shot hurled, heavy and hot, against the walls of Satan's citadel, many a flag would be hauled down. There is no promise that man's word shall not fail; but God's Word "shall not return unto Him void" (Isa. lv. 11).

We must have a thoroughly evangelical, if we are to have a thoroughly evangelistic, pulpit. Only those charms are legitimate in the preacher that make the cross effective. The Gospel is nullified by the admixture of human philosophy, poetry, rhetoric, and apologetics; incongruous material makes brittleness. That preaching that corrupts and adulterates God's Gospel with man's wisdom lacks consistency and coherence, and is doomed to practical failure. "I preached philosophy, and men applauded: I preached Christ, and men repented."

Even the philosophy of redemption we are not called upon to preach, but rather the facts, declaring the truth on the authority of a "Thus saith the Lord." To let down God's Word for comparison and competition with systems of human teaching sacrifices this unique authority. The primary test of human systems is found in their appeal to my reason and conscience; the primary appeal of the Gospel is found in the fact that God speaks. The philosophy of his scheme of salvation is too deep for the human mind: even the angels desire to look into the deep things of God. If Nicodemus still asks "How" or "Why" these things are so, God only answers by solemn and emphatic repetition: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee." So must we dare to preach, with authority, as ambassadors of God. There has never been an era of pulpit power, except with such conditions, and there never will be.

Many are the trained ministers of the Gospel who never yet learned either the germinal or terminal law of the sermon. The preaching did not begin in God, and it does not end in the salvation of men. But he who will not preach until he gets his message from God, and who tarries till he gets the power of God to accompany the message, will set before him and keep before him the absorbing purpose to save the lost. This will become tension and elasticity to his bow, and barb and feather to his arrow. He may not hear the shouts of an admiring multitude that applaud the grace of the archer, but he will hear the groans of the wounded which are the supreme test of the archer's skill!

MRS. G. BREALEY.

Dear Sir,—Since coming to Torquay in October last, we have been busily occupied in house-to-house visitation in some of the worst districts, and speaking to individuals whom we have casually met, giving tracts, &c. Many interesting cases have come across us. I am now asked to interest myself specially in the work among fallen women. I am chiefly directing my efforts to this class, and have been somewhat encouraged.

While thanking many friends for their kind sympathy and prayers, when passing through deep trials, I would now ask your readers for their help in prayer for renewed strength. Tracts or books suitable for this class of work would be most acceptable, or a little to enable me to procure such, and to help needy cases in visiting.—Yours faithfully,

(Mrs.) M. A. Brealey,
Late of the Blackdown Hills.

THE CHRISTIAN MEDICAL MISSION, Southend, Essex, has just issued its annual statement, showing that the number of cases attended to during the four years of its existence have made a total of 15,210. The Southend Standard of the 7th instant says:—"The Mission occupies premier position among the institutions of Southend." The honorary treasurer is Mr. T. M. Eastwood, Waltham Villa, Southend.

DEACON ABRAHAM.—We learn with much regret that the local authorities have declared their intention of dispersing the orphans under Deacon Abraham's care at Oroomiah, Persia. A petition on his behalf has been presented by ministers and delegates of the Nestorian Churches, but apparently without effect. Our readers are desired to unite in earnest prayer to God that this calamity to the orphan boys and girls may be averted. Further particulars may be had from Mr. Henry Tasker, Brookside, Andover, Hants.

REV. JOHN JONES,

Missionary in Maré, South Seas.

THE subject of this sketch is one of the most remarkable missionaries of modern times—remarkable for his call to the work, for his preparation for it, for his success in it, and for his expulsion from it by the French.

He was born at Sleigh Sinton, near Malvern, in 1829. Blessed with pious parents, he grew up in an atmosphere of earnest, practical religion. His father was one of the Puritan type, severely strict in the religious training of his children, diligent in his business, enthusiastic in Sunday-school work, and an earnest village preacher. His son John often accompanied him on Sunday nights to the preaching stations, where the seed was sown that brought forth such rich fruit in after years. He was sent to the village school, where his father declared there was more playing than learning; so at the age of nine years he was put where he could not play, viz., to learn the paternal business of shoe-making.

The whole family were taught to make some sacrifice for the foreign mission cause, such as taking their tea without sugar, &c., also by making, during spare time, little things which were sold, and the proceeds put into the missionary box; their ambition was to increase the sum every year. An appeal from the late Dr. Thomas Boaz, of Calcutta, who preached in their village chapel, led the young John to determine to be a missionary to the heathen; but, like the great missionary, Carey, he found that the way from shoe shop to college was by no means an easy one. He was educated for the work first by Rev. William Legge, of Fakenham, afterwards at the seminary, under the care of Rev. John Frost, at Cotton End. He was ordained at the City-road Chapel, London, in 1853, and sailed for the South Seas, accompanied by Rev. S. M. Creagh and Mrs. Creagh, arriving at Maré in the following year.

The natives were then wild savages and cannibals. In 1851 they captured the cutter Lucy Anne, and massacred the crew. In 1843 they had attempted to capture the Brigand, of China, and, although driven off, they killed seventeen of the crew. Two years before that, they cut off a boat's crew of six men belonging to the brig Martha, of Sydney. They were regarded as the most fierce and treacherous cannibals in Western Polynesia. It was amongst these people that Mr. Jones and his wife, together with Mr. and Mrs. Creagh, landed in 1854, and commenced a work that was destined to be crowned with glorious success. From these cannibals there were to go forth the ablest, the most energetic, and the most successful pioneer evangelists in Western Polynesia.

This young couple began wisely by devoting most of their time to the young. Mrs. Jones had been trained in London as a public teacher, and she very soon succeeded in commencing a boarding school, whilst Mr. Jones started an industrial school, adding soon afterwards a seminary for training native teachers and pastors. The influence of these schools soon began to be felt, not only throughout Maré, but in the regions beyond. These energetic cannibals, so well known and so greatly feared in Western Polynesia, became, under the influence of the blessed Gospel of peace and light and life, enthusiastic pioneer evangelists, daring sailors, faithful and intelligent servants in the Australian colonies and New Caledonia. Better houses were built, cattle and horses introduced, and the appliances of civilised life were obtained by the people. Traders arrived from New Caledonia and from Sydney. A commodious and beautiful church began to raise its substantial form and tower above the houses of the people. There was a growing trade, and a growing education, and a growing love of peace and progress, when, ten years after the arrival of Mr. Jones, the French took possession of the Loyalty group, and were closely followed by the priests. Then troubles began, first at Lifu and Urea, and then at Maré.

The plan adopted by the priests, seeing that they could not make any impression upon those who had embraced Protestantism, was to persuade the chiefs who still remained heathen, some of whom were tributaries of Naisilin, the great Protestant chief, that if they would accept Roman Catholicism the French Government would secure their independence, and place all of them above the Protestant chief. The old feuds and war spirit were revived. The few remaining heathen were led by the priests, under assurance of help from the secular arm at New Caledonia. Raids were made upon the plantations of the Protestants to provoke them to war, so that the French soldiers might be called in. But the Christian chief, Naisilin, by ordering forbearance, proved himself a shrewd man as he had formerly been a brave warrior.

The villages were next attacked, and some of the people killed; even Naisilin had then difficulty in restraining his people from punishing the offenders. They felt, however, that it was better to bear these insults and injuries than give the priests the opportunity they sought of appealing to the Governor of New Caledonia for soldiers to protect them and their followers, as they had done on the other islands. Naisilin himself appealed to the Governor. After several deputations and much writing and long-suffering and anxious waiting, a court of inquiry was at length appointed by the Governor of New Caledonia, in obedience to orders from the Imperial Government in France. The result was disappointing and discouraging in the extreme. As at Lifu when Dr. Samuel McFarlane was there, so at Maré—the innocent were punished, and the guilty cleared.

The priests declared that English missionaries Anglicised the people; consequently, the English missionaries came to be regarded by the French as political enemies of France. The idea was fostered in the minds of the authorities by the priests, who maintained that the best way to make the natives French is to make them Roman Catholic. The Government care little about the religion of the natives, but they dislike English influence, and play into the hands of the priests to destroy it.

Finding that there was no hope of the priests being able to gain any influence over the Protestants, and that Mr. Jones's influence seemed rather to increase than otherwise by the methods employed to destroy it, the Government determined to establish a Protestant State church. A French pastor was taken to Maré as the Government missionary. Mr. Jones was virtually deposed, and the Protestant natives were told to look to the French pastor as their guide and director in religion. The natives were too good Nonconformists to be driven like sheep by the Government in religious matters. They said, "We will obey you in all things secular, but we will not have this man to reign over us in spiritual things." The French pastor occupied the fine new church that Mr. Jones had built (see picture and article in the Chronicle of the London Missionary Society, October, 1888), also the village chapels; but wherever this French pastor went to preach, the people stayed away. This led to the well-known persecutions of late years, which are a disgrace to the Government of France. Chiefs and native pastors have been banished, and ultimately Mr. Jones himself expelled from the island at an hour's notice—driven from his home and people where he had spent thirty-four years of his life.

Deputations from time to time have laid the matter before our Government, by whom strong representations have been made to the French Government. A Blue Book dealing with the whole question was presented to the House of Commons just before the prorogation of Parliament. It may be had through any bookseller for eightpence-halfpenny. It shows clearly that Mr. Jones has been the victim of high-handed injustice. He has, however, left behind him what the French cannot stamp out—the Word of God in the homes of the people, and the love of Christ in their hearts. They have been well trained, and are quite capable of taking care of themselves in religious matters.

Mr. Jones is now carrying through the press a Concordance of the New Testament in the Maré language, which has been prepared by Miss F. E. Hall, formerly of Brisbane, Australia, a lady who was so much interested in the natives from Maré who were working in Queensland, that she acquired their language, and prepared this work for their benefit. The French will find that at Maré, as elsewhere, natives are not to be won by persecution, and that those who have been trained like the people of Maré will suffer rather than submit to the civil power in matters of religious faith.

The following is an extract from a letter recently written to Mr. Jones by a young man, a native of Maré, who has been trained for the ministry:—

I will also tell you about the work of God here on Maré. We have now two places up in the bush for the gathering together of the church, and for conferring together about the work of Jesus. One is in the district of Tuo. Waiwe, the elder, began there on August 5, to commemorate the death of Jesus. The other place is here in the north, called Taponi Baianis Hollow. Waiwe, the pastor, commemorated the death of Jesus there also on August 12. There was a very great gathering of the church at those two places.

Some of the persons from the Government church came and expressed their repentance before the pastors and the church; but they did not receive them into fellowship. That was the decision the servants of the Lord came to after deliberation. They added also that if their desire for admittance to the church should prove to be very earnest and sincere, then it might be possible to receive them.

It is delightful to see how the work of God grows since the servants of the Lord commenced the setting up of the church in the bush.* The church members cease not to exhort one another to be stedfast and to cleave unto the Word of God. All the pastors, too, are very persevering in teaching the young to learn the Scriptures.

* The French having driven the people out of their own church they have now apparently fixed upon two central spots in the interior where the pastors and church members can gather to carry on church work out in the open air or in booths constructed for the occasion. It appears that at present there is a lull in the French persecution of the natives of Maré, and that the people are now allowed to gather together for worship. If the people are thus left to themselves unmolested they will be able to carry on their church work without any assistance from European missionaries.

RUSSIAN PRISONERS.

Dear Sir,—The Lord has restored me to a measure of health, and in consideration of the great and real need of the prisons and their inmates, I have now made arrangements for visiting some of the large prisons in the central parts of European Russia. I hope next week to visit Kursk, Orel, Woronesch, Tambow, Tula, and to make my way to Moskow, where there are several large prisons. From Moskow I purpose going to St. Petersburg, where my address will be, care of Rev. W. Nicolson, British and Foreign Bible Depôt.

The extent of this field of work amongst the prisoners is beyond all calculation. About three months ago I visited the prison in Odessa, and gave books to about 600 prisoners. When calling there again this time I found that of the 600, about 250 had left, and about 300 had come in their places. At Tiflis I found the large prison emptied and refilled since last year. Very many are sent off to Siberia, others to larger prisons, and many are discharged. Oh that there were missions for the discharged, for they find it all but impossible to regain a character and to earn an honest livelihood. Sin is, indeed, a hard master.—Yours sincerely,

Odessa, February 8. F. W. Baedeker.

THE CONVERSATIONAL BIBLE-CLASS in connection with Messrs. Blundell Bros., Cheapside, has completed its third season of Gospel addresses to the young men of this house of business. The meetings have been held at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, once a fortnight, and have been a blessing to all who attended.

LONDON FLOWER GIRLS.

For more than twenty years the Watercress and Flower Girl Mission, and Flower Girl Brigade, of which the hon. superintendent is Mr. John A. Groom, has held on its way as one of the most useful home mission agencies. The benefit conferred on a class peculiarly exposed to temptation in a city like London, has been very great; hundreds of girls and young women who have been taken from the streets, first to be trained, and then placed in respectable situations, represent the best reward that anyone fighting the Lord's battle against the powers of evil could desire. As has been the case in other instances, there seems to be a providential tendency for new branches to be developed. The work in the markets during the early morning would, of course, be part of the original programme; but for some years there has been a very fully attended preaching service at Foresters' Hall on Sunday nights.

At first the design was simply to hold out a helping hand to girls earning the most precarious of livings, and who needed good counsel and religious instruction quite as much as temporal assistance. Then the brigade for teaching the making of artificial flowers opened a door of hope to those who might otherwise have yielded to despair. The work has gathered in volume as the years have gone by, proving in a pleasant way the great sympathy that Christian people have for poor women and children.

Having laboured for this class during twenty three years, Mr. Groom is a veteran in the service; as a result of long observation, he has lately had heavily laid upon his heart a desire to establish a home for orphan and street waifs of the flower-girl class under twelve years of age. There are many such whose surroundings are truly deplorable. Those who ought to be their guardians are frequently of the lowest class—drunken and depraved. At an age when they can easily be won for what is pure and noble, these little ones are sent out to sell, and that failing, they must steal, beg, or do anything to get money for their debauched elders to waste in grovelling self-indulgence. If they go home empty they are infamously ill-used.

Besides such as those described, there are others who are the daughters of widows too poor to look after them. Such women take to street trading, and, unhappily, they find that they can more readily excite the sympathy of the public if they are accompanied by children. Girls who grow up under such conditions become ruined both in body and soul. They seem naturally to take to the streets, and the unutterable curse of the streets too surely overtakes them. The only hope for such is to remove them altogether from the evil which threatens them.

This is what Mr. Groom now proposes to do as soon as the £1000 is subscribed which will enable him to make a start, by purchasing a house suitable for a Home. Premises which would in every way answer the purpose in view, accommodating thirty girls, have been offered. Experienced friends, to whom the scheme has been mentioned, heartily approve of it.

Mr. Groom's operations extend far beyond the Flower Girl Brigade, which now has thirty-two members. Some forty meetings a week are held in connection with the Mission and its branches. The Young Women's Institute has eighty-nine members, and there is also another for young men. Some 3000 breakfasts and 800 hot dinners are given weekly to poor children. There are nearly 1000 children in the Sunday-school, while tract distribution and lodging-house preaching are carried on. Then, not the least boon conferred on the flower girls is the room at Covent-garden Market which has lately been opened to them, and where they can wait, tie up flowers, &c., a pint of cocoa and bread and butter being given to each girl. Mr. Groom's address is 12, Clerkenwell-close, E.C.

r. Pentecost's Mission Work.

. PENTECOST comes like a storm from nerica, to ruffle the glassy waters of Church difference. Glasgow is just now being roused the quick by the resistless force of his proach. For two months he has been tacking the steel-clad figure of Indifference, d is rewarded by having found out weak aces in its armour. On Monday evening st week he winged an arrow, and left it edged in between the armour and the heart. s an evangelist he is powerfully gifted; as a eaker he is a great trial, especially to a hearer the back seats. He drops the voice at the nd of his sentences, and, while to an extent is is impressive, his meaning is only caught those close at hand.

Choosing for a subject "The Condition of evival," he prefaced his address by saying hat the Christian who does not engage in this ind of work is a hindrance, and not a help, to hrist's cause. To be filled with the Spirit, hich is absolutely necessary for real work, the hristian must humble himself. On this natter, consult 2 Chron. vii. 14, "If my people, hich are called by my name, shall humble hemselves, and pray, and seek my face, and urn from their wicked ways; then will I hear rom heaven, and will forgive their sin, and vill heal their land." Here is a straight chalenge and a clear promise. Those who hear uch words must either humble or deliberately harden themselves. At a revival season, what s the thing you want God to do? Have you prayed at all to-day? That is a question each must answer in his or her own heart.

There are three things the evangelist wants God to do: (1) To bless believers with a time of quickening and refreshing; (2) to restore backsliders. Where are the latter to be found? In the tavern, on the street? Yea, but there are heaps and piles of them to be found inside of the churches; many are present in this meeting! There are many kinds of backsliders: the woman who throws herself into the arms of the world, the man who abandons himself to the known curse of strong drink; but there is a worse in your midst—the respectable church-going, church-observing backslider, with heart as cold as death to God. Such are the curse of our churches. We want this great company of backsliders ever to be found where revival meetings are, to turn from their placid indifference and say, "Lord, behold, we come!"

We want (3) sinners for Christ. With all reverence Dr. Pentecost expressed his belief that it is impossible for the Holy Ghost to work through the medium of dead churches. Because of the Church's apathetic indifference God has to get witnesses outside; else why the Salvation Army, the evangelistic meeting, the individual working for Christ? Should men and women not be humble? Have you no sin? Do no sins rise up, to-night, before your God? Have you no besetting sin, no indulgence, no secret thought which, if bared to the world's scrutiny, would put you to the blush? If your imperfections are patent to the world's eye, what of God's? By the slow process of carelessness and familiarity have you not, many of you, reached this sad stage of indifference which says, "It is the old nature asserting itself, that is all." You mutter a little, protest a little, murmur an occasional prayer, and complacently relegate yourselves to the ranks of the backsliders.

What hard terms we impose on the young inquirer, what easy requirements are those of the Christian Church! This should humble us. Spiritual indifference is an appalling fact to-day. What a good time you Christians are having on the road to heaven, and never a thought of the thousands you are allowing to go down to hell unchecked! There is a great deal of infidelity in Scotland; open, defiant denial of the truth of the Bible. Dr. Pentecost said he was not so much afraid of the infidelity outside of the churches as the indifference inside. Infidelity would vanish in three weeks if indifference could only be broken up. Do you know what prayer really is? Words reeled formally off by the quarter or half-hour are useless. The spirit of Jacob must be in your prayer: "I will not let Thee go except Thou bless me!" Have you seen God's face to-day? Has there been the shining of a heavenly light on your heart? "When ye seek Me with all your heart, ye shall surely find Me."

When the speaker had got thus far, he paused, and said, with evident emotion, "Do you know the thought this moment in my heart? It is a question, Is the Holy Ghost really within me, or are these only words, words, words? O God, try me; search me!" What, he asked, were his hearers going to do? Were they really meaning to turn the meeting into a kind of spiritual pic-nic, where they could dine comfortably off the promises, or did they mean work? Were they not going to roll away the stone of Indifference from the spiritual tomb, where friends lay like Lazarus, dead, so that the Lord might bid them arise and come forth?

Probably none of Dr. Pentecost's missions have been more searching and productive of good than this Glasgow one. Day after day, for two months, Bible-readings and services have been eagerly attended, and with great blessing. In Edinburgh Major Whittle has started a like mission, for the success of which Dr. Pentecost earnestly pleaded in his concluding prayer.

The meetings grow in interest and blessing; the Christian Institute was crowded nightly last week. They are to be continued in the same place this week. After that Dr. Pentecost goes to Cowcaddens Free Church.

A MISSION AT WIMBLEDON.

IT is not much more than a year ago since I was permitted to record in your columns the remarkable results of a mission conducted here by Mr. W. Spencer Walton. I write now to chronicle in a few lines the wonderful wave of blessing which has accompanied a ten days' mission held in Emmanuel Church, by Rev. G. C. Grubb.

As the work proceeded, it became evident that the interest which it aroused was not confined to our own church and congregation, but had spread far and near. The vicar of a neighbouring parish came frequently to our services, with many of his people, and united with us at its close in public thanksgiving to God for the blessings that had resulted from the effort. Other clergy came almost daily from a considerable distance, and expressed to me their warmest appreciation of the services.

Mr. Grubb's preaching was marvellously simple, Biblical, and direct. One speaking to me of it, said, "You felt as you listened to him that you understood something of the meaning of the expression, 'The sword of the Spirit.' As the hearers sat riveted, they were occupied, not with the man, but with his message; to many and many a one did the word of God, through his servant's lips, prove itself to be 'quick and powerful.'" This remark applies equally to the Gospel addresses in the evening and to the Bible-readings for Christians in the afternoon. Many are the written testimonies which we have received to the blessings given through these readings.

Three hundred communicants remained to the Lord's Table at the thanksgiving service, and among these were many who had been enabled for the first time during this mission to rejoice in their Saviour's dying love. The full results of a work such as this will only be known in eternity; but we have been permitted to see enough to call forth our heartfelt praise. In this note of thanksgiving I would fain ask your readers to join. EDWARD W. MOORE.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN EDINBURGH.

NINE years ago, this honoured servant of God visited our city and held a six weeks' mission in the Free Assembly Hall—a place hallowed by the memories of Mr. Moody's and Mr. Sankey's first visit to Scotland. On that occasion he was accompanied by his faithful co-workers, Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan; the combined preaching and singing of the Gospel broke down many stubborn hearts, and we were left with a list of over a thousand who had professed allegiance to King Jesus.

In the following year, when Mr. Moody re-visited us, he was greatly struck with the evidences all around of the extent, and especially of the depth, of that work. It has probably yielded, proportionately, a larger percentage of Christian workers than any other mission in our city. This is to be accounted for by the markedly doctrinal preaching of Major Whittle, and by his fearless unmasking of sin. Each man's conscience is searched, and the reasonableness of the judgment of God's holy law on man's sin is insisted on. Then the substitutionary atonement of God's only begotten Son is brought in, and the love and the justice of God on this ground are seen to meet.

Major Whittle presides daily at the noon meeting, and the attendance has so increased that a return from the Moncrieff Hall to its old home in the large Free Assembly Hall has had to be made. The evening evangelistic meetings are being held in different churches for a week at a time. Last week, which was the first of the series, they were held in the Barclay Church. There was a large attendance each night, but it steadily increased till the last evening, Friday, when the church was full. Second meetings for young men and young women have been held, and scores have decided for Christ.

Mr. Charles Whittle, the Major's son, has conducted the men's meeting, and the work among them has been very fruitful. Major Whittle superintended the women's meeting, and the number of anxious souls rejoiced the hearts of the workers. No fewer than four meetings are held on each Sabbath, and soldiers, students, young men, and young women are being specially appealed to. The meetings this week are conducted in Newington Established Church, and the prayers of those who love the Lord are affectionately besought.

D. M.

UNION TABERNACLE, WANDSWORTH.—At the recent annual social meeting of this congregation, the pastor, Rev. D. M. Cameron, gave a cheering report of work during the year. Sinners have been converted; some of them have united in fellowship. The mothers' meetings have been well sustained, and the means of much good. The young women's Bible-class, under Mrs. Cameron, is the means of great blessing to many; the men's Bible-class is earnestly carried on. The Sunday-school is in a vigorous state. The Band of Hope meetings are increasing in attendance.

DRURY LANE WORKING GIRLS' HOME AND DAY NURSERY.—Mr. Justice Grantham recently presided at the fourth annual meeting of this institution. Mr. W. Fortescue Barratt, the hon. treasurer, read the annual report, which stated that the committee had done some useful work, which might have a deep effect on the lives of many of the girls who had used the house during the year. The house is intended to provide safe lodgings and a comfortable home for working girls in the neighbourhood, and for young servants friendless in London. It has been quite full all the year with resident girls. There is also a club for young girls, and there is a nursery for the children of women employed during the day. The objects of the institution were warmly commended by Mr. Justice Grantham, who remarked on the fact that institutions of the kind were far less common for girls than for boys, and he regretted that the financial state of the house had not been kept up to the point that was desired.

For the Young.

CHILDREN'S MISSION IN SHEFFIELD.

MR. EDWIN ARROWSMITH has lately had a very happy work amongst children and young people here at home for their holidays. A goodly band of Oxford and Cambridge undergraduates came with Mr. Arrowsmith, and devoted themselves specially to work amongst the boys for whom they had morning services and evening drawing-room meetings, whilst the afternoons were spent in the football field. Every morning a children's service was held in the Montgomery Hall; in spite of the most unfavourable weather and the great distance from the homes of many of the children the attendances steadily increased.

Mr. Arrowsmith believes thoroughly in teaching the young to deny themselves on behalf of their poorer brothers and sisters; and made an appeal on behalf of children in Stratford, East London. His youthful hearers responded nobly; and it was beautiful to see how many subscribed liberally on behalf of a fund for providing free breakfasts for the starving East-end children. A temperance meeting was held with successful results, and a large number joined the Scripture Union; many parents doing so with a view to encouraging their children in the daily reading of the Bible. Special meetings for young men were also held, and it was a matter of much regret that, owing to Mr. Arrowsmith's friends having to return to college, they could not be prolonged, as they proved a great help to many. The sight of so many young University men devoting their vacation to such an unselfish work is one full of promise.

The Vicar of Sheffield helped on the mission both publicly and in private by every means in his power, and was much interested to find when entertaining some of the helpers that half of them owed their conversion to the Children's Special Service Mission. Many of the clergy also showed great sympathy, and have since done their utmost to perpetuate the work by means of Bible-classes, &c.

We understand that Mr. Arrowsmith has arranged to hold a mission at Lausanne, where he had some very interesting work last summer, from April 14 to 28.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Feb. 24, Luke vii. 24—35; Mon., Feb. 25, Luke vii. 36—50; Tues., Feb. 26, Luke viii. 1—15; Wed., Feb. 27, Luke viii. 16—25; Thurs., Feb. 28, Luke viii. 26—40; Fri., March 1, Luke viii. 41—56; Sat., March 2, Luke ix. 1—11.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. Josiah Spiers, Gospel Hall, Southgate-road, Wood Green, N., March 17—29, 7 p.m.; Sundays, 11 a.m. and 6.30 p.m. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, New Barnet, Feb. 23—24; Mission Hall, Merton-road, Tooting, Feb. 27 to March 1; St. Mary's School, Merton, March 3—5. Mr. H. W. Pewtress, South-street Chapel, Greenwich, March 3—8. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Upper Norwood, Feb. 24; Christ Church Parochial Room, Cancell-road, North Brixton, March 4—8; St. Andrews, New Kent-road, March 10—17. Mr. Macro, Hamond-square, Hoxton, March 11—16. Rev. Duncan Sillars, United Christian Mission, Coatbridge, N.B., commencing Feb. 25, for one week.

DESTITUTE CHILDREN IN IRELAND.—The Homes for destitute boys and girls at Ballygowan and Belfast continue to be agencies of great usefulness. During last year the cases of seventy-eight children were dealt with; fifteen of the number were sent to Canada, ten were placed in situations, and thirty-six are still in the Homes. Moreover, a large number of children received casual help, besides being aided in obtaining situations. The director of this good work is Mr. David Henderson, "Elim," Crumlin-road, Belfast.

A MISSION TO EAST-END CHILDREN.

MY DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS,—I think you would like to hear a little about some special services amongst your little East-end sisters and brothers. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer has held a week's meetings for our Sunday-school children. What large audiences we got! A crowd of these poorly clad, half-starved little ones would be waiting outside the door for an hour before it was time to open it. Then they would rush upstairs into the room, so anxious to get into the warmth and brightness, so eager to hear the "minister" speak.

The service would commence by singing some nice bright hymns. Then Mr. Sayer would say he wanted them to do seven things: (1) All turn round with your faces towards your seats; (2) Put your hymn-sheets on the seat; (3) Turn round again; (4) Sit down on your hymn-sheets; (5) Stretch out your arms; (6) Fold them; (7) Close your eyes while we have a word of prayer. These little exercises were a source of great pleasure, and won for Mr. Sayer the children's goodwill.

When the address began, such expectant faces were raised to the speaker; the little restless hands and feet were still; eyes, ears, and often mouths open, to take in all that was said or done.

Mr. Sayer is just like some of your picture books which you had at Christmas—full of charming little stories. He seemed to paint the picture of the story as he told it so simply, so truly and quietly. Every story had something to teach the children, just as the Lord Jesus Christ tried to make his disciples understand what their hearts were like by describing different kinds of ground: "wayside" ground, "stony" ground, "thorny" ground, and "good" ground. After every service Mr. Sayer asked as many as would like to hear more of Jesus to stay behind. Many, both boys and girls, used to stay, when the teachers went round, and spoke lovingly to them, pointing them to Jesus.

Would you like to know some of the things these little children said? You know they are not brought up, like many of you, in comfortable houses, with kind, good friends to care for and love them. Many of them, instead of kisses, get kicks; instead of having a mother's arms around them, they get a box on the ears, or a broomstick across their poor little backs. Do you wonder then that they can hardly believe that God or anyone else loves them? One of the teachers wrote a note to her class because she was unable to be with them one evening. The next night the girls were all crowding round her. "O teacher," said one, "I shall keep this letter always"; and she took it out of her pocket, smiling, and stroking it. "Yes," said another, "it did make us cry, teacher, because you said you loved us in it!"

A lady had a little crowd of girls round her at one after-meeting, and she was asking them what sins would keep them out of heaven. "Swearin'," said a little girl of about ten years old. "But you don't swear, do you?" "Yes, I does; my big brother teaches me." "What do you do to him?" "I whacks him," she answered. Ah! she knew what sin was. Those of you who love Jesus, and want to hasten his kingdom, remember in your prayers these little brothers and sisters, whose lot is cast amid all that makes life hard and cheerless.

This is the second season of blessing Mr. Sayer has been used to bring to our hundreds of little ones. Many are now rejoicing in Jesus as their very own Saviour.

CHILDREN IN THEATRES.—Several ladies have taken part in the discussion raised on this subject by Mrs. Fawcett. Miss Beale tells a melancholy story of her experiences when returning from the Crystal Palace in company with some of these child actors. She describes them as being quite tired out, and obliged to go long distances late at night, unaccompanied. Miss Beale urges that parents should not be relieved of their responsibility to support their families.

THE SNOW.

"Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow?" JOB xxxviii. 22.

THE snow, the snow, the fair white snow,
On all the earth it lies,
In stainless, perfect purity,
Spread out beneath the skies;
Here piled in wreaths fantastical,
There sloping smooth away,
And sparkling, as with silver stars,
Beneath the wintry day.

There's beauty in the virgin snow
As it descends from heaven,
A fleecy robe for wintry days,
To earth in kindness given;
There's life, too, in the trembling flakes
That downward gently sift,
Though shoots no herb or flower yet
Beneath the frozen drift.

But when the earth, revolving on,
Shall turn her to the sun,
How will the frosty snow-wreaths then
In melting currents run!
How will the gushing waters leap
All joyous to the day,
And freshen life into the trees,
With scented blossoms gay.

For the snow is but the genial rain,
By winter's breath congealed,
And spread in cold unfruitfulness
O'er mountain, wood, and field;
And oft does many an earthly stain
On its pure breast arise,
And it keeps not here the purity
With which it left the skies.

So truth comes down to man from heaven,
With life-renewing power,
Like the rain that falls in early spring
On meadow, grove, and bower;
But, met with cold indifference,
'Tis fruitless as the snow,
And we stain it oft with falsehoods while
It tarries here below.

But when man turns himself to Him
Who ever waits to bless,
Who shines with healing in his rays,
The Sun of Righteousness,
How do the cold, dead truths he knew
To life and freshness start,
While a change, like that of summer time,
Comes o'er his wintry heart.

For God hath said, As falls the snow,
And as descends the rain,
Nor ever to its heavenly source
Vainly returns again,
But o'er the dry and barren earth
With skill divine is spread,
And giveth to the sower seed,
And to the eater bread:—

So goeth forth God's Holy Word,
In love paternal given,
To nourish in man's barren heart
The living things of heaven;
While God Himself, the Sun of heaven,
With beams, like those of spring,
Warms into life within our hearts
Each ruined precious thing.

Then Truth's pure words and holy ways
We love as well as know;
No more they seem to fall from heaven,
As falls the frozen snow;
But as the stream of life that flows
From God's eternal throne,
Where countless fruits upon the banks
Its fertile course make known.

GENEROUS GIFTS.—By the will of the late Mr. John Carpenter, surgeon, of Camden-road, N., legacies of £15,000 each are left to the Royal Hospital for Incurables, the Orphan Working School, and the Royal Medical Benevolent Society.

CHAPTER OF GOSPEL TRIUMPHS.

(BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

AD the pleasure on a recent Sunday of ching a glimpse of the Thames Church ssion work among the employés at Woolwich enal, and of learning many encouraging and rious results. The missionary in charge of district, which extends from Greenwich Erith, having occasion frequently to pass ough the Arsenal, handed to those whose h he happened to cross, tracts and Scrip- e portions, never anticipating what this nple effort would grow to. A great demand s created among the 18,000 to 20,000 work- en engaged in the Arsenal for wholesome ristian literature. So numerous became the plications for "a bit of something to read," "a little book to take home to the missus d children," that the man of God resolved make the place, in which he foresaw a fine ening, one of regular visitation. Now he t only distributes reading matter, but has cess to different departments, in which dur- g meal hours he has talks with the men, d holds brief services; and marvellous deed have been the results.

Through the quiet ministrations of this de- ted agent, and the circulation of literature, en who were formerly out-and-out for the evil, regarded as altogether "sold unto sin," opeless drunkards or cruel parents, have been urned from darkness to light, and from the ower of Satan to God, and transformed into utiful, prudent, and God-fearing men. A oreman engineer with whom I conversed, hile the missionary was speaking to a police- an, whom he induced some months ago to gn the pledge, said, "I do praise the Lord r having sent Mr. C. here, and showing e, with many others, to take the right view f myself. He is doing a grand work among he roughest of our men. I can speak from xperience. I can never let an opportunity ass of speaking to my men of the goodness f the Lord, who has done so much for me. Some of them have acknowledged, though they coffed at the time, to having derived benefit rom what was said. Indeed, they soon showed y the change in their life and conduct that hey had reached a turning-point in their downward course." What a joy it is to hear uch men, who have become bold Christians, giving bright and clear testimony to the saving power of God!

I found from further conversation with this ame man, and from other sources, that, in a quiet way, a revival is going on among the Government employés at the Arsenal. In this work the Thames Church missionary finds great help from Christian workmen. Men have come to the missionary with tears, and mentioning a fellow-workman, once their com- panion in wickedness, but now soundly con- verted to God, have addressed him in some- thing like these terms: "We want to be like so and so. He used to be as fond of his drink, and to be as reckless with his brass as we were, but now he is a different man. He dresses respectably, and looks after the missus and the little ones at home, and goes to church with them whenever he can. We want to get that which has changed him." A little earnest talk with the anxious ones has, in the majority of cases, resulted in their acceptance of Christ.

I cannot repeat a tithe of the cheering facts in my possession. A few incidents will suffice to give an idea of the fruitfulness of the work. Some who made open confession of atheism have been impressed by the words of the missionary; instead of abusing and scoffing at him, as they previously did, they now wel- come his visits, listen with respect and rever- ence to all he says, and gratefully accept his printed messengers. There are a great many Irishmen employed in the Arsenal, a large number of whom are Roman Catholics; from these the missionary experiences considerable opposition. Among them also, I discovered that the mission- ary has had triumphs. Here is a specimen case. A fireman in the Gas Works, who had proved himself a somewhat troublesome opponent, en- deavoured one Sunday afternoon, in a rather furious manner, to ridicule some observations of the missionary. On the following Sunday the missionary visited the Gas Works as usual, and on entering the "lobby," the man in ques- tion approached him with the exclamation: "I'm happy to tell you, sir, I have found out that the last time I opposed you, you were right and I was wrong." Subsequently, one of the man's mates remarked to the missionary: "We have one who used to oppose you, but he is different now. He gives us advice, and genuine advice too, as genuine as your own. How God has changed him!" He is now leading a con- sistent Christian life. Another Roman Catho- lic, an elderly man, has for some time read with avidity the literature supplied him by the missionary. This man I met during my visit. He saluted the herald of the Gospel, and, with a smile on his face, observed: "That was a fine book you gave me last time. I've read it right through, and it's excellent." This book was a volume of Mr. Moody's addresses, the perusal of which, I have learned, has been the means of many a sailor's conversion.

While the firemen in the Gas Works were partaking of dinner in the "lobby," the mission- ary conducted a short service. These robust, but toilworn men, to the number of between twenty and thirty, some half dozen of whom were Roman Catholics, listened with rapt attention to the old, old story. Some of them appeared deeply touched when they were told of that home where sin and sorrow are unknown. Many of these hardy fellows are vicious and careless, but one good trait in their character is their appreciation of Christian care. The missionary, a man of deep piety and over- flowing good humour, is very popular among them, and as we left they were profuse in their expressions of gratitude for his kind advice and gifts of literature.

The thirst for sound, healthy religious read- ing is a hopeful sign. A policeman told me that when Mr. C. happens to put in an appearance at the Arsenal at meal times, when the thousands of workers are passing to and fro, an extraordinary scene takes place. "He is surrounded," said the officer "and he seldom gets away until his big bag is emptied." The demand is ten times greater than the supply which the Thames Church Mission, with its thousands of sailors and river-toilers to care for, can place at the disposal of its agents. The secretary (Rev. Henry Bloomer, 31, New Bridge-street, Ludgate-circus, E.C.) will be glad to receive books, tracts, &c., or any other practical help.

SAILORS' REUNION.—A large company of coasting and foreign-going seamen were entertained to tea on Monday week at the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's reading-rooms in Ratcliff High- way. After tea a sailors' prayer-meeting was held in the adjoining chapel, followed by an evangelistic service. An after-meeting was held, to which many anxious ones remained. A goodly number signed the temperance pledge, and several were led to the Saviour, and went back to their ships rejoicing.

BETHNAL GREEN.—For several years the Gospel and Temperance Mission has been doing a silent but real work amongst the very poor. Many have received the Gospel message and are giving proof of abiding union with Christ; a very large number have signed the temperance pledge and are living sober lives; while practical help of all sorts has been given to the suffering poor, both children and adults. As mothers' meetings, clothing clubs, relief of poor, Bands of Hope, sewing and instruc- tion classes, Sunday-schools, Bible-classes, Gospel and temperance work, indoors and out, to say nothing of support of missionaries and rent of halls, cannot be carried on without money, the Lord's stewards are entreated to help. Communi- cations may be addressed to Rev. W. Harvey Smith, 203½, Bethnal Green-road, London, E.

TRANSATLANTIC JOTTINGS.

MR. PHILIP PHILLIPS has been giving his song entertainments in New York city.

. . . .

The Tippecanoe Club of Indianapolis are to present President Harrison with a splendid copy of the Bible, bound in leather.

. . . .

Canon Knox-Little has been causing no small stir in Canadian cities by his customary mixture of sacramentarianism with evangelical doctrine.

. . . .

Mr. David Yuille, of Montreal, Canada, offers to maintain a missionary in China in connection with the Canada Presbyterian Church at his own expense for five years.

. . . .

Several of the leading editors of American Chris- tian papers have been discussing, at the Religious Press Club, their duty with regard to the temper- ance question.

. . . .

The death is reported of Dr. Otis Gibson, the well-known missionary to the Chinese in San Francisco. His labours in this position were faith- ful and heroic.

. . . .

The poet Whittier, in a recent letter, advised young men who would make the most of life to identify themselves early with some righteous but unpopular cause of reform.

. . . .

The Chinese Sunday-school, numbering one hundred men, connected with Clarendon-street Baptist Church (Dr. A. J. Gordon's), Boston, U.S., has voted to support three native missionaries in China.

The United Presbyterian Church, says The New York Herald, is face to face with a serious secession. Eighty-eight churches in the Detroit (Mich.) Presbytery withdrew last week, and were received into the regular Presbyterian Church.

. . . .

Mr. Thomas Jackson, a promising coloured citizen of Athens, Georgia, U.S., has given up a profitable business, and with the money he has saved by means of his trade is fitting himself to go as an independent missionary to Liberia, West Africa.

. . . .

Archbishop Corrigan, of New York, has issued a decree forbidding the attendance of Roman Catholics at the meetings of Dr. McGlynn's Anti- Poverty Society. The doughty doctor has defied the decree, to the boundless delight of his fol- lowers.

. . . .

On January 14 a great Sunday Rest petition was presented to the United States Senate. The suc- cess of the Sunday Rest movement (says Our Day) is indicated by the increasing misrepresentations and attacks of the strange allies, the Saturdarians, the saloonists, and the Sunday papers.

. . . .

A women's national council for the United States has been formed, with Miss Willard as president. It is "a confederation of workers committed to the overthrow of all forms of ignor- ance and injustice, and to the application of the golden rule to society, custom, and law."

. . . .

A national academy of theology was lately organised at New York. The friends of the move- ment hope to demonstrate theology to be a science; and to promote research in the various fields of religious scholarship, so as to prepare the way for more effective Christian work, and for union among the churches.

. . . .

At the beginning of his fourteenth annual course on Monday lectures, Mr. Joseph Cook was welcomed by even a larger audience than greeted him at the opening of the last course. Throughout his prelude and lecture, says The Morning Star, he was as rich as ever in well-digested material, point and clearness of statement, independence of thought, and force- ful eloquence.

THANKOFFERING DAY.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me through your paper to remind former members of the church and congregation at the East London Tabernacle that next Monday, Feb. 25, will be our annual "Thankoffering Day." For some years past I have spent this day in my vestry to receive gifts for the work of the Lord, from those who have reason to thank God the place was ever built. Hundreds of those who have been saved, or had relatives saved in the building are now scattered in all parts of the country, but they like still to have fellowship in the annual offering. The present Tabernacle was opened Feb. 22, 1872.

Last year over £400 were brought or sent in. I hope the same loving tokens of gratitude for blessing received will be given this year. Another house has been added to the Orphan Home for boys, besides a Home opened for girls. Will former worshippers have fellowship with us, and communicate with, yours faithfully,

ARCHIBALD G. BROWN.

THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY'S WORK.—In The Church Missionary Gleaner there was commenced last month a series of capital illustrated articles on "The Society's Missions." The first place was given to Tinnevelly, South India, the district in which the Society has achieved its greatest success. In the February number, the Mission to the scattered Indian population of Athabasca, in the far North-West of Canada, is described. A portrait of Dr. Young, the Bishop of Athabasca, is given. His diocese contains an area of 250,000 square miles, and the staff of the Mission consists of five clergymen besides the Bishop, one of these being a native. This work "is still only in its infancy, and needs the fostering prayer of the people of God."

PARIS MISSION TO THE JEWS.—For over a year the Mission Hall, 6, Rue Malher, has been open daily for evangelistic work among the Jews, who reside in large numbers in that quarter of Paris. At first the directors—Misses E. A. Law and M. A. Palmer—had much to endure from fanatical Hebrews; but latterly the various agencies have been carried on without serious molestation, and with encouraging success. The efforts of the missionary evangelist, Mr. Solomon Feingold, son of a Russian Rabbi, have been blessed in a remarkable manner, and it is hoped soon to establish a Training Home, in which young converts who are disowned by their relatives and friends may be cared for and helped to earn an independent livelihood. A medical mission is an important adjunct, and there is also a Sunday-school. Several friends render hearty assistance to Misses Law and Palmer, whose address is 36, Rue de la Verrerie, Paris.

THE REVOLUTION IN UGANDA.—Rev. E. C. Gordon, of the Church Missionary Society, has sent home a long account of the revolution in Uganda. Of late there has risen among the people a party called "Readers," or "Reformers," composed of Christians and Mohammedans. Composed of the youth and strength of the country, these should have been conciliated, but King Mwanga made himself odious and offensive to them, while all the time trusting himself to bodyguards made up of Readers. Hearing that the King was scheming methods of massacre, the Readers effected a bloodless revolution, by placing on the throne Kiwewa, a prince of their combined choice. After a poor show of resistance, Mwanga fled, and happy times at once dawned for the country. Reading and religious inquiry was permitted to go on without restriction, and the Christian missionaries were greatly cheered by the spirit of hearing manifest among the people. The Mohammedan Readers, however, were not long content, and, determined upon securing predominating influence at Court, they plotted against the Christians. Fighting ensued, with loss of life, and the Christians being scattered, the missionaries were expelled from the country. Going down the lake in the boat Eleanor, the party narrowly escaped drowning, the vessel being damaged by hippopotami. They ultimately arrived in safety at Usambiro, and the letter was sent off before the deposition of Kiwewa in favour of his younger brother, as recently reported.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. William Forbes has lately been evangelising in Lancashire.

Henry Smith, jun., has completed a three weeks' mission at Haswell, where much blessing has been received. He hopes to commence work at Brotton, Cleveland, Feb. 24.

Rev. James Kirkwood has conducted missions at Rathkeale, Ballingrane, and Borrisokane, which have been attended with much blessing. In each place souls were saved, and believers quickened.

Gospel temperance meetings, arranged for by the rector of Cavan, have been held by Rev. F. D. Sidley, of Granard, in the parishes of Lavey, Kilmore, and Cavan, and have, it is believed, done much good.

Evangelistic services have been held in Lisnaskea, Ballintra, Ballybay, Fivemiletown, and Glenavy Methodist Churches. In each case souls were saved, and the meetings were attended with much blessing.

An eight days' mission has been held by Mr. J. Townsend Trench in the Methodist Church, Parsonstown, Ireland. It has been the means of awakening the careless, and deepening the spiritual life of God's people.

A remarkable work of grace has taken place in the Methodist Sunday-school at Newtownbutler. A considerable number of the young people has decided for Christ, and in some of the classes nearly all have been converted.

Methodist missions are reported from Hanley (Staffs.); Hull (Yorks.); Newcastle-on-Tyne; Mostyn-road, Brixton, London; Tunbridge Wells; Burnopfield, Gateshead; Boston (Lincs.); Darlington; Horncastle, and a number of other places. In each case the Spirit of God has worked with the evangelists, confirming the word preached with signs following.

A united Gospel mission has been held in the National Schoolroom, Gorey, by Rev. John Hoffe, rector of Kilbride, and Rev. Wm. Harpur, Methodist minister. The Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette is not pleased with this mission, but there can be no doubt that, if such services were conducted in every parish in Ireland, they would do much to promote a spirit of piety and brotherly love.

Eastbourne.—A very blessed mission has just been held by Mr. Thomas Payne (author of "Enduement of Power") in Longstone Hall Eastbourne. Night after night souls were brought under the convicting power of the Holy Ghost and many hearts yielded to his strivings. One marked feature of the mission was the prominence given to the need of the Baptism of the Holy Ghost for a life of service and of power.

Buckhurst Hill.—There has been a ten days' visit of two fishermen from Lowestoft to Prince's Hall, Buckhurst Hill. The power of God was felt from the commencement. Believers have been much quickened, while many sinners have been caught in these fishermen's nets, and are now rejoicing in Christ Jesus. Deep snow did not stop the anxious souls. The hall was crowded out to its utmost capacity, and our hearts are made glad.

W. G.

Mr. Geo. D. Shipley and his daughter have been spending a fortnight at Townfield-street Mission Hall, Chelmsford. Every afternoon and evening they have been filling the hearts of God's people with joy by their new and delightful songs and hymns which serve to deepen the effect of Mr. Shipley's Bible talks. The blessing attending them can never be lost. As a practical result of these services I have been able to commence a Bible-class. H. BROWN, Missionary.

Y.M.C.A., Tunbridge Wells.—Mr. W. R. Lane has conducted a fourteen days' united mission, under the auspices of this Association. Much blessing was experienced in connection with the Gospel Meetings held each evening, which were well attended. The Bible lectures, in the afternoons, were very valuable and were much appreciated by the Christians attending. The mission was particularly noticeable for the number of young men who testified to having received blessing. The work among young men in Tunbridge Wells is now of a very encouraging nature.

ARTHUR C. TESSIER, Hon. Sec.

Malvern.—A successful mission has bee held in the North Malvern Chapel by Mr. Simmonds, of the Evangelisation Society, a Gipsy Smith and his wife, of Cambridge. Ma interesting cases of conversion took place.

Rev. R. Balgarnie last week concluded seven days' mission at Ashton-under-Lyne. Th week a fourteen days' mission has commenced Loughborough, in which sixteen Baptist and Co gregational Churches of the town are united.

Messrs. Middleton and Hogben complete half of their month's mission at the Edinburg Castle, Limehouse, on Sunday last. The Hol Spirit is honoured by these brethren in thei evangel, and He has greatly honoured them in consequence. Apparently real conversions are being seen every night.

Duntocher, N.B.—Mr. Thomas W. Canning of the London Evangelisation Society, has held fifteen days' Gospel mission in the three Presbyterian churches in the village. The Spirit of God was evidently working among the people, awakening an interest in spiritual things, and leading many to decision for Christ.

Plumstead.—A very successful mission ha been held in Cage-lane Mission Hall, conducted b Mr. Davies, of the Evangelisation Society. Th meetings extended over two weeks, and not only di many of those who attended confess Christ as thei Saviour, but believers generally were greatly blessed by the instructive addresses of the evangelist.

Mr. Chas. Inglis has re-visited Huntingdon where God gave much blessing in connection with mission held last year. The Corn Exchange ha been filled nightly with all classes; large number have been spoken to in the after-meetings, and no a few, especially among the men, have been brough to Christ. The afternoon Bible lectures have bee very largely attended. Many a worker has bee greatly refreshed and helped.

Great Chesterford, Essex.—A ten days' mis sion has just been concluded at the Congregational Baptist Church here. It has been a season of grea blessing to many. Believers have been stirred u to a sense of their responsibility for the souls o others, backsliders have been restored, and man have professed conversion. The work among th children has been most encouraging. The mi s o services were conducted throughout by Mr. A. E Sidford, who for the past fifteen months has bee acting as pastor, while carrying on evangelisti work there and in the villages around.

TEXTS FOR TRAMS.—A text of Scriptur boldly printed has been placed in one hundre vehicles belonging to the London Tramways Com pany, and those texts must be read by over te thousand passengers in the south of London daily Permission has been obtained to place texts in car running throughout the north of London, bu before this can be done a little monetary aid i required. For the sum of 10s. a text can be place and maintained in a good position for one yea The hon. treasurer of the Mission is Mr. W Walters, 53, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on fortnight's mission, to be conducted by Mr. and Mr J. S. Harrison (Australian evangelists), at Verno Chapel, King's Cross, commencing March 10.——For blessing on Gospel services in the Victori Music Hall, Walthamstow, by Mr, T. H. Morris every Sunday evening during March.——For bless ing on a special mission at Bath, by Mr. Henr Thorne, Feb. 23 to March 4.——For blessing on special mission being held at Garscube Hall Glasgow, by Mr. John Climie.——For one who ha been suffering from a most painful disease whic cannot be cured, and which afflicts him with sever pain both day and night. His faith is so weak that though he prays to God day and night, h cannot hear any answer. He is nearly worn ou with suffering, is alone in the world, withou friend or fellow, and is so deaf that he cannot hea a sermon.——For blessing on a special mission a Kingston-on-Thames, March 3 to 14, by Rev. F. D Sandford.——For blessing on a mission at Bess brook, Ireland, to be conducted by Miss Smith an Miss Bax, commencing on March 10.——For bless ing on a mission at the Baptist Chapel, Poulne near Ringwood, Hants., commencing Sunday Feb. 24, by Mr. William Lloyd.——For blessing o a mission at Billinghurst Congregational Chape by Mr. W. J. Taylor, of the Evangelisation Society March 10 to 24.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the Union, and take its Monthly Notes, which are different from these.

SUNDAY, FEB. 24.—Genesis XXXIX.

EGYPT then, as now, was a vast slave mart. In some great market-place Joseph may have been exposed for sale. Ah! what agony for that young heart, but God was in it all. His permissions are his providences. Potiphar was probably chief of the military force employed as the royal bodyguard in the precincts of the court. And the young captive might have been excused had he trembled a little in passing into the splendid Egyptian home, so different to the simplicity of Jacob's tents. But the Lord was with him (2). Better be Joseph in Egypt with God than the brothers with blood on their hands at home. However far from home, the soul is always at home in God (Ps. xci.).

His prosperity (2).—Some old versions say "he was a luckie fellow." All he handled went well. Men might call it luck, but there was another reason—he did all beneath the eye of God, feeling that God had sent him to fill that post. This is the true secret of success (Col. iii. 22, &c.). And on all such faithful work God's special blessing rests (Deut. xxviii. 1, 2; Ps. i. 3). The prosperity of some men may be due to the character of some obscure servant.

His temptation.—It is in days of prosperity that we are most likely to be tempted. And temptation is always hard when a worldly policy points in one direction and conscience in another. It seemed certain to ruin all his prospects if he did not yield, but had he yielded, he would never have become premier of Egypt. Do right, come what may; stand well with God, promotion cometh from Him. No temptation shall assail which is too great (1 Cor. x. 13). Our best safety is often in flight (15), but where that cannot be, trust Jesus to keep you (Ps. cxxi. 5, and 1 John v. 18, R.V.). Remember 1 Tim. v. 22.

MONDAY, FEB. 25.—Genesis XL.

Further details of Joseph's imprisonment are given (Ps. cv. 17). He was not only in prison, but there was the clank and hurt of the fetters. He could not move without being reminded, as Paul was, of his bonds (Col. iv. 18). It may be that his soul would also be perplexed with the mystery of God's ways. Why should he who had done only the right thing suffer, while many who did worse things daily escaped (Jer. xii. 1)? If you reason like that now, wait, and you will see differently when the Lord's plan has been worked out for you and them (Ps. xxxvii.).

His sufferings wrought beneficially.—The Psalm, in margin, tells us that his "soul entered into iron"; better still, the iron entered into him. We all need iron in our blood, and it is only by suffering rightly borne that it enters into our spiritual constitution. Besides, that imprisonment, though the young captive could not see it, was a link in a long chain of events that reached to Pharaoh's throne. And the Lord was with him there.

His ministry for others.—There is no cure for personal grief, like the effort to lighten the lot of those near us, in worse case than we are. Instead of brooding over your griefs, seek to comfort the sad (6).

His forgiving spirit.—Joseph did not recriminate on any of those who had caused him sorrow. Without entering into details, he said simply ver. 15. He might have read the words of the Apostle, Rom. xii. 19. When we bear a trial patiently, God says, Thank you (1 Peter ii. 20). And the word of God will clear us ultimately as it did him (Ps. cv. 19). Do not let us wonder at the closing words (23); we have often thus treated our best Friend.

TUESDAY, FEB. 26.—Genesis XLI.

"Two full years" (1). It must have seemed a long and weary time. But though God give patience time to have her perfect work, He comes at length (Ps. xlvi. 5 and Matt. xiv. 25). Foolishness and confusion fell upon the wise men, but God showed his secret to the babe (Matt. xi. 25).

Called to the palace.—"They made him run" (14 marg.). Even the punctilious etiquette of Egypt must give way when God speaks the word. Hope thou in God; ere long He shall make thee run and dance (Ps. xlii. 5). Notice Joseph's beautiful references to God (16, 28, and 32). And there was an evident presence of God with him, which impressed those who beheld Him, though he wist it not (38). To what desperate straits does the poor world come (19—23)!

The contrasts.—Jacob has rebuked him; Pharaoh welcomes him. His brethren despised him; the proudest nobility in the world opens its ranks to welcome him; his hands no longer hard with toil, but glistening with signet ring; his feet free from the fetter, and his neck girt with gold. What a comment on 1 Sam. ii. 30. And how apt an illustration of the Virgin's song (Luke i. 51, &c.).

The parallel.—Joseph in prison; Jesus in the grave. Joseph in prison preaching a gospel of deliverance to the butler, Jesus to the captives (Isa. lxi. 1). The two prisoners answer to the two malefactors. Like Joseph, Jesus was of Jewish birth, but disowned by Jews, yet exalted to the supreme seat of power, a Prince and a Saviour, and able to work deliverance for myriads of Gentiles. Jerome renders the name given to Joseph by Pharaoh as "Saviour of the world." There is always plenty where the Saviour is enthroned (Ps. lxxii. 1, 12).

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 27.—Genesis XLII.

Twenty-five years have passed since the tragedy at the pit's mouth, and again Joseph and his brethren meet. And now God takes in hand the work of dealing with their consciences with respect to their terrible crime. The first step was the pressure of want. As long as the land was full of plenty Jacob might have mourned alone; but when the famine was sore, they were driven out of their nest, to get what help they could, and in all this, though they never suspected it, they were being led to some great discoveries. It is when the mighty famine comes that prodigals repent (Luke xv. 14).

The second step was the rough usage they received.—It was not wonderful that they did not recognise their brother in the man of mature years, clothed in the splendid robes of office. But he knew them, perhaps had been on the outlook for them for years. And he at once set himself to repeat the experiences of the pit's mouth. They had probably accosted him as a spy, and he now says, "Ye are spies" (9). And as they had met his protestations to the contrary by violence, so now he met theirs. Perhaps they had thrust him into the pit till his words could be verified, as now he did with Simeon. It was under this strange repetition of the past that conscience awoke, and they said, "We are verily guilty" (21). It reminds of another scene (1 Kings xvii. 18). We can never be perfectly secure till sin is confessed and put away (Heb. viii. 12).

The third step was in the moments of quiet reflection, when conscience had time to work.—They were all in prison together for three days, then Simeon for longer; then came the journey home, and the discovery of the money, before which their heart failed, as it seemed as if God were near (28). Are we not all verily guilty concerning our Brother, Jesus, yet how carefully He provides for us and leads us to repentance.

THURSDAY, FEB. 28.—Genesis XLIII.

God, in infinite love, hedges up our way with thorns, and shuts up every door, except the one through which we may pass to plenty and happiness. Many a soul would never have thought of its ill-treatment of the great Elder Brother, unless our Father had called for a sore famine, and had broken the whole staff of bread (1, 2). At first we say stubbornly, "I will not yield, I will stand out and have my own way" (xlii. 38). But it is a mistake to wrestle against the love of God. Jacob tried it before at the Jabbok Ford, and he limped for the rest of his life. God will have his way at last, if not at first. It is in vain to try to row the ship to land, the sea will not cease her raging, till the runaway is on his way home (Hosea v. 14, 15). Well it was when at last the old father yielded (11).

A type of the mercifulness of Jesus.—Though these men had meditated murder, yet does he who might have become their prey here heap kindnesses on them. And thus, though we are inflicting sore wounds on Jesus, He provides us with all kinds of blessings (16).

A type of his unmerited grace (21, 22).—They had vaunted themselves on their good money. That at least could not be challenged; but, lo, it was given back. Is not this the way in which God treats us? The doles with which we thought to purchase his grace count for nothing, but the grace is still given.

A type of his tender love (30).—Joseph was easily moved. His love started his tears (xlii. 24; xliii. 31; xlv. 2, 14; xlvi. 29; l. 1, 17). But, ah! the great deep of Christ's love to us (Eph. iii. 18)!

FRIDAY, MARCH 1.—Genesis XLIV.

God can easily bring down our self-confidence! Little knowing what was in the sack of one of them, they started in high spirits at dawn, Simeon and Benjamin with them: the memory of the governor's handsome treatment: sacks full: even when accused of thieving, they were so sure of themselves that they courted inquiry (8, 9). But very soon their note altered (13—16). It recalls Job ix. 31. We think ourselves immaculate till God comes and searches us. And it is often in what we counted our choicest quality, our Benjamin, that the fatal cup is found (Prov. xviii. 17).

Anguish is permitted to rend our hearts that we may be brought to contrition.—The Elder Brother seems often harsh and rough. But the rude exterior hides a loving heart. It pains Him to see us suffer. But He loves us well enough to hold the bitter cup to our lips, that it may produce the desired result; and we confess the iniquity which we had long sought to conceal (16).

Mark the behaviour which becomes us (14).—Unconsciously they thus fulfilled the dream (xxxvii. 7). Judah had every right to act as spokesman (xxxvii. 26). There is nothing in literature more pathetic than this appeal. How much pathos lies behind the roughest natures, awaiting an occasion! If a frail, sinful man can plead thus, consider what his pleadings must be who loves us infinitely (Heb. vii. 25). Thus Joseph's object was gained; sin was confessed, their feelings to Benjamin were tested, and they clung to him though his mess had been five times more than theirs, and though he had brought them into trouble.

SATURDAY, MARCH 2.—Genesis XLV.

This chapter is full of Christ. It is probably a picture of a moment in the future, when the Jews, his brethren after the flesh, will be reconciled to Him, whom they rejected and crucified. But it is also a picture of how Jesus treats each of us as we come back to Him.

We meet Him alone (1).—As Peter met our Lord alone on the morning of the resurrection (1 Cor. xv. 5), so alone must each man meet Christ.

He names Himself (3).—Reminding us of Acts ix. 5. And He is not ashamed to add "your brother" (Heb. ii. 11). He adds a beautiful palliation to their grief (5), which recalls Acts ii. 23.

A loving invitation (4).—Come near. We are made nigh. One moment the bare moorland road, with the scene of agony; the next, a promise of ever being near unto Him, nourished and kept with the most tender care (10, 11 compared with Eph. v. 29). It is not so very far from the far country to the Father's heart, and home, and feast.

The provision for the journey (19).—He does not leave us to go on a pilgrimage at our own charges. He makes Himself responsible for the supply of all needs, and contrives that all grace shall abound (2 Cor. ix. 8). The waggons seem to be emblems of the grace of the Holy Spirit, by which we are certified of our Brother's love, and brought on our way. This is the earnest of the Spirit, the first-fruits of our inheritance.

SALCOMBE, SOUTH DEVON.—Rev. G. F. Owen, Baptist minister, and his workers are anxious to open their schoolroom every evening during the week for the lads and men; many of them have no comfortable homes. Books, periodicals, magazines, &c., will be gratefully accepted, and should be addressed to Mr. Owen, The Elms, Salcombe.

HOTEL SERVANTS.—Mrs. Chancellor, 70, Princes-square, W., who is deeply interested in reaching this class with Christian influence, writes to say that much might be done for them by such institutions as the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A., and also by visitation with the consent of hotel proprietors. She adds:—"Let me testify to the success that God has given the meetings I have had for them at my house in London; both men and women have come in numbers, long distances, and chiefly from the best and largest hotels. God has richly blessed these gatherings in awakening and turning hearts to Himself. I should be glad to give information to Christians interested in such work, and to welcome them to my winter meetings the first Tuesday in each month at 8 p.m. The ladies and gentlemen helping me have, in some measure, supplied with good reading about 400 hotels in different towns, but much more is needed. What is being done for all the other hotels in our great commercial, seaside, and fashionable resorts?"

JESUS THE MESSIAH.

MARK viii. 27—ix. 1. GOLDEN TEXT: viii. 34.

IN the extreme north of Palestine, near to the remarkable fountain which forms one of the sources of the Jordan, and in the centre of scenery perhaps the most magnificent in Syria, is situated the modern village of Banias. This is the site of the New Testament Cæsarea Philippi. It was formerly a heathen city, called Paneas, but was enlarged and beautified by Philip the Tetrarch, and called Cæsarea in honour of Tiberius Cæsar. To distinguish it from the more important town of the same name, he added his own name to it, making it Cæsarea Philippi. While journeying to this district, the incidents of our lesson transpired.

From vv. 27—33, Jesus is teaching his disciples; but from 34—ix. 1, He speaks not to them alone, but to the multitude as well. The parallel passage in Matt. xvi. should be read in connection.

OUR LORD TEACHING HIS DISCIPLES.—He varied his methods of instruction. Here, by first asking them questions, He leads them on to declare what they do know; then supplies what they lack, and corrects their mistakes. The theme of his teaching is Himself (27, 28, 31). (1) Men's opinions concerning Him; (2) his disciples' better knowledge of Him; and (3) his own distinct declaration concerning Himself.

(1) The disciples knew that men were divided in their opinions. Some said, "John the Baptist" (vi. 16); others, "Elias"; and others, a "Prophet" (Luke ix. 19). All these were wrong, because they failed to recognise the Messiahship of Jesus, but all contained confession that Jesus was no ordinary man. Men perceived the evidence of our Lord's Messiahship, but refused the conviction to which that evidence should have led them. They would adopt any explanation, however wild and absurd, rather than accept the true one.

(2) To the same question put to the disciples, Peter answers with his bold and noble confession (Matt. xvi. 16). Not only "the Christ," but "the Son of the living God," involving the Messiahship and the Divinity of the Saviour. The evidences which had perplexed the people, had enlightened Peter. From Matthew we learn how Jesus rejoiced in this confession, and traced it to its source (1 Cor. xii. 3). For a while this confession was not to be declared publicly (30). The comparative ignorance of the disciples, and the attitude of the people towards the Saviour, rendered delay necessary.

(3) Our Lord's teaching concerning Himself begins now to assume a new character (31). "He began."—Hitherto He had only hinted at his death in obscure phrases (John ii. 19, iii. 14); but now He speaks openly (32), without any mystery. He not only declares the fact of his death, but its necessity. "Must suffer" (see also Luke xxiv. 46; Acts xvii. 3). He "must"—not because He could not help Himself, but because our salvation required it (Matt. xx. 28, xxvi. 28). But the necessity applies to his resurrection, as well as to his death—"after three days rise again" (see Rom. iv. 25, viii. 34). The death of Jesus for sin and his resurrection are the central truths of the Gospel (1 Cor. xv. 3, 4); to believe in them and to confess them constitute the beginning of true Christian life.

Was Peter elated by the words of commendation Jesus had just spoken? How else could he "rebuke Him" (32)? Our Lord in turn "rebuked Peter" (33); not privately, but before all the disciples. "Get thee behind Me, Satan." How strange that a man who has but just uttered a Divinely inspired confession, should immediately become the mouthpiece of the adversary! But there was no mistaking the personality behind the speaker. Jesus had met him before (Matt. iii. 8—10). This was the same temptation in another and subtler form. And Peter, in being the instrument of such a temptation, "savoured"—or minded—rather the ideas of men than the teachings of God. It was a humbling experience for Peter after the commendation he had just received.

OUR LORD TEACHING THE PEOPLE WITH HIS DISCIPLES (34—ix. 1).—"Even in that out-of-the-way locality He was identified, and followed by groups of expectant hangers on, who were eager to see and hear."—Morison. Perhaps some desired to be his disciples, without any true idea of what discipleship meant. The Saviour's words are intended to instruct them.

Difficulties of discipleship (34).—"Deny himself." "Be prepared to say No to many of the strongest cravings of his nature, in the direction more particularly of earthly ease, comfort, dignity, and glory."—Morison. But denying self means more than this. Peter denied Jesus—"I know not the man." To deny self is to refuse to recognise or to know it. See Deut. xxxiii. 9. Whatever hinders loyalty to Christ must be given up. "Take up his cross."—Everywhere in the New Testament the cross represents death. A disciple, so far from objecting to Christ's death, must be prepared to follow Him in it. To some who heard his words, discipleship very literally involved the death of the cross. If the form is altered, the experience still remains. Daily cross-bearing—that is, daily dying in fellowship with Christ—is inevitable to every true follower of Jesus.

Reasons for meeting the difficulties.—First, "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it." The R.V. gives "life" instead of soul in 36 and 37. He who, to avoid cross-bearing, refuses to follow the Saviour, is preferring a present to an eternal gain. The only way to eternal life is by surrendering to death for Jesus' sake. To give up all to follow Christ is to live now in a better sense than the worldling knows (1 Tim. iv. 8).

Further reason, "What shall it profit a man?" &c. (36, 37).—Self interest should urge men to follow the Saviour. However much a man might gain, if he loses his soul's salvation, how is he profited? (Luke xii. 19—21). When the loss is realised, what would not man give to redeem it? (37). "If he had the whole world, would he not willingly give it, if he knew and felt that otherwise he would be utterly lost? King Richard cried, 'My kingdom for a horse!' How many kingdoms would be willingly surrendered for the salvation of the soul?"—Morison.

Another reason, "Whosoever shall be ashamed," &c. (38).—Shame is one of the most frequent hindrances to discipleship. Notwithstanding that this is a "sinful and adulterous generation," men are so ashamed of being contrary to it that they are unwilling to confess Christ or his teaching. But of such "the Son of Man will be ashamed." Note the time, "When He cometh"; and the surroundings, "In the glory of his Father," &c. To be confessed by Him then is worth any amount of shame endured now.

The prediction in ix. 1 is variously applied to the transfiguration, the day of Pentecost, and the destruction of Jerusalem. We have no doubt it refers to the transfiguration.

Self-denial.—When Garibaldi was going out to battle, he told his troops what he wanted them to do, and they said, "Well, general, what are you going to give us for all this?" He replied, "I don't know what else you will get, but you will get hunger, and cold, and wounds, perhaps death." They stood awhile in silence, and then threw up their hands, "We are the men."

Cross-bearing.—When Madame Guyon was sailing from Paris with her little girl and a nursemaid, the child cut out a number of little paper crosses, and fastened them all to her mother's dress. "Will you not give me a cross, too?" said the nursemaid. "No," said the child, "they are all for mamma." When she had finished the crosses, she made a crown, and, putting it on her mother's head, she said, "After the cross comes the crown." The words and the action were almost prophetic. For from that day Madame Guyon was persecuted wherever she went. Once she was poisoned, and several times in prison for Christ's sake.

Not ashamed of Jesus.—A young believer, full of joy, began to tell at the street corners what God had done for him. A sneering freethinker who heard him said, "You ought to be ashamed of yourself to talk such stuff." He replied, "I am ashamed of myself, but I am not ashamed of my Master."

EAST LONDON NURSING SOCIETY.—The twentieth year of this Society's existence has been one of progress and encouragement. Thoroughly trained nurses, each living in her own district, have been sent to the sick poor in their own homes, assisting ladies also visiting all cases, and providing nourishment where necessary. During 1888 the total number of persons nursed was 3021, over 73,000 visits being recorded. Two new districts are now being opened, and it is hoped that, with hearty co-operation on the part of friends, the advantages of this excellent charity may be made accessible to many more of the sick poor of East London. The office of the Society is 49, Philpot-street, Commercial-road, E.

The Book World.

THE CLERGY DIRECTORY AND PARISH GUIDE FOR 1889. This is a very useful book of reference. Revised and corrected up to date, it contains an alphabetical list of clergy of the Church of England, a list of benefices, and a large amount of other ecclesiastical information. (4s. 6d.) T. G. Johnson, 121, Fleet-street.

LIGHT AND LIFE. By Rev. F. Whitfield. Nisbet & Co. The title of one of the chapters in this book is a good description of the book itself. "Little, but Wise." In short, sharp, crisp sentences the author states clearly, and enforces earnestly, the teaching of God's Word upon practical Christian life. We commend it as an inspiring, instructive, and helpful book.

MEMORABLE BIBLE NIGHTS. By Rev. N. Curnock. 1s. Wesleyan Methodist Sunday School Union. Thirteen Sunday afternoon "talks" in the chapel of the Children's Home, Bonner-road, London, E., are here reproduced, and most appropriately dedicated to Rev. Dr. Stephenson, the founder and principal of that well-known and excellent institution. Some of the addresses will be useful in homes where children are being brought up in the fear of God.

TRADITIONS OF THE COVENANTERS. By Rev. Robt. Simpson, D.D. 3s. 6d. Gall & Inglis. In this goodly storehouse of Covenanting lore we have the fruit of much industry and sympathetic narration. The reminiscences all cluster around the south-western corner of Scotland, every hill and knowe of which seems to be classic ground in the history of a stern struggle with persecuting prelacy. The study of such courageous testimony on behalf of religious liberty will tend to make the lamp of faith burn clear and steady.

PHŒNICIA. By G. Rawlinson. 6s. T. Fisher Unwin. Like its predecessors, this eighteenth volume of the "Story of the Nations" series is essentially popular in style. It seems to have been compiled with commendable care. Old Testament references are well incorporated, and the result is an instructive as well as deeply interesting book. The story begins with the earliest Canaanite occupation, and is brought down to the time when, to use Professor Rawlinson's words, under the iron heel of Rome the unhappy country ceased to be in any respect a political entity, and passed into a "geographical expression." Numerous illustrations embellish the work.

THE DISCIPLINE OF SUFFERING. By Samuel Garratt, M.A. William Hunt & Co. This book is not critical, but practical. It is intended for the help and comfort of doubting and sorrowing hearts. The author deals mainly with the Authorised Version, and adopts in most cases the ordinary interpretation. To many readers it will be refreshing to find the words "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in Him" retained; and still more so to read the author's fearless interpretation of xix. 25—27, as Job's hope of resurrection. The book will not only help many to understand "the discipline of suffering," but will give clearness and interest to all devout readers of the Book of Job.

CHRISTIANITY EAST AND WEST. By Thomas Grieve Clark. Hodder & Stoughton. This is a book in which the author makes the reader his companion in visiting many places of interest to which the great bulk of readers have no hope of paying a personal visit. A most entertaining and instructive companion the author proves. His acquaintance with history and philosophy; with the theories of Renan and Strauss and Hume; and with the claims and pretensions of the Roman and Anglican Churches enables him to enliven the journey with most edifying reflections. His descriptions, too, whether of ecclesiastical ceremonies, of persons, or of places are exceedingly graphic and real; while his passion for music and art enables him to discourse with interest upon specimens of those met with during the pilgrimage. Beginning at Edinburgh, the reader is made acquainted with its ecclesiastical history, its church polity, its doctrinal teaching, and some of the best and greatest of Scottish worthies. Then to the Continent, stopping at Vienna, Athens, and Kieff; and then eastward to the Holy Land; and back again through Naples, Rome, and Venice homeward. The reader will be interested in the description of Jerusalem, Bethlehem, and the Lake of Gennesaret; of Pompeii, Vesuvius, and Rome; and especially of the gorgeous, yet blasphemous, ceremonial of St. Peter's: and will be thankful to the author for his interesting companionship.

THE STORY OF THE LIFE OF JESUS. 2s. Hodder & Stoughton. A new edition of a very useful book, by the author of "The Story of the Bible." In easy language, and with many large illustrations, the "old, old story" is told in a manner calculated at once to charm and instruct the young.

STORY BOOKS FOR CHILDREN. Mr. A. Holness has added two more wholesome little volumes to his series of illustrated books for the young. KITTY'S EARLY DAYS shows how a poor little girl may serve God as "a light in a dark place." IN AN ISLE OF THE SEA is a Shetland story, full of adventure and incidents which will instruct as well as charm the young.

ON THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET DANIEL. 2s. 6d. An anonymous volume of "Comments." The work is provokingly diffuse, and more oracular in style than suggestive in contents. The author's method of interpretation, so far as it can be briefly defined, is a combination of what are known as historical and futurist views. Christian Commonwealth Publishing Co.

READINGS WITH OUR MOTHERS ON WOMEN OF THE BIBLE. By Mrs. S. O. Habershon. 1s. 6d. Partridge. The substance of these readings was given to a large class of mothers. Stories from the books of Ruth and Esther are treated in a very helpful manner. Many mothers would profit by a perusal of this little book, which has, moreover, a word of kindly instruction for all classes and all ages.

THE WAY OF SALVATION. By Rev. Horace Noel Nisbet & Co. For sincere and thoughtful inquirers this book will be found helpful. The doctrine is soundly evangelical; the argument is clear; the style easy and interesting, though wanting in freshness and vigour. In the appendix there is an attempt to defend the doctrine of the Imputed Righteousness of Christ, which is only moderately successful.

HISTORICAL CONNECTION BETWEEN THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS. By Rev. J. Skinner. 6d. T. & T. Clark. Another "Bible-class primer," and a specially useful one. In five chapters, subsectioned with remarkable precision, the author has given a very clear statement of the important events of the period "between the books," and he has also admirably pointed out the light which some of these throw upon New Testament history.

THE CIRCLE OF THE SEASONS. Hymns and verses for Seasons of the Church. By R. E. V. Elliot Stock. We cannot commend either the smoothness of the verses in this little book, or the purity of the writer's doctrine. To fall short of Keble in thought and rhythm is excusable, but to use extravagant language about the cross, and to find in the worthless Abimelech a type of Jesus Chaist, are errors into which his delicate taste and reverent spirit would never have fallen.

PALESTINE OF TO-DAY. Part i. of an illustrated serial bearing this title, contains ten beautiful plates by F. Thévoz & Co., of Geneva, and brief letterpress descriptions. The scenes include the Port of Jaffa, the Plain of Sharon, Ramleh, and Lydda, with others of great historical and natural interest. Unfortunately the descriptive part shows the hand of the foreign translator, Biblical and other names frequently appearing in their French dress. (Subscribers, 5s., non-subscribers, 6s. Marshall Bros.)

SUGGESTIVE TEACHING OUTLINES FOR WORKERS' TRAINING CLASSES. By John H. Elliot. This book contains a course of thirty-nine lessons, designed to cover a period of nine months' study. The general theme is the Bible, and it is treated in a threefold manner, so as to present the facts about the Book, the truths taught in it, and the best methods of using it. The teaching is excellent throughout. The pages, however, are sadly disfigured by verbal inaccuracies and misprints. (50 cents. W. W. Vanarsdale, 6, Arcade-court, Chicago.)

A CONCISE HISTORY OF THE CHURCH. By Alfred E. Knight. Partridge. The author set himself to supply general readers with a recital of the outstanding events of ecclesiastical life and thought from the Apostolic age to the establishment of the Reformation. He has succeeded admirably. Here, in one handy volume, is all that is essential, and much that is very interesting and instructive, succinctly and lucidly presented. The author holds that the period he has covered answers to the prophetic descriptions of the first five of the Seven Churches of the Apocalypse. His book is emphatically one for the times, and the more widely it is read the greater will be the general intelligence on struggles and sufferings which are only too sadly out of mind to-day.

Letters to the Editor.

MODERN MEDICAL MISSIONS.

DEAR SIR,—I am reading with interest the papers now appearing in THE CHRISTIAN, week by week, upon the subject of Foreign Missions. There are a few points in paper XI., published in your issue of Feb. 8, respecting medical missions, which I think ought not to be allowed to pass without remark from some of those who take a view of this particular matter the very opposite of that held by the writer of these articles.

I am glad to notice in the early part of the papers that the writer considers the command "Heal the sick" as a part of the Great Commission. He appears, however, strongly to deny that missionaries with a knowledge of modern medicine and surgery, who are preaching the Gospel and healing the sick in simple obedience to the command of Christ, are fulfilling the command, because God does not use them to bring about the result of the exercise of their gift in precisely the same manner as He did in the case of the Apostles. The writer's words are:—"Let those who wish to do so engage in medical, hospital, educational and other philanthropic enterprises; but let them not sail under the flag inscribed with the Great Commission. Why should they?" My answer is, because they are endeavouring to obey the command.

Every true medical missionary both preaches the Gospel and heals the sick; and he does neither the one nor the other in his own name. He, to my mind, above all other workers, if any distinction is to be made, has the greatest possible claim to "sail under the flag inscribed with the Great Commission."

Does it follow that the medical missionary has not received from God a gift of healing because the gift did not come to him in the manner in which it came to the Apostles and early Christians? Are we to shut our eyes to this important part of the Great Commission because in these days, for some reason or other, we do not see the gift bestowed miraculously? As well might the missionary going to the heathen expect to receive the gift of tongues miraculously, and therefore refuse to work hard to acquire by human means a knowledge of the language of the natives.

The only reason given, so far as I can discover, for concluding that modern medical missions should not be "regarded as part of the work of preaching the Gospel" is because the healing is "wrought by human means and through human wisdom, and require many appliances and much expense."

No medical missionary would dare to allow the heathen around him to think that in himself lay the power of healing their sicknesses; but would, and surely with justice could, declare the cures wrought to be as much the result of the grace and power of God as were the cures wrought by the Apostles.

As regards "human means and human wisdom," these surely are gifts not to be lightly esteemed in a servant of God when all are made to accord with the Word of God. Wisdom ceases to be wisdom when it runs counter to that Word. Is it not by human means such as dictionaries, grammars, and heathen teachers that we acquire a knowledge of heathen languages? And I am sure my fellow-missionary knows as well as I do that much wisdom is required in presenting the Gospel to the heathen, and that wise human means are required in the prosecution of effective missionary work.

I believe the medical missionary depends no more upon his means and wisdom in the exercise of his gift than the ordinary missionary does upon the means and wisdom he uses to reach the hearts of the people among whom he labours.

There is another remark which I cannot but notice, although I do not wish to appear hypercritical. It is this. The writer says: "Let it be understood that the simple preaching of the Gospel alone is the fulfilling of the commission." I contend that the fulfilling of the commission means more than a simple proclamation of the Gospel message. It includes the healing of the sick; and in the early part of the paper I understand the writer to say so himself. Christ not only preached the Gospel, but He "went about doing good." Everywhere He healed the sick, comforted the troubled, fed the hungry, cleansed the lepers (of whom probably only one in ten "returned to give glory to God"). And in how many other ways—who can tell?—did He remove prejudice, hatred, and indifference by manifesting in some practical way his sympathy with the people.

A. G. PARROTT.

Chingford, Essex.

DEAR SIR,—Medical missions as at present conducted are rather to be regarded as a means for proving to the heathen our sympathy with them than of God's power over them; and as a means of expressing sympathy, we may as well give a dose of medicine as a loaf of bread. But we should not point to the healing in one case or to assuaging of hunger in the other as a means suited to heathen minds of proving God's power.

If we are expecting those who oppose us to say, "This is the finger of God," we must produce some wonder that the magicians cannot imitate with their enchantments, and all that is at present being done in medical missions has been and is being done just as successfully by the children of this world. Our medical missions may be wrought in God: so were Moses' first signs; but we must rise to something higher yet if the whole world is to see and confess "the finger of God."

GRAHAM WILMOT BROOKE.

[We have received a lengthy letter on this subject by Dr. Maxwell, late medical missionary in Formosa, but we have not space for it in this issue.]

"THE CONVERSION OF ENGLAND."

DEAR SIR,—May I add a few words to my previous letter, lest the "confusion" apparent to your correspondent "L. D. D." may also elsewhere be unintentionally misunderstood?

I used the word "England" in its geographical sense, when speaking of our island's first conversion to Christianity, and did not think it necessary to distinguish it as "Britain" prior to the Anglo-Saxon occupation. I, with your correspondent, would be the last "to deny the Italian missionaries the honour due to them," but still I love to remember that quite apart from the earlier labours of the then almost forgotten British Church, St. Augustine was not actually the first to introduce Christianity, even to the Saxons.

Had it not been for Bertha, the Christian wife of Ethelbert, and Luidhard, once bishop of Senlis, who on her marriage came with her from Gaul, it is more than probable that the Roman mission would have had but scant welcome. She espoused her Pagan husband only on the condition that she might continue in England the exercise of the Christian religion in which she had been trained. Indeed, prior to the baptism of Ethelbert and his court, St. Augustine and his followers themselves worshipped with Bertha and Luidhard in the little church of St. Martin, near Canterbury, which still remains. Had it not been for seed previously sown by the discarded British Church, and more particularly the influence of the Christian Queen, it is possible that the noble purpose of Gregory the Great would never have been fulfilled.—Yours faithfully,

GEORGE F. E. SCOTT.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—A mission to fallen women in the West-end of London was terminated on Friday last at Craven Lecture Hall, Regent-street. Many attended, a considerable number being German and French. They were addressed by various ladies and gentlemen. Some appeared deeply touched at the kindness shown to them, and there is hope that not a few will be finally rescued.

HOLIDAY COTTAGES.—Free Cottage Homes to accommodate three or four working girls during their summer holiday are much needed in connection with the Y.W.C.A. Convalescent Sick Aid and Holiday Department. If one or two such Homes, furnished in the simplest manner (within a 3s. return fare from London), were put at our disposal rent free, board for the girls (7s. each per week), and matron's salary and board (about £2 10s. per month) being also provided, it would be a great assistance. The existing Homes are filled by those able to pay for themselves. Two cottages were thus put at our disposal last summer, and answered admirably, but the Holiday Club membership is rapidly increasing, so that we should require six more to meet the needs of the London work. (MISS) F. M. FRASER, Hon. Sec.

CANAL, GIPSY, AND VAN CHILDREN.—SIR,—A week ago I spent a few hours on the towing path of the Oxford Canal, near Rugby, and in twelve boats I saw there were about thirty canal children who, if the Acts were thoroughly carried out, would have been at school. Instead of which, they and thousands of other canal children are going without education. It is time that the Acts were thoroughly carried out, and the children brought under educational and sanitary influences. Later I visited about thirty families of gipsies in a truly pitiable and heart-rending plight, near the Prince Regent's-road, Royal Albert Docks, E. There were from eighty to one hundred poor gipsy and van children of school age growing up in the blackest midnight darkness, with no hand near to guide them to the light upon earth, or the light in heaven.—Sincerely yours,

GEORGE SMITH, of Coalville.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. A. G. Edwards, vicar of St. Peter's, Carmarthen, has been appointed to the bishopric of St. Asaph, Wales.

At the evening service on Sunday week an interesting ceremony took place in St. Augustine's Church, Highbury. A Jew—a young man of twenty-two years of age—was baptised by Rev. H. Goldberg, one of the curates of St. Augustine's, Mr. Goldberg having been the instrument of his conversion.

At the last monthly service for men at St. John's, Bradford, the sermon was preached by the Bishop of Penrith to a very large congregation. These special services were begun three years since, and the congregation has varied from 300 to 600 men. The addresses deal in a popular way with moral, social, and religious difficulties.

Arrangements have lately been made to hold a short Welsh service every Sunday at All Saints' Church, Margaret-street, near the great shops in Oxford-street, where a large number of young Welshmen are said to be employed. It is proposed shortly to attach to the staff of All Saints' a curate who will preach in the vernacular. For the present the pulpit is occupied each Sunday by different Welsh divines, who undertake to assist the new movement.

METHODIST.

The East London Wesleyan Mission is reaping as well as sowing. The Girls' Parlour has been a means of much good. The editor of The Methodist Recorder has been greatly struck with the wonderful change that has been wrought in many of the young women who go there.

In December last the Methodists at Wakefield commenced the holding of evangelistic services in the Royal Opera House, one of the largest theatres in the town. It is intended to continue the services for an indefinite period, Satan thus being met on his own ground. The effort has, up to the present, according to a correspondent of a Methodist contemporary, proved a "gigantic success."

A brass band has been formed at South Molton for the purpose of holding open-air and special evangelistic services in the streets. Every member of the band is also a member of the Wesleyan Society in South Molton. The band goes out on Sundays to the villages around, preaching the Gospel, and exhorting the people to repent and turn unto the Lord. The other day they went on a trip to a village called All-Ways-End, eleven miles away, the testimony of some of the members being blessed to several souls.

On Monday week a very successful Home Mission Convention took place in the Punshon Memorial Wesleyan Church, Bournemouth. The meetings were characterised with much enthusiasm and heartiness. Amongst the speakers were Revs. J. E. Clatham, W. Darlow Sarjeant, and Hugh Price Hughes. The latter, in the course of some remarks, referred to the need that still exists for aggressive evangelical work, and denied in the strongest terms that there is any truth in the assertion that the respectable artisan and working classes are infidels, and that infidelity is spreading. As a fact, he said, there is so much earnestness in the air that sham Christianity has become intolerable. They have only to be thorough and Christ-like, and the whole country will be on their side.

BAPTIST.

The ten days' mission in the London Baptist churches was inaugurated with a prayer-meeting at the Mission House in Fenchurch-street, on Monday week, Colonel Griffin presiding. Rev. J. T. Brisco delivered a stirring address, and several earnest prayers were offered, asking an abundant blessing upon the efforts put forth.

Rev. C. E. Sawday's successor at Kings Cross (Rev. J. T. Marsh) has supplemented the associations already established at Vernon Chapel by a fresh effort—the establishment of an Evangelistic Association, by which young men have the opportunity of meeting together for the purpose of preparing themselves for active [illegible]. It will not confine its labours entirely to the locality, but will endeavour to find work for its members in any part of the Metropolis.

The congregation worshipping for over seventeen years in the iron chapel at Lansdowne-road, Notting Hill, removed to their new chapel in Ellsworth-road in December last. Since then the pulpit has been supplied by neighbouring ministers (both Baptist and Congregational) and the pastor alternately. The congregations have been most encouraging, and there seems every prospect of a flourishing cause being established in that densely populated neighbourhood. The pastor is Rev. T. J. Cole.

On Sunday week Mr. Archibald Brown preached his annual special sermon to men only at the East London Tabernacle. The [illegible] being estimated at about [illegible] people. Mr. Brown mentioned that there was present in the congregation a man who, seventeen years previously, when the foundation of the Tabernacle was laid, cursed every stone of the structure. He had for years drawn a considerable income from the publication of the [illegible] which were [illegible] Mr. Brown's congregations. [illegible] Mr. Brown's missions became converted, and was present, though an invalid, to express an earnest testimony to the value of the work.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. John McNeill is to be inducted to the pastorate of Regent-square Church on Thursday evening next, Rev. Z. B. Wolfendale to be the preacher on the occasion. Mr. McNeill again preached in the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday last, there being crowded congregations both morning and evening.

SALVATION ARMY.

The Devizes corps have celebrated their first anniversary with great success. Considerably over one hundred have proved by their lives that conversion has been real, and altogether the work is in a healthy state.

Slum work has this winter been commenced at Newcastle-on-Tyne. The captain reports having found more poverty and wretchedness there than she ever witnessed in London. The poor people, however, as a rule receive the officers into their homes gladly.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The church at March, Cambs. (Rev. J. Lloyd James, pastor), reports the admission of fifty new members during the past year, seventy having been admitted in the previous year.

The anniversary of New-court Chapel, Tollington-park, N., was celebrated last week. The secretary, in presenting his annual report, spoke of the year then closed as an eventful one in the history of the church, particularly referring to the secession of Rev. J. Oswian Davies from the pastorate. The membership of the church numbers 302. Sixty new members joined during the year, the bulk of whom were fresh converts from the world. All the religious and social institutions and organisations connected with the church are in a flourishing condition.

By special invitation, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes met the members of the London Congregational Board in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on Tuesday afternoon, last week, to give them an address on the "Forward Movement" of Methodism. There were present about one hundred and fifty Congregational ministers, by whom Mr. Hughes was very kindly received, his account of the work, especially in the West-end, being listened to with many expressions of approval. The sympathy of the Congregationalists with this movement, Mr. Hughes thinks, is one of the most significant and hopeful signs of the times.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The Friends' Quarterly Examiner, just to hand, is a very interesting magazine. Beginning with a Review of William Edward Forster's Life, by the Editor, it contains other thirteen articles, covering a wide range of thought, and sustaining a high tone throughout.

As a result of John T. Dorland's visit to Bristol, and the wave of blessing felt there, the young Friends have since had a social gathering at a Friend's house, when the presence of the Lord was considered and felt, and fifteen offered prayer. Such a method of "gathering up the fragments" is the way to feed hungry disciples, and might be imitated.

By mutual arrangement the two Friends' missions in the Holy Land, viz., Brumana, on the Lebanon, and Ramallah, near Jerusalem, have been divided and placed—the former under English, the latter under American Friends. To thoroughly establish Ramallah work under the new arrangement, Charles M. Jones and Timothy B. Hussey, of New England, are there, and their presence will doubtless cheer and help the devoted English and native labourers.

Most cheering and blessed revival work has been going on in Indiana Yearly Meeting. At South Wabash, after [illegible]'s mission, 103 professed definite blessing, including [illegible] children, "happily converted"; and at Marion, [illegible] the efforts of one Friend, a new congregation is organised, and a meeting-house is to be built forthwith. In New York Yearly Meeting, too, at Glen's Falls, 103 professed conversion, and many the baptism of the Holy Spirit at a series of meetings.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Mr. John Climie, evangelist, is conducting meetings this week at Carnoustie Hall, Glasgow.

Mr. Steedman, evangelist, is conducting special meetings at Cambuslang, under the auspices of the Railway Mission.

Mr. M. Ferguson, evangelist from the Lanarkshire Christian Union, has begun a special mission in Free Church, Ellerigehill, with much blessing.

A Prison Aid Society, on similar lines to the St. Giles', London, to rescue and reclaim discharged prisoners and convicts, has been started in Glasgow.

Miss Rainy, sister of Principal Rainy, has been visiting the island of Lewis for the purpose of creating greater interest in the Free Church Indian Mission. Large audiences gathered to listen to Miss Rainy's interesting story of what she has herself seen and heard in India.

A valedictory missionary meeting in connection with the United Presbyterian Church was held in the Waterloo Rooms, Glasgow, on Sunday week. Farewell was taken of Rev. James Duke, who is about to return to Kafir Caldar, and Messrs. T. M. Young and J. A. Grieg, who are going to Manchuria, North China, as medical missionaries.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Brocktorough, Mr. Wm. Mitchell, for nearly sixty years Methodist class leader.—At Belfast, Mr. Thomas Vernon, for nearly half a century a generous supporter of the Methodist Church.—Rev. Thomas Howells, for twenty-eight years pastor of the Congregational Chapel, Trudoxhill, near Frome, Somerset.—Rev. Alex. Keith, senior minister of the Free Church, Strichen, Aberdeenshire.—Mr. R. M. Norracott, an earnest Christian worker connected with Myrtle-street Baptist Chapel, Liverpool.—Rev. James Wallace, parish minister of Tinwald, Dumfries.—Rev. J. F. Brindle, who was for several years vicar of St. John's, Bacup, Yorks.—Rev. Gilbert Mackenzie, a native Christian missionary connected with the American Presbyterian Mission at Saharanpur, India.—Rev. Ewen Campbell, minister of the Established Church, Lochs, Lewis, N.B.—Rev. Canon H. W. Jones, rector of Sculthorpe, Norfolk.—Mr. Alex. Beattie, a vice president of the C.M.S., and for many years a warm friend of the Society.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Commander-in-Chief has informed the National Temperance Federation that civilians will not be allowed to enter canteens without the "special sanction of the commanding officer."

The workers in connection with the Liverpool Diocesan C.E.T.S. last year induced 1500 to sign the pledge. Besides the police-courts and prison gates, they visited large numbers of men in various public employments.

Mr. William Livesey, The Breck, Poulton-le-Fylde, will send to anyone sending a stamped addressed wrapper copies of "The Great Delusion," an illustrated poster showing the folly of ale drinking, and of which his father was the author.

Intemperance is reported to be on the increase among the young in Austria. It is by no means rare for teachers to find their scholars under the influence of drink, and inquiry then shows, in many cases, that the parents, being of bad character as well as poor, have given cheap spirituous liquors to the children to warm them and at the same time make them forget their hunger.

In a discussion in the Glasgow Free Presbytery on the subject of temperance, Rev. James Wells declared that nine-tenths of the non-churchgoing among the humble classes is due to drink. There are some 3400 men in the lodging-houses of the city, and he thought it morally certain that not one is a teetotaler. Mr. Oatts attributed much of the prevalent drinking to the recent Exhibition, saying that he knew many young men who began to drink while it was open, and are now being ruined.

Watercress and Flower-Girl Mission and Brigade.

PRESIDENT .. .. .. THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.

PROPOSED HOME FOR LITTLE ORPHAN FLOWER-GIRLS.

OUR Missionaries and Bible-woman, who spend much of their time on the streets at night, and during the small hours of morning, meet with many homeless children, for whom they now ask sympathy and aid.

There are really hundreds of such, who are literally driven into the streets by the depraved men and women who have charge of them, in order to get money by selling, begging, or stealing; and while the resources thus obtained are squandered in self-indulgence, the children—who may be said to range from five to twelve years of age—are ill-used if they disappoint the expectations of their unnatural taskmasters or depraved mothers.

Some of these little ones are really orphans; others belong to struggling widows; but in any case they may be described as NOBODY'S CHILDREN; and because they inevitably yield to evil surroundings, they are classed with fallen girls, even before they are out of their childhood. To save such is now the aïm of the Committee.

Already

from thirteen to sixteen years of age, have been taken from the dangers of the streets; and after training, as members of our Brigade, have gone forth into respectable situations. The Committee now ardently desire to save those girls of the same class who are of more tender years.

Suitable freehold premises in the North of London, and capable of accommodating from thirty to forty children, have been offered.

ONE THOUSAND POUNDS

will enable the Committee to complete the purchase, and to furnish the house. A Lady has promised £100 on condition that £900 is raised at once, so that no time may be lost in saving these little girls.

DONATIONS will be thankfully received and acknowledged if sent to the Office of "THE CHRISTIAN," 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.; or to Mr. J. A. GROOM, Hon. Supt., 8, Sekforde Street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

THE CATACOMBS AT ROME:
THEIR CONTENTS AND TEACHINGS.
A Vindication of Pure and Primitive CHRISTIANITY; and an Exposure of the Corruptions of ROMANISM: Derived from the Sepulchral Remains of the EARLY CHRISTIANS at ROME.

By BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S., Chamberlain of the City of London.
WITH MANY ILLUSTRATIONS.

Tinted Covers, 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
Presentation Edition: Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

From DR. ABBOTT, Head Master of the City of London School:—
"I heartily agree with you that the tendency toward Romanism and Sacerdotalism denotes a misappreciation of the fundamental truths of Christianity; and any one who can do anything to lead people back to those simple spiritual truths is doing a good work for mankind."

From the DEAN OF ACHONRY:—
"'THE CATACOMBS AT ROME' is one of the most useful books I know, as showing the purity and simplicity of the early Church at Rome, and exposing the spurious Christianity of the modern Church of Rome, and the corruptions and incrustations by which she has hidden or destroyed the pure faith of the New Testament."

"The excellent Chamberlain of the City of London has given in these pages a clear and accurate account of the interesting remains of early Christianity in the Catacombs of Rome. Many of the pictures depict harrowing scenes of idolatrous cruelty, and others show the inscriptions on the walls of these underground sepulchres. All through the book is a desire manifested to vindicate the purity of the Christianity of those times, compared with the corruptions of Rome."—The Bookseller.

"MANY INFALLIBLE PROOFS."
The Evidences of Christianity;
Or, The Written and Living Word of God.
By ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D.

"A handbook of Evidences of Christianity by which the author found his way out of the deep darkness of doubt into the full light of day, and found that the Bible was the Book of God and Christ the Son of God. May it help many out of Doubting Castle!"—Methodist Times.

"A book like this deserves a place beside Cooper's 'Bridge of History over the Gulf of Time,' as a forcible and interesting evidence of the truths of Christianity. Dr. Pierson tells us in his preface that, having himself been in the dense thicket of doubt, he is desirous of leading others out by the pathway by which he emerged into the light of faith. This volume reiterates the unshaken proofs of the Bible as a Divine Revelation, and also shows how Jesus Christ was none other than the Son of God. It is neatly bound, and has a portrait of the writer."—The Bookseller.

"'You call yourself a Protestant: do you know any good reason why? Are you such because you were brought up to be?—and is that all the answer you have to give for your faith and hope? Then I do not see how you can be sure you are not as wrong, and as mistaken, as any Mohammedan or Pagan or Papist whom you condemn.' These words, culled from Dr. Pierson's book, very effectually denote its character. The majority of people believe because they believe; and if called upon for a reason (we avoid for obvious causes use of the word 'proof,' which is so frequently in our author's mouth), they are unable to give one. It is for the purpose of aiding those who have begun to think for themselves, and have fallen into doubt, that Dr. Pierson has written his book. It conveys clearly and vigorously the origin for the truths of the Scripture, and the evidence upon which the Christian religion is founded. In this respect it may favourably be commended."—Publishers' Circular.

THE R. T. S. BOOKS ON ROMANISM.

EXTRACT FROM THE COMMITTEE'S ADDRESS IN R. T. S. REPORT:—

"In reference to the publications of the Society on Romanism, the Committee feel it most important to state that, 'without reference to points of a secular or merely controversial nature, they consider the Luthers, the Melanchthons, the Tyndales, the Cranmers, the Latimers, and the Bradfords of former days, as their patterns in sound doctrine and active exertion.'"

WHAT THE REV. E. A. STUART, OF HOLLOWAY, SAYS:—

"With regard to the Religious Tract Society I think we need have no fear, for they are always perfectly safe. It is not only that they are safe in doctrine, and pure in the truth that they convey, but I thank God also that, so far as I have come across them, they are loving, gentle, and Christlike in their spirit."

Thousands of Fishermen are engaged all the year round in providing OUR TABLES with fish. These men, who FOR US hazard their lives and toil through furious blasts and sleety storm (not only cut off from the comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid), may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy. THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS, carrying to the Fishermen the message of Divine mercy and love, affording relief in sickness, and cheering dull lives by their presence.

HELP WANTED FOR THE TOILERS OF THE DEEP.

NINE Mission Vessels now cruise with the Trawling Fleets, each being at once a CHURCH, DISPENSARY, LIBRARY, and CLUB. Funds are required to provide a Mission Vessel for EVERY FLEET, and for the maintenance of the HOSPITAL MISSION SHIPS Queen Victoria and Albert. The urgent necessity of these floating Hospitals is shown by the fact that during last year nearly 4,000 cases of accident and sickness were successfully treated on board the Dispensary of the Mission Vessels. WHO WILL HELP? Large or small Offerings will be thankfully acknowledged.

A NEW COMMENTARY ON GENESIS.

"Thirty-five years have elapsed since Prof. Delitzsch's Commentary on Genesis first appeared; fifteen years since the fourth edition was published in 1872. Ever in the van of historical and philological research, the venerable author now comes forward with another fresh edition, in which he incorporates what fifteen years have achieved for illustration and criticism of the text of Genesis. . . . We congratulate Prof. Delitzsch on this new edition. By it, not less than by his other commentaries, he has earned the gratitude of every lover of Biblical science, and we shall be surprised if, in the future, many do not acknowledge that they have found in it a welcome help and guide."—Professor S. Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. E. R. Young, Missionary to the Cree Indians, North-West Territory, Canada.

Monday, March 18, has been appointed by the Irish branch of the Evangelical Alliance as the annual day for special and united prayer for Ireland.

We commend to our readers the important and quite practicable suggestions of our correspondent, Mr. Charles W. Pidduck, in his letter on "The Management of Railways," p. 11.

We regret to learn that during the last week Mr. Denham Smith's strength has rapidly failed. The symptoms of his disease have become more prominent, and it is with difficulty that he can be induced to take nourishment.

Mr. George C. Needham will conduct evangelistic services for young men from Monday to Friday (inclusive), next week, at 8 p.m., at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street. We hope there will be a large muster of young men from city establishments, and that Christian workers will rally round the evangelist.

We direct the earnest attention of our London readers to the announcement, in our list of special events, of the weekly gatherings to be held in Devonshire House, Bishopsgate, for prayer and conference on great national and social hindrances to the Gospel. These meetings should afford a fitting occasion for united confession and prayer, as well as for concerted action in seeking to abate and abolish the evils which threaten our national prosperity and hinder the progress of Christ's kingdom.

In its literary criticisms The Nonconformist and Independent said recently:—

> One of the most portentous indications of the theology of the day is the extreme of its revolt from governmental processes. An invertebrate, good-natured mercy is not the highest nor the truest conception of Christ's salvation.

It may be hoped that this language is an indication of a healthy re-action against a teaching in the pulpit that has been undermining the very foundations of Christianity, which has gone to destroy all idea of guilt, has left the sinner under the power of a fatal presumption, and has deplorably relaxed the spiritual fibre of churches. The greatest of theologians, while insisting upon Divine love as the essence of Deity, have always enforced the judgments and punishments of sin which necessarily arose from God's sovereign relations to the universe; and it has been a shallow theology which has in these days seen only a justifying righteousness in the Gospel, and not a retributive one.

Next week we shall commence the publication of a second series of evangelistic narratives by Rev. W. Haslam.

We find no difficulty in what are called the imprecatory Psalms, but we have sometimes been staggered by what seemed an imprecation of evil by the Apostle Paul on Alexander the coppersmith. It is a relief, therefore, to find that the Revised Version of 2 Tim. iv. 14 reads: "Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil: the Lord will render to him according to his works." Whereas the A.V. makes it almost a curse: "The Lord reward him according to his works." We may sometimes be tempted to utter a malediction, but we have not apostolic sanction for this, even though the object of our displeasure be such an one as Alexander the coppersmith.

A correspondent writes:—

> Little do the superficial preachers of our time realise how unutterably they pain long-established Christian men by their premature and rash conclusions. I recall a time when an honoured member came out of the stormy atmosphere of the House of Commons, and in effect said to me, with a pang of suffering I cannot describe, "I could bear all this; but it is when I go northward to spend a quiet Sunday, and listen to a preaching that explains away the great doctrines of Christianity, and leaves me neither consolation nor motive in the difficult duties of life—oh, it is this changed representation of the Gospel that is my great trouble in life." Some years have passed since then, but never shall I forget the distress of a legislator, and a man of universally recognised wisdom in business, as he thus spoke to me.

The Independent (New York) lately had some remarks on "Humour in the Pulpit," which apply to both sides of the Atlantic. The humour spoken of is not that of Luther or Latimer, which is as sunshine and relief to weighty arguments, but the modern affectation which is common, and for the sake of effect turns preaching into third-rate comedy. That, says the writer, which is often on my lips in these later days, is to say to the preacher, "Quit your fooling and come down." He adds, "Directly the preacher is lost in the comedian, the congregation sink below the level of the playgoer; the children lose their sense of reverence; sin ceases to shock; the holiest themes become parts of a performance; and no atheism can become so blasphemous as that which fills the sanctuary of God with echoes of a laughter upon which his shadow would bring an instant hush."

Proposed alterations of the code are announced by the Educational Department. The system of payment by results will be dealt with; a new syllabus of essential subjects for primary instruction is to be prepared; itinerant teachers, as organising inspectors, are suggested; the pupil-teacher arrangements are to be reconstructed, and a check is to be given to the passing on of incompetent ones; night schools are to be dealt with by liberal measures; and greater justice to trained, rather than untrained teachers, will be recommended. The Revised Code will thus deal with subjects of widely felt interest, and may do more in the way of improvement than has been hitherto attempted.

China's Millions for March conveys the pleasing information that up to February 19 £3600 had been advised by telegraph to China as available for the relief of the famine distress. This amount has been given in sums ranging from 6d. to £1000, the latter generous gift being an offering from "Father, mother, and seven children." From the districts affected by the Yellow River disaster the missionaries of the China Inland Mission have sent reports. Dr. Douthwaite, of the same Mission, earnestly calls attention to the awful destitution in the province of Shantung. In a letter dated Chefoo, January 1, he says:—

> A district of about 6000 square miles has been devastated so completely that at the lowest estimate 1,500,000 men, women, and children, are now reduced to the verge of starvation. Unless relief is speedily afforded from without, the greater part, if not all, of this great multitude must inevitably perish. The native authorities are doing little or nothing to relieve this distress.

The following telegram from Mr. Hudson Taylor, dated Shanghai, February 19, forbids the hope that the need is less urgent now than when Dr. Douthwaite wrote:—"Shantung—Manchuria—frightful distress—assistance is urgently required." As previously stated, help should be addressed to Mr. B. Broomhall, secretary C.I.M., 2, Pyrland-road, London, N.

Mr. Caine and Missions.

Mr. Baynes, the secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, has written a manly and temperate answer to the strictures to which we alluded last week, as having been passed on the operations of the Society in India, by Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P. It is shown that Mr. Caine has based his conclusions on inaccurate statistics; the actual number of missionaries being less, and that of converts more, than stated. Mr. Baynes also affirms that the Baptist Missionary Soeiety has withdrawn, during late years, from general promiscuous education, leaving that to the Government, and confining itself to education entirely based on the Word of God. In addition, Mr. Baynes lays stress on the numbers which are constantly being added to the churches from heathen darkness, and which compensate for the inevitable drain always in progress, through natives moving to localities where there are no Christian churches of the same order. Mr. Baynes so far answers the charges, courting investigation, and professing the willingness of the committee to consider any methods better adapted to secure the conversion of men to Christ.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson also replies to Mr. Caine, in a similar sense, on behalf of the London Missionary Society.

As we hear the different views of earnest men on the varied phases of the great Missionary problem, we feel that much may justly be said on both sides. Very often the truth lies between the extreme views on either side. There is a growing need that we should address ourselves to construction, rather than the destruction of agencies on which God has undoubtedly set his seal of approval.

Missions and their Critics.

The present time has well been called the crisis of missions. They are passing under the searching light of friendly inquiry, and through the fire of hostile criticism. The former is a healthy sign of the times; but the latter presents dangers to be carefully avoided. It is essential that Christians at home should be both personally interested in their brethren and sisters at work in the foreign field, and intelligently informed as to the nature and the necessities of their work, to their minutest details. But it would be a disastrous consequence of the present spirit of inquiry if the hearts of missionaries were discouraged abroad, or their hands weakened by loss of confidence at home. They have gone down into the depths trusting us to hold the rope; it would be unpardonable if we forsook our easier post while they cannot escape from their more perilous one.

Our Foreign Missions as a whole, whatever their failings or shortcomings, represent the best of our Christianity. In the devotedness of the labourers and the success with which God has blessed them, they compare more than favourably with the churches at home. To discourage Foreign Missions would be to blunt the edge of our sword and to break off the point of our spear; worse than this, it would be to sacrifice David with his sling and stone.

We do not here dwell upon the inaccurate attacks of Canon Taylor, or the questionable criticisms of Mr. Caine, M.P. In the papers on "The Question of the Hour," our missionary friend has urged, with great force as we think, his view, which indeed was that great man Edward Irving's view, of the principles on which the Great Commission was to be carried out. In giving publicity to these papers we do not pledge ourselves to all they advocate. It is on every ground desirable that we should give ample opportunity for the expression of the opinions of those whose position and experience entitle them to be heard in modification of the missionary's views, or in opposition to his contention.

It would be impossible for us to insert a promiscuous correspondence, but at the close of these articles we shall be prepared to follow them by a series of papers in reply, to the writer or writers of which we will submit all letters received, so that every important consideration may have attention.

It is not necessary that we should continue the anonymity of the writer of the articles now drawing to a close. They are by Mr. E. F. Baldwin, of Mogador, Morocco, whose narrative, "A Missionary Journey according to Matt. x.," shows that he has the courage of his convictions, and that he is shaping his life and work in accordance with them.

It would not be desirable, even if it were possible, suddenly to alter the whole method of missionary procedure. The sound principle, not to change horses in the middle of a stream, may be remembered here; but, as no one will contend that in our Foreign Missions the Church of Christ has done the best it was possible for her to do, so no one should be displeased that an attempt has here been made to discover what our Lord and Saviour meant to be the method in which his command should be fulfilled: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

MAJOR WHITTLE IN EDINBURGH.

The meetings during the past week were held in Newington Parish Church, which is situated in a part of the city that has been, in some respects, less evangelised than others. The noon prayer-meetings in the Free Assembly Hall have been well attended, and here again the ministers and leading laymen have come day after day, and have held up the preacher's hands. The "Bread of Life" has been the subject, and Jesus has been lifted up, to the rejoicing of his servants, the winning of unsaved ones, and the restoration of backsliders.

The day before leaving Edinburgh Rev. John McNeill and Major Whittle dined together, and the former urged on our friend the advisibility of following up his great Sunday night gatherings in the circus. He showed how services in such a place were calculated to reach a large class of young men who had ceased to attend church, but who would resent the imputation of being among the lapsed masses; who were not affected by infidel sentiments farther than the natural heart always is so; and who, it may be, purposed, when they became the heads of families, to return to the church-going of their fathers' homes.

"They have come up," said Mr. McNeill, "to this great city, and have got clear, in the meantime, of parental restraints. Everything is new to them, and a sense of unfettered freedom has possessed their minds. I have tried to put myself into their place, and to see how it is that the services of the sanctuary, after the license of the theatre and music-hall, become irksome. They have become unused to sitting still, and saying nothing; and here, in church, they are called upon to do so for an hour and a half, which is a long time for a young fellow full of animal spirits to restrain himself. To his unawakened mind the message, unless delivered with unusual freshness, simplicity, and power, is uninteresting, the services formal, the language conventional, and the whole atmosphere of the place depressing. Soon he gets quite out of the way, even of thinking to go to church, and he would dread to be seen sitting in a pew, lest some comrade should hear of it. But the circus is neutral ground; he can get up and leave when he pleases, if his attention is not engaged, and he can take his young lady friend with him. Thus both sexes, at a critical age, may be reached, if the service be made bright with a good choir and hearty singing; with happy Christian workers about, to receive them cordially, and find them comfortable seats; and, above all, if the speaker will seek to adapt himself to their circumstances, sympathise with their sorrowings, deal kindly, yet fearlessly, with their consciences, and get his heart filled with love for their souls. Here preaching, as it is conventionally understood, is out of the question; it must be quiet, intense speaking, simple, direct, loving."

I wish I could reproduce Mr. McNeill's burning words, which are eloquent even in conversation, but I hope I have given their import. His impression was that Major Whittle's words and methods would continue the interest that had been awakened, and might be the means of garnering much precious seed that had been already sown.

The first circus meeting was held on Sabbath evening, and on the same afternoon, at five, there was a meeting for men in the Free Assembly Hall, special seats being reserved for students. Professor Henry Drummond, who is holding Sunday evening meetings for students, as in former years, attended, and took part in last Sabbath afternoon meeting along with Professor Simpson. On the present occasion fifty young men rose for prayer. On arriving at the circus it seemed as if as many nearly were outside as in, and it was with great difficulty that we reached the platform. Close on four thousand persons must have been present, and, from first to last, the power of God was present to heal. The text was, "Look unto Me, and be ye saved," &c., and as the Gospel was faithfully, clearly, and forcibly presented, the vast audience sat spellbound. At the close fully two-thirds remained to the after-meeting; and when those were asked to rise who wished to take Jesus as their Saviour and Lord, more than a hundred responded to the invitation, and many precious sheaves were brought in by the Christian workers. Mr. McNeill's expectation of immediate and extensive reaping was quite borne out, and doubtless many of them had been awakened at his meetings. The writer had the joy of pointing to the Lamb of God one who for years had been a Secularist, and who had not a Bible at home, for he had burnt it.

The evening evangelistic meetings will be held this week, in Broughton-place United Presbyterian Church. We ask earnest prayer that He who is mighty may do for us great things.

CONFERENCE AT SUNDERLAND.

A Conference on "The Claims of Christ and the Claims of the Heathen" was held in the Assembly Hall, Fawcett-street, Sunderland, on February 11, 12, 13. There was a season of prayer every morning, and three meetings were held each day. "Ye are not your own" was the keynote of some of the earliest addresses, and in the evening of the first day, "The Jews in relation to the Evangelisation of the World" was dealt with by Rev. John Wilkinson.

On the second day the claims of several mission agencies were advocated. Mr. John McAuliffe spoke of Bible carriage work; Mrs. Gurney detailed the aims and methods of the Christian Police Association; and the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen was described by a skipper of one of the Mission vessels. Dr. John Lowe spoke on Medical Missions; Mrs. Lowe on Zenana Missions; the Misses Leitch on Ceylon; Rev. C. G. Moore on China; and Mr. E. H. Glenny on Africa. The needs of the heathen world were very earnestly set forth, and it was held that the love of Christ, and the miserable darkness of the heathen, should constrain those who fear God to render more vigorous help in the evangelisation of the world.

"The drink question in relation to foreign missions" was considered on the closing day, references being also made to the opium iniquity. Rev. D. R. Kilpatrick pleaded the cause of Spain, now open to the preaching of the Gospel, after having been sealed for three hundred years. Rev. R. McAll having spoken of efforts in France which have been signally blessed of God, Mr. G. Wilmot Brooke commended the millions of Central Africa to prayerful sympathy and active effort. Mr. W. Spencer Walton delivered several addresses, one of them on South Africa. The Conference was a time of refreshing to many Christian people. Six workers are in the foreign field as the outcome of previous conferences.

OLD FORD MISSION.—This mission is doing a most useful, though quiet, work among the poor at the East-end, under the honorary superintendence of Mr. Arthur Farnan. From his statement, at the recent annual meeting, it appears that the work throughout the year has been well sustained. One feature of this good work is that it is, for the most part, accomplished by voluntary helpers.

PASTOR BROWN ON AMUSEMENTS.—A ministerial correspondent writes us concerning Pastor A. G. Brown's pamphlet, "The Devil's Mission of Amusement":—I feel it to be a timely and much-needed protest against a serious evil. I wish I could afford to give away the pamphlet largely, but I cannot; I have bought a few copies for this purpose. Could your readers, who have the means, place at your disposal sufficient money to give parcels of the pamphlet to those who would undertake to circulate it amongst those who are not at all likely to see it, unless given to them in this way, and yet who may most of all need to have their attention directed to the subject?

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Situation surveyed, Defects disclosed, and the Church recalled to her Lord's Instructions.

XIV.—Christ's Instructions for his Missionaries:

IN our last we saw that in this missionary charter our Lord has given us that form of equipment and activity which alone is consonant with the truth to be represented and the effect to be wrought; that the truth required it, and the world needed it. It was indispensable to the servant himself; and it is suited to the holy poverty in which the Lord would have had his Church abide. But this thought embodies much more that is profitable, which we will now seek to unfold.

IT IS THE MANNER IN WHICH ALL THOSE THROUGH WHOM GOD HAS BROUGHT HELP AND SALVATION TO THE SONS OF MEN HAVE EVER COME. This is true in the spirit, and in much also of the letter. They have been men of no condition, with nothing to recommend them to human wisdom. If they have started out with worldly advantages they have soon parted with them. Such was Joseph—despised, hated, enslaved, falsely accused, and imprisoned; and Moses, turning from the riches of Egypt to embrace the reproach of Christ, and leaving his vocation and portion in Jethro's house in Midian to take his way with only the shepherd's crook, which became "the rod of God" in his hand; and the Levites, who had no portion in Israel, for God was their inheritance; and the Judges the Lord raised up, who delivered his people out of the hand of them that spolied them, —Othniel, a younger son; Ehud, left-handed; Shamgar, the hero of the ox-goad; Deborah, a woman; timid Gideon, whose family was poor in Manasseh, and he the least in his father's house; Jephthah, the son of a harlot; Samson, blind and old, and dying as he conquered. Such also was Elijah, destitute and homeless; and Elisha, who, by sacrificing his oxen and burning their implements, crossed the river of his hazardous service; and who returned from the rapture of Elijah with only the mantle that had fallen upon him, but with the "double portion of the Spirit"; and of the prophets, Ezekiel and Daniel, captives; Amos, a herdman; Jonah, from the fish's belly.

All these, "of whom the world was not worthy," were men of faith, and therefore divested of the things of sight; they were spiritual men, entrusted with spiritual business, and hence appearing among men disrobed of earth's garments, which do not become the form that faith takes on.

Pre-eminently is all this true of John the Baptist, the greatest of prophets, who, like Samson, was a Nazarite from the womb, wearing the three marks of a Nazarite—separation from earthly joy, from the touch of moral death or defilement, and in complete subjection to God. His severe simplicity and abstemiousness consorted well with his calling and message. In him the missionary may behold his proper type as a forerunner and herald of the again approaching kingdom.

THESE INSTRUCTIONS ALSO OUTLINE THE CONDITION TO WHICH ALL SPIRITUALITY TENDS, AND IS BUT THE EXHIBITION OF THE PRINCIPLES OF CHRISTIANITY CARRIED TO THEIR FURTHEST REACH. The full and normal result of a heavenly life, manifesting itself amid the circumstances of earth, is seen in its perfection in the earthly life of the Lord Jesus. We may not lift the veil the Holy Spirit has seen fit to throw over the first thirty years of that life—that sinless, quietly lived, unostentatious page of his history before He publicly took his place of ministry for God. But we know He then had a home and friends, and doubtless tasted the responsibilities of those upon whom others depend for material supplies, for they afterwards said of Him: "Is not this the carpenter?" This part of his earthly experience may be considered as somewhat analogous, in some respects at least, to the manner of life appropriate to the private Christian.

But when He took his place of public ministry, and began moving among men as the "Apostle of our profession," He arrayed Himself in just this outward condition, with its spiritual accompaniments, that He appointed for his missionaries. He was the embodiment of every truth He taught. He was without those accessories of life from whose use He interdicted his disciples, and which we found, in God's deep wisdom, cover the entire range of those forces and appliances by which the world is laid hold of and enjoyed. It was his will that the same lofty ideal should ever be before the eyes of men; that it should ceaselessly utter its hallowed lessons of life and lip in the persons of men, real and yet spiritualised, refined from the coarse admixture of earth, and radiant with heaven's beauty.

But the position was so unique that the many can only approach it. Business and domestic responsibilities hold them in a set of circumstances which are providential, and in which they are bidden to abide with God. Their outward life must indeed be conformed to the unworldliness and holy simplicity of Christ. They must sell all superfluous possessions, and, as they value a heart ever opening heavenward, must not accumulate treasure on earth. Worldly position must be relinquished, the endless meaningless formalities that occupy the world's people eschewed, and all those adventitious and artificial distinctions which mark these modern days despised. Thus they ever tend to the lofty pattern these missionary instructions give us. But their likeness to Christ, the prototype in all inward exercises and outward service of believers, is necessarily modified by their circumstances. Many of them must needs have at least some possessions, a purse, a fixed abode, the responsibilities of social and domestic relations, with their time and strength-consuming demands. And herein they may honour their Lord, if, indeed, they honestly cut off all that is redundant, self-ministering and worldly, and that inheres not in the nature of their calling as Christians.

But Christ's exact example must not only be approached but reproduced. He would have it live on through the ages. What the light is to the lighthouse and it to the sea, Christ's life is to the faith and it to the nations. It must not cease to cast its intense and serene light across the waters. Therefore, He constituted this lasting order of Apostles, of sent ones, sent by Him into the world, as He, the "Apostle of our profession," was sent by the Father. In them, in their measure, as in Him, would He ever have witnessed, to the full, that lofty character and those lowly conditions which faith and love, by the certain operation of spiritual law, take to themselves. As Rome placed her colonies, which were bits of herself, with her prestige and privileges, on the confines of her kingdom, so Christ purposed that upon and beyond the ever-enlarging borders of his kingdom, should ever appear these reproductions of Himself, members of the order this document establishes. In them He would manifest his life in the same lowly and dependent condition in which He lived it: through them He would multiply his own mighty works, and speak his own irresistible words to the end of the age. As far as weak man could reflect his moral glory, these favoured ones should. Hallowed and heavenly purpose! Its glory shone out and gladdened and blessed men for a little time, and then paled and vanished, eclipsed by that which has the power to blot out all the fair spiritual creation of God—unbelief.

Seeing, as we have now shown, that in his appointments for his missionaries, Christ gave that form to which, by the law of its operation, all spirituality tends, how beautiful and divinely suitable it appears! Afterwards, as God the Spirit reviewed these spiritual warriors, left by the Captain of salvation to carry the war into the enemies' country, He said, by the lips of Paul, the chief one among them, "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are: that no flesh should glory in his presence." These are the five ranks with which God will overcome the things that are, and overthrow human wisdom and strength, viz., things foolish, things weak, things base, things despised, and things which are not. How like they are to Christ's order of missionaries! Thus the Spirit, long after the giving of the great commission to preach the Gospel to every creature, accords with that manner of preaching it instituted by Christ.

We think the ideal missionary, as he grapples with his work and walks with God therein, will perceive that the fittings and furnishings of prudence with which he started out hinder rather than help him, and if he be a man of faith, and with a mind open to the light, LITTLE BY LITTLE HE WILL PART WITH THOSE PROPS OF EARTH AND PRACTICES OF HUMAN WISDOM, WHICH ARE AT VARIANCE WITH THESE INSTRUCTIONS. It may not have been brought to his notice that these are his directions; and yet his spiritual instinct will gravitate towards this true model. In his journeyings it may transpire that, having started out full, he unwittingly comes into this very condition of need and dependence, when he is glad to receive his bread from "the worthy" he encounters.

This fruitful principle, that all spirituality tends to clothe itself in this outward form, yields us yet another weighty thought—viz., that SUCCESS IN MISSION WORK WILL BE IN PROPORTION AS THESE DIRECTIONS ARE CONFORMED TO. Not because they have been before the eye as a goal to be reached, but rather because the truer the missionary, and the more characterised by faith and disinterestedness, the more he would unconsciously shape his outward state in conformity to that of the Apostolic messenger. Hence, as his faith and self-denial determine both the measure of this conformity and his success, the conformity becomes a true gauge of success. The annals of missions from the beginning illustrate and prove this statement. He who would set about arranging this evidence, would be employing himself in a most interesting research, and place the cause of missions under lasting obligation.

In our own day there are significant indications of the truth of this remark we are dwelling on, to which we may well give heed. How glorious, then, would be the result of a thorough return and perfect conformity to our Lord's directions! An eminent advocate of missions said: "I think the lame and partial success which has attended modern missions in the way of conversion, compared with those of former times, should have humbled us to revise the principles upon which we have proceeded, and see whether there be not a large mixture of human wisdom and creature-trust in our measures."

But let not those who have yielded themselves to the Lord's work abroad, or who desire to do so, be stumbled or discouraged because of the loftiness of the ideal. It cannot be attained by all, or by many at a bound. If it be held before the gaze with the honest purpose of conforming oneself to it, as the strengthening grace of God is given, all will be well. Our Lord is pleased to vouchsafe blessing to lesser degrees of faith and zeal than can take on the conditions of life and service we are considering. Let this encourage us to go on to perfection.

We will next deal with the perpetuity of this missionary constitution.

A Missionary.

Modern Medical Missions.

IN REPLY TO "A MISSIONARY."

Dear Sir,—I have read with interest the series of papers by "A Missionary" which are now appearing in The Christian. The two papers to which I would specially refer might be classed together under one head, "Medical Missions versus Faith Healing." The writer's contention is that modern medical missions are no substitute for the healing works of Apostolic times, and that faith-healing or miraculous healing is to be looked for in a quickened Church in order to the more rapid extension of Christ's kingdom in the world. Dissenting earnestly from the views advanced in these two papers, and believing that their tendency can only be to unsettle and not to edify, I would beg the favour of a little space for reply.

We are all agreed that the sum and substance of the Gospel is the Lord Jesus Christ Himself. The great commission is to preach Christ—Christ in all that Scripture reveals Him to be to sinful man. Further, we are all agreed that for the preaching of this Gospel the one essential instrument is the living voice of the believer. All other instrumentalities, including the printed Bible, are subordinate to this. Having the Gospel, and recognising the Lord's will as to its proclamation, the question for the Church to-day, as always, is: How best to bring the living voice of its believing children to reach with the Gospel the ears and hearts of those who do not know it? What accessories, if any, has the Lord indicated as helps for the furtherance of the message concerning Himself? Did He plainly suggest any special line in the pursuit of which help might be found for getting near to men? Over and above the grace manifested in the servant from whose lips the message is to come is there any outward way by which the message may be specially commended?

For answer to this question we must look to Pentecostal and Apostolic times. There we find two things associated in a remarkable degree with the preaching of the Gospel, the miraculous gift of tongues, and the miraculous gift of healings. These were undoubtedly authentications of the Gospel message, but they were much more. The former was a wonder, associated especially with new ingatherings of believers, and indicated, no man can doubt, the purpose of the Spirit, not only that every believer should be a confessor and witness for Christ, but also that the Gospel should be diffused among all peoples, and in every tongue. The latter was also a wonder, which attracted powerfully the multitudes of the common people, touching them by the benignity which shone through those gracious healings, and leading them unquestionably to give more earnest heed to the message of eternal life. The gift of tongues and the gift of miraculous healings are the two great accessories in the earliest days of the Church for the furtherance of the Gospel. They were side by side in those early years of Church history, and when the Scripture books are completed, they equally, possibly very gradually, disappear. Whatever may be predicated of the one as a help to the authority of the message, and as a gracious seal upon it, may be predicated of the other.

Let us turn now to these latter days, and see what they present to us under these two heads—tongues and healings. First as to tongues. What do we see now? Just this, that we are rapidly coming within sight of the complete fulfilment of the Pentecostal prediction. The Bible—the Gospel, not science, or anything else but the Gospel, is leading the way into all the tongues of men. Is it by miracle, as at Pentecost? The universal answer is, No. It is by the sheer hard work of believing men who, under the guidance of the Spirit, are making ready the way of the Lord. And yet, under the administration of the same Spirit, which is the greater miracle? Which more marvellously proclaims the glory of the great Controller and Worker? Is it the partial, short-lived utterance of the few who, in an automatic and forcibly constrained fashion, were the vehicles of Divine speech? Or is it the full and continuous proclamation of the everlasting Gospel all round the globe, in the multitudinous tongues of the nations, by the willing, conscious, intelligent utterance of the vast array of Christ's servants in all the heathen lands? Both kinds of utterance are under the administration of the same Spirit. Which is more to the glory of the great Administrator?

And now as to healings. These also, in the first days of the Church, were miraculous, and, like the miraculous tongues, they passed away. What do we see now? What is the gracious Spirit of Christ doing through men now, and that in direct association with the preaching of the Gospel? We are only comparatively at the beginning of Medical Missions, and yet it is a low estimate when I say that, at the very least, half a million of Jews, Mohammedans, and heathen, come under the willing, loving, healing hands of the men and women who, in the mission fields of the world, are now serving the Lord as medical missionaries. Scores of hospitals and hundreds of dispensaries are to be found in the mission fields, all under the guidance of those who are diligently seeking the extension of Christ's kingdom. Innumerable works of healing of all kinds are being wrought by these labourers, and by many others who are not qualified by University degree or College diploma, but who are constrained to follow in their Master's healing footsteps as far as He will enable them. A work of physical healing, for Christ's sake, and under the administration of the Spirit of Christ, is being wrought in these days, of which, for the number of people it affects, and the amelioration of suffering which it bestows, and the openings for the Gospel which it brings, the physical healing of the Apostolic times was but a faint foreshadowing. Let one but try to gather it together as it is now going on in all lands to which the Gospel is being carried, and it presents a picture of the compassion of Christ to the suffering bodies of men which should make the heart flow over with wonder and praise. Is it by miracle now? Not at all. There is no miracle about it, but there is much patient study and toil, there is much God-given skill, there is the heart and life gratefully laid at the Master's feet, and there is his acceptance and seal of favour. And yet, after all, I must again ask, Which is the greater miracle of the two? Is it the comparatively few and oft intermitted wonders of healing mercy miraculously wrought by the Apostles and a number of the leading Evangelists in the limited sphere of their labours, or is it the great river of healing mercies which has begun to flow through all the mission lands in connection with medical missions? Both methods are under the administration of the same Spirit.

I claim for the Church of Christ in these days that both in the matter of tongues and of healing gifts she has in her hands an incomparably greater power for the service of Christ than existed in the days of the Apostolic Church, and that, for the Church in either of these directions to throw aside her present methods, crowned as they are in heathendom with ever-increasing tokens of his blessing, and to set herself to look for miraculous gifts of tongues and miraculous gifts of healing, would be to ignore the plain teachings of the Spirit. There may be a truer and more God-glorifying FAITH in the recognition of his will to work his world-wide saving ends through the patient toil and loving ministry of his servants, than in looking for the faith-tongues and faith-healings to which "A Missionary" would counsel us. Our brother may call the present modes of working "human means and human wisdom," methods "which require many appliances and much expense," and say that it is only confusion to compare these with the methods "which wrought solely by spiritual power and in greatest simplicity." But where is the confusion? We fail to see it. The Holy Spirit did his work at one time by methods which ignored a "human means and a human wisdom" which He had not yet given to men, and He did in those days ignore "the many appliances and the much expense" which the Church in those days could not put out, because it had not yet got them. Cannot the Holy Spirit, with equal glory to Christ, now use what He has bestowed upon us in these days, the means and the wisdom, and the appliances and the wealth which are to be found among his people? Why has He bestowed them upon us? Is it not that we should lay them at Christ's feet, and that receiving them anew from Him we should serve Him therewith? I have seen far too much of the power of Medical Missions in South China to doubt for a moment that the Lord is pleased to use them in a marvellous way for the spread of his kingdom. They are a wondrous help, just as the miraculous healings of Apostolic times were, for opening the door for the Gospel, only they are on a scale which far surpasses in extent those ancient healings.

COW CROSS MISSION, CLERKENWELL.—SIR,—I would advise all Christians who rejoice in knowing of good, steady work amongst the poor, to read Mr. William Catlin's last report. Clerkenwell is his district, which I have known for many years, and have had exceptional opportunities of seeing the genuineness of the work, and the servant. Those who take pleasure in upholding such will not, I am sure, let him long remain with a debt due to the treasurer.—Yours truly,

FREDERICK NEWTH.

Letters to the Editor.

A LOOSE SCREW IN MISSIONS.

DEAR SIR,—In a word or two I would give my opinion of missions in general, and especially to Irish Roman Catholics, of which I have some experience. I think the work is begun at the wrong end; the tree should be made good first; the so-called orthodox churches should be made right before "they compass sea and land" so much.

Our Roman Catholic neighbours can see us just living as they do—the same, all but in theory. We may tell them there is a spirituality among us here and there; but this is, indeed, an invisible Church to them and to many besides. Humanly speaking, how can they be converted to a religion that seems to make its professors no better than their religion makes them? For many years I have thought this to be "the screw loose" in missions."

Yours truly, J. K.

MODERN MEDICAL MISSIONS.

DEAR SIR,—I have read a letter in THE CHRISTIAN, by Mr. Graham Wilmot Brooke, in which he makes the following extraordinary statement:—"All that is at present being done in medical missions has been and is being done just as successfully by the children of this world."

At all medical missions with which I am acquainted, there are several Gospel addresses delivered to the patients every week. The patients visited at their own homes are pointed to Jesus, and there is tract distribution, &c. Now I hold that the children of this world cannot do such work as successfully as those who are born again and living in communion with God. I also hold that the medical man who asks God to guide him in the diagnosis and treatment of disease is more successful in his treatment than the one who does not ask God's blessing on the means used. Those who wish to know about medical mission work should pay a visit to one of the medical missions in London. The medical missionary walks most fully and thoroughly in the footsteps of our Lord and his Apostles, because he carries salvation alike for the body and the soul.—Yours faithfully,

ROBERT CHAMBERS.

MANAGEMENT OF RAILWAYS.

DEAR SIR,—I am pleased with your recent editorial note suggesting that an association of Christian shareholders in railways should be formed with a view to action with regard to such things as Sunday labour and overwork on other days. Might there not be one general association with a general committee, and then a small sub-committee for each of the leading companies? In this way the Christian shareholders of each company would be able to make their influence felt at the meetings of the shareholders, in the election of directors, and by means of memorials to the board, &c.

There is a great moral danger in the large companies by which so much of the trade of our time is carried on. A business man, trading alone or in partnership, feels, if he be a man of good principle, and still more if he be a Christian, his moral responsibility for the right conduct of that business; but a shareholder in a company, and particularly a small shareholder in a large company, feels little or nothing of such responsibility, because he does not take any practical part in the management of the concern, and he is apt to think that if the objects of the company are right he is not responsible for the methods and details of management, over which he has so little, if indeed any, practical control.

How different would it be if there were a watchful committee to inquire into and study the health and comfort, and moral and spiritual well-being of our railway servants, and to spread the information they gain among the shareholders and the outside public; and some organisation by which the Christian and philanthropic shareholders of each company might be banded together to make their influence felt on the side of righteousness and brotherly love. Further, if in this way our leading railway and other companies could be brought to conduct their business operations on the highest principles, what a mighty influence would this exert on the whole methods of trading in this country, and even throughout the world.

AN OPEN DOOR.

SIR,—May I point out to those of your readers, who, from physical infirmity, or other causes, are precluded from engaging in Christian work to the extent they would like, a door for service, which I believe is easily entered, easily kept open, and in which very extensive and effective work could be done for the Master, and that too in places not otherwise accessible. I mean the placing of secular newspapers in country districts under tribute to Christ's cause. This, I am persuaded—and I speak from personal knowledge—can be more easily done than at first seems probable. Country editors are almost invariably thankful to receive outside assistance from a competent person to add attractiveness to their columns. When I speak of competence, I do not mean literary ability or great theological knowledge, but merely the faculty to perceive what will prove entertaining to a miscellaneous class of readers. The contributions might not be original, though it would be well to make it plain that a prayerful heart superintends the column, or half-column in question. Clippings from the sayings of great preachers, interspersed with striking anecdotes and current incidents, would, in most cases, do admirably, where there is not the ability to do more.

In some cases where the offer otherwise might be rejected, the payment of a merely nominal sum would almost be certain to insure insertion (but care should be taken that the contributions are placed among the regular news columns, and not among the ordinary advertisements). This, I believe, would be found a much more economical and also a more effective plan than ordinary tract distribution. The newspaper would carry its messages of salvation to quarters where tracts or religious publications are never offered, or, if offered, rejected. What is better, if the paragraphs are bright and attractive, they are sure to be read by the entire family circle, and in nine cases out of ten they will afterwards be carried by the postmen to friends at a distance, or in foreign parts. A HOMELY "HOME."—In a quiet position in Wray-crescent, Tollington Park, N., is Winifred House, where Mrs. Hampson has for thirteen years carried on her benevolent work of helping young girls and women, who have taken a false step in life, to redeem their character and position. The Home is conducted on the principle of the family rather than the reformatory. Last week the subscribers and friends of the charity met at the Inns of Court Hotel, Holborn. It was announced that Mrs. Hampson had been compelled by ill-health to relinquish her positions of superintendent, doctor, and adviser, but the meeting re-appointed the Executive Committee, and resolved to consider the best means of endeavouring to secure a suitable successor to Mrs. Hampson, the founder and mainspring of the Home.

LADS AT KING'S CROSS.—In 1884 a work was begun among the lads of King's Cross, especially those connected with the Great Northern Railway, a service being started for them on Sunday evenings. Last summer, the hall hitherto used being no longer available, a great difficulty was experienced in obtaining suitable premises. A fine hall, capable of seating about 250 people, with a large club-room attached, has now been taken in Cumming-street, Pentonville. These premises are admirably fitted for the work, which will thus all be carried on under one roof. Hitherto the expenses have been met by the workers, but with extended operations this has become impossible, and help is earnestly solicited. The co-operation of several Christian young men is also much needed. Gifts of books will be appreciated.

BATH PUBLIC-HOUSE AND CABMEN'S MISSION.—The object of this agency is to take the Gospel to classes who would not otherwise come directly under its influence. The sixth annual report states that during last year there were evidences of increased usefulness. Not only was the public-house visitation maintained, but the flymen and Bath-chairmen—about three hundred in number—were regularly visited on their ranks and in their houses. Several of the men have signed the temperance pledge, and a goodly number of their wives attend the Sunday evening services held in connection with the Mission. The report states: "During the last two years, on one stand alone, five flymen and three chairmen have died from cold and exposure to the weather. Is it not therefore most important to point them to the Saviour before it is too late?" The secretary of the Mission is Miss V. M. Skinner, 5, St. James's-square, Bath.

XIX.—THE TWO COVENANTS.

HEBREWS viii.

A NEW word comes into this marvellous treatise, which may repel some, as having a theological sound; and yet it contains new depths of meaning and interest for us all. It is the word Covenant. We all understand pretty clearly the covenants into which men enter with each other with respect to property, or other matters of daily business. One man undertakes to do certain things on condition that another pledges himself to do certain other things. When these respective undertakings are settled, they are engrossed on parchment, signed, and sealed, and from that moment each party is honourably bound to perform his share in the transaction.

In some such way, adapting Himself to our methods of thought and practice, the eternal God has entered into covenant with faithful and obedient souls. Nor is it possible to overestimate the condescension on his part, or the honour and advantage placed within our reach, by such relationship. It seems too wonderful to be true, yet it must be true, for on no other grounds than its revealed truthfulness could it ever have become a matter of human statement or debate. The covenant between a prince and a beggar, or between a man like William Penn and the rude darkskins of America, is dwarfed into utter insignificance and paltriness when mentioned in the same day as the covenant between God and the soul of man.

Theologians have detected several different kinds of covenant in the course of human history, and as depicted in the Bible. But it is sufficient for us to notice the two Covenants, Old and New, mentioned in this paragraph. And the basis of the whole argument is contained in Jer. xxxi. 31—34, in which there is a distinction made between the covenant made with the fathers, when God took them out of the land of Egypt, and that new covenant, which, in the days of Jeremiah, was still future. Moses was the mediator of the first, as Jesus is of the second.

I. THE MOSAIC COVENANT.—It was often reiterated in very gracious and searching tones. Take, for instance, that scene which took place as the vast host defiled into the plain beneath the brow of Sinai, in the third month of the Exodus. As yet there was no cloud or fire on Sinai's crest, but a proposition was made to the people by Moses, that if they, on their side, would obey God's voice, and keep his word, God, on his side, would do two things: He would regard them as his peculiar treasure above all people; and He would take them to Himself as a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation (Exod. xix. 6). And the people, little counting the cost, or realising all that was involved, cried, with one glib unanimous voice, "All that the Lord hath spoken will we do." They thus entered into covenant.

Shortly after, when the Ten Commandments had been given, the terms of the covenant on God's part were very much enlarged. On the fulfilment, on the part of the people, of the old condition of obedience, God went further than ever before in his promises, which comprehended a vast variety of need, and consisted of many parts (Exod. xxiii. 22—31). And again, the people gave one mighty unanimous shout of assent (xxiv. 3).

Nor was this all, for when, with the intention of recording these solemn engagements, they were entered in the book of the covenant, and read publicly, amid the solemn ratification of sprinkled blood, the people again said, "All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient" (xxiv. 7). But how little they knew themselves. Within a week or two they were dancing wildly around the golden calf, and within a few months, there was not one who dared affirm that he had kept the covenant in every jot and tittle. Nay, on the contrary, "which my covenant they brake, saith the Lord." What else could be expected of them, although Moses did write them a second and detailed statement of the conditions of the covenant, in the Book of Deuteronomy, with the reiterated demand, that occurs like a refrain, "Ye shall observe to do."

There were two great defects in that old covenant, which arose out of the weakness of poor human nature; in the first place, it gave no power, no moral dynamics, to enable the human covenanters to do what they promised; and, secondly, it could not provide for the effectual putting away of those sins which arose from their failure to carry into effect their covenanted vows (ix. 9).

Surely the majority of men, aiming after a religious life, pass through an experience like this. When first we are redeemed by the blood of the Lamb, and brought out into the new life, we seem to stand again under Mount Sinai; or, better still, our conscience becomes our Sinai, and from its highest point we seem to hear the voice of God, engaging Himself to be a God to us, if we will in all things obey his voice. And this we immediately pledge ourselves to do. We are not insincere; we really mean to perform it; we are enamoured at the ideal of life presented to us. It is not only desirable as the condition of blessings, but it is eminently attractive and lovely.

But we make a profound mistake in pledging ourselves, for we are undertaking a matter which is totally beyond our reach. As well might a paralysed man undertake to climb Mount Blanc, or a bankrupt to pay his debts. We soon learn that sin has paralysed all our moral motor nerves. The good we would, we do not: the evil we would not, we do. We are brought into captivity to the law of sin in our members, which wars against the law of our mind. We go out to shake ourselves, as at other times, but we wist not that razors have passed over our locks of strength, leaving us powerless and helpless.

It seems a pity that each has to learn the uselessness of these attempts for himself, instead of profiting by the experience of others, and the records of the past. Yet so it is. One after another starts to earn the privilege of God's presence, and smile, and blessing, by being good, and obedient, and punctilious in complying with rules, and forms, and regulations. It goes on well for a little while, but soon utterly breaks down. We are baffled and beaten, as sea fowl who dash themselves against a lighthouse tower in the storm, and then fall wounded into the yeasty foam beneath. We are slow to learn, that as we receive justification, so must we receive sanctification, from the hands of God as his free gift.

If any reader of these lines is trying to keep up a friendly relationship with God on this principle of try, and do, and keep, the sooner that soul realises the certainty of failure, not for want of will, but through the weakness of the moral nature, and yields itself to the grace revealed in the second and better covenant, the more quickly will it find a secure and happy resting-place, from which it will not be disturbed or driven, world without end.

II. THE BETTER COVENANT.—It is so much better than that of Moses, in this way. While it pledges God to even better promises (6) than those of the earlier covenant, promises which for a moment demand our attention, there is no pledge or undertaking of any kind demanded from us. There are no ifs; no injunctions of observe to do; no conditions of obedience to be fulfilled. From first to last it consists of the I wills of the Most High. Count them up in this marvellous enumeration (10, 11, 12), and then dare to claim that each should be fulfilled in your personal experience; because this is the covenant under which we are living, and through which we have access to God.

I will put my laws into their minds.—That refers to the intellectual faculty, which thinks, remembers, argues. It will be of inestimable value to have them there for constant reference, so that they shall always stand inscribed on the side-posts and lintels of the inner life, demanding reverence, and compelling daily attention.

I will write them upon their hearts.—That is the seat of the emotional life and of the affections. If they are written there, they must engage our love. And what a man loves, he is pretty certain to follow and obey. "A little lower," said the dying veteran, as they probed for the bullet, which had sunk deep down into his breast, "and you will find the Emperor"; and in the case of the Christian who has been taken into covenant with God, the law is inscribed on the deepest affections of his being. He obeys because he loves to obey. He stays in his Master's service, not because he must, but because he chooses it for himself, saying, as his ear is bored to the door, I love my Master, I will not go out free.

I will be to them a God, and they shall be to Me a people.—The last clause is even better than the first, because it implies the keeping power of God. His chosen people so wandered from Him that He once called them "Lo-Ammi," Not my people (Hos. ii.). But if we are ever to be his people—people for his peculiar possession—then it can only result from the operation of his gracious Spirit, who keeps us, as the sun restrains the planets from dashing off into space to become wandering stars.

All shall know Me.—Oh, rapture of raptures! can it be? To know God! To know the deep things of God. To know Him, or to be known of Him. To know Him, as Abraham did, to whom He told his secrets; as Moses did, who conversed with Him face to face; or as the Apostle John did, when He beheld Him in the visions of the Apocalypse. And that this privilege should be within reach of the least!

I will be merciful to their unrighteousness.—In the old covenant there was little room for mercy. It was a matter of voluntary agreement; if one of the covenanting parties failed in the least particular, there was no obligation on the other to remain faithful to their mutual agreement. The failure of one party neutralised the whole covenant. But there is no such stringency here. On the contrary, mercy is admitted into the relationship, and exercises her gracious sway.

I will remember their sins and iniquities no more.—As a score is forgotten when blotted from a slate, so shall sin be as if obliterated from the memory of God. It will be forgotten, as a debt paid years ago. It will be so entirely put out of mind that it shall be as if it had never been. If sought for, not found. The handwriting nailed through. The stone dropped into ocean depths. The cloud absorbed by the summer heat, as it fades from the deep blue sky. Joseph's brethren, in their last approach to Joseph, after their father's death, betrayed a fear, that though his resentment was cloked, it was not thoroughly relinquished. But their fears were entirely groundless. They discovered that the offence had utterly passed from their brother's thought, "and Joseph wept when they spake unto him." In some such way as this God ceases to consider our sins, and grieves if we do not believe the thoroughness of his abundant pardon.

Are you enjoying the terms of this covenant in your daily experience? God is prepared to fulfil them to the letter. Count on Him to do as He has promised. Reckon on his faithfulness. Claim that each pledge shall be realised in you to the fullest limits of his wealth, and your need. Do not try to invent conditions or terms not laid down by Him, but gladly accept the position of doing nothing to earn or win, and of accepting all that God gives, without money and without price.

Do you ask how God can call this a covenant in which there is no second covenanting party? The answer is easy: Jesus Christ has stood in our stead, and has not only negociated this covenant, but has fulfilled in our name, and on our behalf, all the conditions which were necessary and right. He has borne the penalty of human weakness and transgression. He has met all demands for a perfect and unbroken obedience. He has engaged to secure, by the gift of the Holy Spirit, a holiness in us which could never have been obtained by our own efforts. And as He has become our sponsor and surety, so God is able to enter into these liberal terms with us, saying nothing of all the cost to his Son, but permitting us to share all the benefits; on this condition only, that we identify ourselves with Him by a living faith, entrusting all spiritual transactions into his hands, and abiding by the decisions of his will. This is the new and better covenant, which has replaced the old.

HOSPITAL WORK IN JERUSALEM.

Having read a letter in The Christian on the above subject, I am induced to add a few words in favour of it, as an impartial witness of the work going on in Palestine. It was my great privilege last year to pay a short visit to Jerusalem, and while there I made it my business to visit the various schools and institutions in connection with the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. I was indeed glad to find a good work going on at all points.

The work in the hospital I was especially interested in, under the careful supervision of Dr. Wheeler. I was greatly impressed with his Christian earnestness and skilful attention to his work, best illustrated by the impression he seemed to make on the numbers of poor Jews, old and young, who come seeking relief.

The hospital is a very poor one, and the situation so deplorable that it must tend to retard the recovery of the patients. It will be an act of great charity and of untold blessing if the Christian public will aid the work of building a new hospital outside the walls of the Holy City where the elevation is higher, and the air and surroundings very much better.

Nearing the Goal.

PROGRESS IN THE PATNA CASE.

Now that the case of the girl Luchmin has passed from the magistrate, Mr. Quinn, to the High Court in India, we are rapidly getting nearer to the goal which all who have worked for the girl have had in view—her salvation from a life of immorality.

The High Court at Calcutta, in January, issued a rule calling upon the magistrate to show cause why his order which consigned the girl to an infamous life should not be set aside.

The case came on for argument on Monday, Feb. 18, and the High Court not only pushed aside the magisterial order, but took a step towards recovering possession of the child, as will be seen from the following telegram which we have received from India:—

"Bombay, 20-2-89.

"A. S. Dyer to Sentinel, London.

"Rule issued on Radakissen and Mahatabo to show cause why order should not be made to restore status quo, and give back Luchmin to Mission, or other suitable order."

It will be remembered by our readers that Radakissen is the man who falsely claimed to be the husband of the girl, and Mahatabo is the girl's mother who sold her to Radakissen. They are the two to whom the magistrate consigned her. Our chief anxiety now is lest the girl who was carried off by her captors directly they got hold of her shall not be found. But with the order of the High Court before it demonstrating the iniquity of Mr. Quinn's unjustifiable order, the Indian Government must see that it is bound to exert itself to the utmost to find her, that she may be set free.

The Anglo-Indian papers have been asserting that the Government had authorised Mr. Quinn to prosecute Mr. A. S. Dyer for his determined championship of this girl's cause. The decision of the High Court that Mr. Quinn was wrong, demonstrates that Mr. Dyer was right. We shall therefore now hear nothing more of these suggestions of a Government prosecution, but may expect a Government condemnation and removal of Mr. Quinn.—The Sentinel (March).

TRACT DISTRIBUTION.

Dear Sir,—If "H. J." (v. your issue of February 8) will kindly write to me, I think I can help him. I have just received the following from India. I hope it will encourage tract distributors. My informant is a person I can trust.

Yours faithfully, M. Millett, Colonel.

19, Bury-street, S.W.

"I send in (to the hospital) a few tracts, when I can, and through that instrumentality I am happy to report the salvation of a soul. The circumstances of the case are rather singular. The hospital was full of men. In one of the beds lat a man dying; he had only been brought in thas morning. The young man who lay in the bed next to his, being well acquainted with the dying many life, and knowing the dreadful eternity that awaited him, could not bear to see him gasping for breath in that trying hour, and, as he said to me afterwards, 'especially knowing the state of his soul. I jumped out of bed, and ran into another room, for the sight was too much for me. There, amongst some papers, I found a tract with this title, "If I should die to-night, what would become of me?"' He had no need to read more; that was sufficient to make him feel his lost condition, and to cry to God for mercy. God had mercy, and in that hospital he found peace in Christ, his Saviour, and is now trying in his simple manner to point his comrades to 'the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.'

"I think it is well to know cases of this kind, as they stimulate us in our work, and help us not to grow weary in well-doing. This is only one case; there are many more which will be one day revealed."

THE CATACOMBS OF ROME.

There are many persons who possess some little meagre knowledge of the Catacombs of Rome. But how few there are who could give anything like an intelligent account of these remarkable places. Yet the Catacombs are closely identified with the history of our common Christianity, and form an important link in the chain of that history. The word Catacomb literally means any subterraneous excavation; but in use it has become limited in application, and now signifies simply a cavity in the earth for the burial of the dead. Beneath many of the older populous cities, such as Paris, Alexandria, Syracuse, and Naples, extensive burying-places of this character are found. Starting from a quarry, or a sand-pit, galleries have been driven in different directions, and in these tunnelled avenues the dead have been laid in tiers. But it is with the Catacombs of Rome that we at present have to do. For fully three centuries—that is to say, for ten generations—the entire Christian population of Rome was interred in what are known as the Christian Catacombs; and it is estimated that the graves would total up to nearly four millions. The entire length of the whole of the passages of the Catacombs is reckoned at 587 miles; a distance equal to the entire extent of Italy from Etna to the Alps.

But it was not simply that the early Christians were buried in these vaulted galleries. From the time of Nero, on through the ten persecutions which terminated with that of Diocletian, the Roman converts here found shelter from their persecutors. Probably some of the quarry-men and sand-diggers early adopted the new faith; and these fossers or diggers no doubt made known to their Christian brethren the secret chambers and winding ways of this underground Rome—places not likely to be searched, and where the persecuted could remain in seclusion, and worship unmolested. And here in these natural crypts the men of faith were secreted when persecution was the hottest; and here they gathered to worship at all favourable opportunities. As in Jerusalem at a yet earlier day, "the number of the disciples multiplied;" and to accommodate both the living and the dead, increased space became necessary; and shafts were sunk vertically, and galleries driven horizontally—just as in a modern mine—until, as has been previously stated, the subterranean passages of the Catacombs extended to hundreds of miles.

And here thousands of holy men and women—yes, and of children also—worshipped when living, and were committed to the tomb at death. They were laid, tier after tier, along the sides of those narrow galleries, to wait until the dawning of the resurrection day. Out of the seventy thousand engraved inscriptions which it is estimated were placed over these Catacomb graves, over three thousand remain: and these have been placed in the Lapidarian Gallery of the Vatican. On the question as to what constituted the creed of the Early Church, these monumental slabs yield important testimony. They render no support to modern Romish doctrine, or to modern Romish practice. The doctrine of purgatory finds no sanction in the Catacomb inscriptions; no hint of an intermediate state is given on its slabs. Confidence—and not uncertainty—is expressed in these tablets of stone: Valeria sleeps in peace.—Borne away by Angels.—It is forbidden to weep for one who lives in God. No shade of intimation is given as to the recognition of a human priesthood; in fact, the only ecclesiastical official (we cannot designate him as a "dignitary") indicated, is the Reader (Lector). In a Catacomb inscription—as in the Book of Revelation (i. 10)—the Lord's Day is distinctly recognised: die domini.

One prominent writer on the subject (Raoul Rochette) went to Rome with the intention of spending six months in the study of the Catacombs; he remained for fifty years pursuing this one object, and died whilst preparing his book for publication. Another, an Italian named Bosio, spent more than thirty years in exploration and investigation. Mr. Benjamin Scott has given in his excellent volume a most interesting and graphic account of the Catacombs and their teachings.*

Dr. Saphir on the Old Testament.

Dr. Saphir's address on Thursday, last week, in St. John's Presbyterian Church, Allen-street, Kensington, was devoted to a consideration of further popular objections against the Old Testament by persons who profess to have faith in the New Testament, and to a study of the relation of the two great divisions of Holy Writ to one another. In the preliminary exercise, Dr. Saphir read Rev. xxii. 16—21, specially pointing out the significance of the words "I Jesus" at the beginning of the passage. In the previous chapters the Lord is set forth under different designations; but here, as if He wished the last impression left on the mind of the beloved disciple and the entire Church to be one of the personal living Saviour who died on Calvary, He uses his name Jesus, as the angel also, on his ascension, said, "This same Jesus ...shall so come."

At the outset of his address, Dr. Saphir maintained that the objections against the Old Testament are rooted in an insufficient understanding of the teaching of the New Testament. The first of two remaining objections takes the form of doubt being thrown upon the miracles of the Old Testament, on the ground of their being essentially different from those recorded in the New. This impression is, however, quite a mistaken one, as the miracles of the entire Bible are of one and the same character. In the time of Christ and his Apostles there was a far greater number of miracles than during many centuries of Israelitish history. The Old Testament miracles, moreover, are recorded as having happened in periods of great importance, in times of transition and religious apostasy, and they were enacted not as mere prodigies, but to manifest the power of Him who was carrying forward a wonderful history for his own glory. Further, all those miracles of the Old Testament which are stumbling-blocks to some were ratified by Christ and his Apostles. If a man does not believe in the story of Jonah, it is not simply the book of that name that he disbelieves, but the word of Jesus, who specially referred to it. So with regard to the flood in the days of Noah. Again, as to the fate of Lot's wife, He said, "Remember Lot's wife." Moreover, the Apostle Peter referred to the incident of Balaam's ass speaking. In some further interesting remarks on this head, Dr. Saphir showed that there was a difference between the New Testament miracles and those of the Old Testament, inasmuch as in the miracles of the Old Testament Jehovah's glory was manifested; in those of the New Testament the glory of Jesus was manifested.

The last objection noticed was: The sins and follies of Jacob, Jonah, and others are told in the Old Testament with so much plainness that it is difficult to believe that such men should be still regarded as the saints of God. On this, Dr. Saphir pointed out that the object of the Bible is not to glorify and eulogise men, but to glorify God. It is designed that it shall impress upon us that our favoured standing before God is all of grace, and that only grace can sustain us. It clearly shows to us that there was in the saints of old the "other law" striving against the holy will of God. The Scripture lays bare the sins of God's people, but not to approve of them; it does not present them in a fascinating or seducing light. Moreover, it shows that God severely chastised his people, and brought them to humiliation and repentance. Many people say they like Esau better than Jacob. Why? Because they do not understand Jacob. They do not see that the entire bent of Jacob was godliness, and that during the whole of his life he was walking in communion with God.

Proceeding, Dr. Saphir took up the thread of an earlier address, in which he alluded to the Pelagian view that the world will improve gradually, and not through Divine judgments. The Reformation, with all its glory, was defective in two respects, and to a large extent we are still labouring under the disadvantages of those defects. Firstly, the Reformers did not distinguish the dispensations; secondly, they did not see the important position of the Jews, nor clearly apprehend the doctrine of the second advent of our Lord. The truth about personal salvation—man's sinfulness, atonement, renewal by the Holy Spirit, and the fruit of the Spirit—forms the centre; but we must not overlook the circumference, the whole counsel of God. While the Reformers were giving almost exclusive attention to the centre, the world, by its philosophy and science, was steadily undermining the circumference. Developing his explanations, the speaker pointed out that the fact that the Bible consists of two parts may be variously illustrated. One part was written before Christ, and one part after; the former belongs to Israel, and the latter to the Church, made up of Jews and Gentiles, who also believe in the former. His own favourite comparison was that the entire Scriptures are like unto a day—evening and morning. First there comes night, with the moon of promise and the stars of prophets whose shining gladdened and comforted the hearts of God's people. Then there came the brightness of day—the whole making one day.

Going on, Dr. Saphir showed the Gospel to be in every part of the Old Testament, and that the distinguishing feature of the two books was, that one was the Book of the Kingdom and Israel, the other the Book of the Church. Realising the great importance of the subject, he spoke with much fervour. The Old Testament, he said, looks forward to the coming of Jehovah, and the New to the second advent of the Lord "with his saints," when He will make himself manifest unto Israel and the whole world, not in order that the last judgment may be held, but that another historical period shall be ushered in, when God's will shall be "done in earth as it is in heaven," and when Jesus Christ with his transfigured saints shall come to be seen and acknowledged. Israel will say, "It is Jehovah and his advent"; but the Church will say, "It is Jesus and his second advent." Israel will say, "He has come to take the throne of his father David. Jerusalem will be glorified, and they shall be his nation"; but the Church will say, "He is glorfied in his saints, and admired in all them that believe, and we whom He has redeemed with his blood shall reign on the earth."

Objectors urge: "Have we not enough to say about the first advent?" Notice that the Apostles, who had the glory of the first advent irradiating their countenances and solemnising their hearts, who had heard the words that had flowed from the Lord's blessed lips, seen Him dying on the cross, and enjoyed intercourse with Him after his resurrection, never could dissociate these things from the return of Him they loved. This part of the address was replete with instruction which cannot be compressed into this outline.

Attention having been drawn to the fact that both in the Gospels and the Epistles the coming of Christ is connected with the national restoration and blessing to Israel, the attitude of the Church was lucidly illustrated by the two miracles in John vi.—the feeding of the multitude and the walking on the sea. The wilderness is the emblem of the world in its need and famine. For eighteen centuries, thousands and thousands of such needy ones have been fed and found life everlasting. In the second miracle, the sea is the emblem of the world with its unrest and opposition to God. Christ is no longer in the midst of his disciples, but on the mountain apart praying unto the Father. It is for them to row and toil, but they make no progress. But in the fourth watch, Jesus Himself comes, and immediately the ship is safe and close to the shore.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.

Rev. John Wilkinson has published a deeply interesting summary of work among the Jews and on their behalf during last year, under the auspices of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, of which he is the honoured director. The numerous agencies have been in active operation, and people of the Hebrew race have been reached in several countries of Europe, and in North Africa, as well as at home. The endeavours have at times been of a very anxious nature, but the Mission motto for 1889 has been a source of encouragement to many during long years of patient testimony: "They who sow in tears shall reap in joy."

This report presents particulars of the estimated number of Jews in different countries, with their religious condition. Some account is also given of the distribution of Hebrew New Testaments on the Continent and elsewhere. In the strongholds of Talmudism in Russia, copies have been received with delight by large numbers of Jews, who have at once made Christianity and its claims the subject of earnest discussion. Having no idea before of the contents of the New Testament, Rabbis and common people alike have become well acquainted therewith by means of this well-organised distribution.

The work of the medical mission in Goulston-street, Aldgate, E., the night school in George-yard, Whitechapel, and the general mission in Wellclose-square, all continue to be blessed of God. The Homes for convalescents, children, and inquirers have also proved very useful in their special ways. A great need at present is a central mission hall in the East-end to embrace all the departments of this important work. It is estimated that this will cost about £10,000, towards which £1500 is already in hand. In concluding this stimulating report Mr. Wilkinson says: "The Jews were never so accessible as now. Never before was the New Testament so willingly received and read. Never before could we gather such large numbers to listen with respectful attention to the preached Gospel. Never before had we such numbers confessing secretly and openly their faith in Jesus as the Messiah. Let the Church, in loyalty to her Lord, embrace her opportunities and respond to the claims of Israel, and she will get the approval of her Lord, she will bring blessing on the Jews, and, through them, blessing on the world." Mr. Wilkinson's address is 79, Mildmay-road, N.

SOLDIERS IN INDIA.—Rev. J. H. Bateson, Wesleyan Chaplain, Umballa, Punjaub, India, writes:—In connection with my hospital work in several of the large garrisons in the Punjaub, I am much in want of suitable literature to leave with the patients. If any of your readers have papers, tracts, or booklets which are of no use to them when once read, I shall be glad to receive them for distribution in the wards.

THE LEYSIAN MISSION.—The third year's work of the interesting Mission which has for its centre 199, White Cross-street, E.C., has been marked by steady progress. The several agencies have been carried on more systematically than formerly, and new fields of labour have been entered upon. The endeavours of the Ladies' Committee have been directed to relieving the needy, the suffering, and the sick, while the medical help rendered by Dr. Griffiths, of Finsbury-square, has been as blessed in results as it has been most devotedly rendered. The movement to establish a permanent home for the work by erecting premises at once suitable and attractive, seems to be taking shape. It is much to be hoped that more Cambridge Old Leysians will come to the help of the Mission in connection with its special and general efforts. The hon. sec. and treasurer is Mr. F. A. Holman, 23, St. Mary Axe, E.C.

For the Young.

THE PINK-TIPPED DAISY.

By Eva Travers Evered Poole.

A beautiful moss-green meadow lay stretched out under the cloud-flecked sky as far as the eye could see; the soft white cloudlets kissing its distant edges, and a silvery river streak separating it from the farmhouse on the hill.

Thousands and thousands of daisies studded the broad, green meadow, far too many to count, for they grew so thickly as almost to look like a snow-white sheet spread over its face. Daisies there were, old and young, baby buds and seedlings, all looking up at the glorious sun in the mid-day heaven, and all opening their golden hearts to drink in his delicious warmth and smile. Each daisy-cup was filled to the very brim with sweet, soft sunshine, and the great golden sun smiled serenely down on the flowerets from his cloud-throne in the sky, glad of his royal power to give.

Did I say every daisy-cup was filled? If I did, I made a mistake; for right in the centre of a meadow there grew a baby daisy flower. At first it was only a bud, like a little pale-green button, daintily flecked with crimson and white, where the delicate edges of the fast folded petals peeped out of their hiding sheaths of green. But when the green calyx burst, oh, what a rich, dark crimson hue those daisy petals wore! When I was a little, little girl, I often walked over just such a star-studded meadow in search of pink-tipped daisies, and perhaps you have done the same. I thought very little of the white-petaled flowers—they were so common. But those rare, rose-tinted ones! why, I felt sure they were Daisy Princesses, and that their crimson tint was the royal blood that flowed in their veins.

Our little friend, the pink-tipped daisy, was just such a beauty, and might well have been proud of herself, but for one terrible misfortune, which completely clouded all her happiness, and hid her beauty. A careless passer by, kicking up the soil, had wrought all the mischief, one sorrowful day; for before the daisy bud could burst, right on its very head lay a great lump of clay—moist at first, but gradually hardening in the breeze, and fast clasping, as in fetters, the petals of the little flower.

How it struggled to free itself! Oh, how it pined beneath its burden! Tiny though the clod of earth was to you and me, it seemed a mighty mountain to the poor little daisy. How was it all to end? Was it for ever to bear on its heart this terrible burden? Was there no hope of relief? Day by day the flower hearts round opened wide at dawn, and drank in the sunlight; day by day flower voices chorussed sweet praises of the great, the glorious sun; evening by evening he smiled on each little flower, and sealed its closing eyes with a good-night kiss. But the pink-tipped daisy knew nothing of heart-opening, nothing of the sunlight, nothing of the fulness of joy of which the other flowers whispered.

It had never even beheld the face of the sun. Its prisoned heart was cold, and joyless, and dark. Oh, those fetters! that load! Must it be ever thus?

For a time darkness and despair settled down upon the daisy's spirit. But one evening a belated bee flitted past, and, being weary with his long round and the burden of his heavily laden honey-bag, stopped to take breath on the stalk of a tall, golden-flowered buttercup, at whose root grew our friend, the pink-tipped daisy.

The daisy was making a little moan over its sore trouble.

"What ails you?" asked the bee, who, busy worker though he was, always made it a habit to notice other people's sorrows, and to drop some soothing word along his line of flight. This he was well able to do, as his daily occupation brought him into contact with so many different flowers, and gave him quite a mission in life.

The daisy wept out her story, encouraged by the kindly question. The friendly bee, taking breath before his last homeward flight, said—

"Don't despair; if you long for the sunlight, depend upon it some day the sunlight will be yours. Welcome the dewdrops to your heart, little daisy; I have often known them make way for the sunlight." And, opening his wings, he flew away humming his favourite lullaby.

The daisy flower took heart, and she stretched out her head, on which the clay still rested, towards the evening sky. As if in pity, the dark blue heaven above dropped right upon her prisoned heart a drop of dew. When the morning dawned, the pink-tipped daisy felt new hope rise in her heart. Surely there was a loosening of those prison bonds, a softening of the hard unyielding clay! Had the dewdrop done its work?

As slowly and steadily the sun mounted the steps of his meridian throne, the daisy grew eagerly desperate. With all the determination, all the strength, and all the passion it possessed, it put forth one mighty, supreme effort to cast off that crushing clod of clay—and, oh! was it possible? could it be? the heavy clod loosened by the dewdrop's gentle influence, and losing its balance, as the daisy stalk trembled with passionate longing, slowly tilted over and dropped to the ground, quitting once and for ever its hold on the daisy's heart! Who can tell the delight of that first moment of freedom; when the daisy heart opened, and the first sweet kiss of the sunlight was laid gently on its petals. Who can tell the ecstacy of basking in the fulness of the rich, golden glory that flooded earth and heaven, and filled the daisy cup to overflowing? Who can tell the joy of that first sight of the sun's glorious face.

And the great sun shone on, smiling, serene, and majestic as ever, its glorious fulness not one whit diminished because one daisy cup more was over-brimming, one daisy heart more was made glad.

Only a parable, children, after all. But a parable that may speak to some of your hearts to-day.

Souls by the myriad stud the wide plain of life, and the Lord Jesus is the great "Sun of Righteousness" (Malachi iv. 2) who shines on serenely, sweetly, majestically, able and willing to fill all hearts with gladness, and each life with joy. Some of us "love his appearing," and day by day look up to welcome Him, basking in the light of his love, singing his praises, and opening our hearts to the glorious fulness which "filleth all in all"—not all of us. No; not all. Here and there are souls upon whom lies the heavy, crushing load of sin, prisoning the spirit, darkening the life, and blotting out the sight of Jesus. Ah! it is all gloom, and darkness with those who cannot see the face of Jesus, as they walk through life! Others speak of their happiness, and tell the story of sin forgiven, and peace shining in their hearts; but you? well, perhaps, it is all different with you, and you can only say with a great, great longing—

A long time I wandered in darkness and sin,
And wondered if ever the light would shine in;
I heard Christian friends speak of raptures divine:
And I wished—how I wished—that their Saviour was mine!

Perhaps this is just your case, reader, and darkness and despair have settled upon your spirit, as they did upon my daisy flower. You have almost given up the hope of ever being a Christian. You think that you will never be brought "out of darkness into his marvellous light" (1 Peter ii. 9).

Let me whisper the message:—Do not despair. If you want Jesus and long to know his love, He first wanted you, and longs to reveal Himself to you. Open your heart to the gentle dew of his Holy Spirit, and let that blessed Spirit do his softening work upon your soul. Is it a load of sin that lies upon you? Oh! make the effort of faith, and cast it down at Jesus' feet. Is it a load of unbelief, or anxiety, or care? Will all the strength that your feeble faith can put forth, cast it away? "Roll thy burden on the Lord, and He shall sustain thee" (Ps. lv. 22).

I cannot picture for you in words the joy, the delight that a soul feels when it first looks up with a sin-freed heart into the face of Jesus. I cannot describe to you (you must taste and see for yourself) what it is to have his love, like sunlight, flooding one's heart and life. And to know that his fulness, and his power to bless is not one whit the less because your cup is filled by Him to the very brim; nay, "runneth over" (Ps. xxiii. 5).

Won't you try for yourself? Are you not tired of the cold, and the darkness, and the prison house, and do you not long for the light? I think you do. I think as you put this down you will just look up and say: "Lord, I accept thy message. I must, I do believe, I will not let this load of sin shut Thee out longer from me. At thy feet I cast myself, my sins, my all!"

Jesus, I will trust Thee,
Trust Thee with my soul;
Guilty, lost, and helpless,
Thou canst make me whole.

Then you will join in the glad chorus of redeemed souls: "And of his fulness have we all received, and grace for grace."

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., March 3, Luke ix. 12—22; Mon., March 4, Luke ix. 23—36; Tues., March 5, Luke ix. 37—48; Wed., March 6, Luke ix. 49—62; Thurs., March 7, Luke x. 1—16; Fri., March 8, Luke x. 17—28; Sat., March 9, Luke x. 29—42.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. Josiah Spiers, Bishop Stortford, March 8—20; Gospel Hall, Southgate-road, Wood Green, N., March 22—24, 8 p.m., for teachers and workers; and March 25 to April 5 (Sat. and Sun. excepted), for children, 7 p.m. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, St. Mary's School, Merton, March 3—5. Mr. Herbert W. Pewtress, South-street Chapel, Greenwich, March 3—8. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Christ Church Parochial Room, Cancell-road, North Brixton, March 4—8; St. Andrew's Schools, New Kent-road, March 10—17. Mr. Macro, Hamond-square, Hoxton, March 11—16.

AMPTHILL Y.M.C.A.—The Association here has completed its 13th year. The membership numbers 88, which is encouraging for such a small town. On Sunday, Feb. 3 and 10, evangelistic services were conducted by Hatterchele Macher Kistheshe, a young Soudanese. He sang and preached the Gospel to crowded audiences with much blessing.

THE PEACE SOCIETY.—At a committee of the Peace Society, an address to the British people, signed on behalf of the Society by Sir Joseph W. Pease, Bart., M.P. (president) and Mr. W. Evans Darby (secretary), was adopted and ordered to be circulated, in protest against the Government proposals for a further heavy expenditure upon armaments, in consequence of recent panic outcries by members of the two services.

"THE BANNER OF ASIA" is the title of a monthly magazine, edited by Messrs. Alfred S. Dyer, W. J. Gladwin, and Maurice Gregory, and published at Tardeo, Bombay. The January issue contains stimulating articles on national righteousness, for the most part based on the opium curse of China, and impurity and intemperance as promoted by legal regulation in India. There is an informing article on "The wrongs of Indian women," in which the Government is asked to supplement the legislation forbidding the burning of widows, by an Act having for its object the putting down of the horrible widow-torture which has taken the place of suttee. We trust this paper will serve a high and useful purpose. In England subscriptions (2s. 6d. per annum) may be sent to Dyer Brothers, Office of The Sentinel, Paternoster-square, E.C.

Workers and their Equipment.

The Home of Industry continues amply to justify its title of the "Beehive." This was apparent to the visitor at the Workers' Meeting last week, when a well-arranged group of fat and flourishing children in the lower room was the centre of an admiring throng, while Miss Macpherson dilated with much heartiness on the rescue branch of the work. Many touching bits of child biography were thrown in, and pathetic facts related by Miss Macpherson and Miss Stock, as to the circumstances in which the members of this growing family were found. That very afternoon a mother had been laid in the grave; two of her children were to be received. Two other newly made orphans were on their way to the Home. The previous Saturday a little fellow was taken in; at the mature age of twelve he had threatened to drown himself because of his homeless misery. A wee lass was deserted by her mother, and the sorrow-stricken father, himself out of work and half starved, had been glad to place the child under the sheltering wing of the Institution. So our friends of the Beehive are able from week to week to dry up a little of the stream of sin and sorrow that surges through London's East-end.

As to the general work, Miss Macpherson said that during January two thousand of the surrounding poor were entertained and cheered in their pilgrimage. Conversions are being granted in connection with the mothers' meetings, Bible-classes, and cottage meetings. Our columns last week told of the special mission to children; a young converts' class is established to watch over and feed these lambs of the flock. There is also much to encourage in the lads' night school, and other branches of the work. It was with a pang of sorrow we heard from Miss Macpherson that the Old Home in Commercial-street, where so much good work has been done, is about to be vacated. The lease has almost expired, and the varied work carried on there during the past year will now be distributed into other channels.

THE WORKERS' EQUIPMENT

was the theme on which Rev. C. A. Fox expatiated in the upper room, with all his customary suggestiveness, practicality, and happiness of phrase. With Phil. iv. for a text, he had first of all some things to say in application of the Apostle's entreaty to Euodias and Syntyche to be "of the same mind in the Lord." Mr. Fox said he was persuaded that a great deal of Christian work is hindered because of the lack of perfect unity and brotherhood among the workers. Let there be more of the spirit of the true yokefellow, helping to bring all those who work for the Master in different places, and in various ways, into perfect unity. There is need for more harmony among workers everywhere.

The Apostle goes on to speak of his fellow-labourers, "whose names are in the book of life." This is the first part of the worker's equipment—he must be registered in the book of life. A valuable package going through the post is registered; it has a red or a blue mark across it. So the Christian worker must be registered with the red mark of the Cross, and the blue mark of the constancy of God. Everyone born into the kingdom of God is registered. They are part of Christ's army, and He knows them all by name. The next part of the worker's equipment is joy—"rejoice in the Lord alway." Someone has said there is no light which shines out so far to sea as Christian joy. No man can be sure that his name is written in heaven without being full to overflowing with Divine joy. This is a very important thing. Some Christians look so very doleful and fearful, always saying there is something in the way. As to the man who has the joy of God in his heart and in his face, people say, "I will go with him; he is so full of gladness." Everybody wants gladness in this world.

Another point in the equipment is set forth in ver. 6, "Be careful for nothing," &c. If you are registered and rejoicing, see also that you are at rest. Let nothing fret you. I dare say we all know the fretting Christian—that person is ourself. How can we be careful for nothing? "In everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God." Prayer and thanksgiving—that is the recipe for rest. Do we know this wonderful experience? Have we not had some heavy burden, something that we could not really undertake—have we not cast it honestly, humbly, and determinedly on the Lord, and then the peace of God has filled our life? In this fevered place in which we live, how could we work at all if we had not rest of soul and freedom from care? It would be impossible.

And now, if we have these things, what shall happen? You will observe that in this chapter there are

THREE "SHALLS."

I want you, Christian worker, to put them in your knapsack. If you are registered, rejoicing, and at rest, then "the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds." It is a certainty. It is not the peace of earth, that may be broken up so quickly; it is the peace of God. I believe it is possible for the child of God to have this unbroken peace, year by year. Every true worker ought to seek to possess, by the grace of God, the consciousness of this peace permament in his soul.

Pass on to another "shall" in ver. 9: "The God of peace shall be with you." We have spoken of the peace of God, but here we have the God of peace, which is still better. To have a cheque out of a cheque-book is good; but it is better to have the banker himself. Do we know anything of this continual presence of God with us? Mr. F. Arnot, the African traveller, who has been with us for some time, lately told me that he was sustained amid all the difficulty, disease, and danger of his long journeys by the conciousness of the presence of the living God with him. That is what we all want.

Yet one other shall (ver. 19): "My God shall supply all your need," &c. The Apostle in writing to the Philippians says they were the only church that had supplied his need and ministered to him. Child of God, minister, wherever you go, to the Lord and to his people. Give away Jesus; give away some word of his; some blessed promise, something which is of Christ—a kind word, a shake of the hand, a look, a song for Him; give what you can, if it is only the widow's farthing. We have had the shall of peace, the shall of the presence, and now we have the shall of supply. My God shall supply; there is no doubt about it. This is what I call "the armchair promise"—like the luxurious armchairs they make nowadays, with cushions all round it. Wherever you turn you lean on a great promise.

This very brief outline of Mr. Fox's address will indicate the comforting and stimulating character of it. When he had finished, Rev. Mr. McAll gave some interesting particulars as to the spread of the McAll Mission throughout France. During the evening prayer was made on behalf of workers, especially those formerly connected with the Home of Industry, and now toiling in far distant lands. It was mentioned that Mrs. Merry had arrived from Canada. On the railway journey to Halifax a snow plough came into collision with the train, but Mrs. Merry and her travelling companions escaped any serious injury. For this praise was heartily offered to God.

About a year ago the Queen of Sweden paid a visit to Miss Macpherson, and was greatly delighted with what she saw of the work among the East-end poor. The Queen recently sent to Miss Macpherson a beautiful illumination of the text, "Behold the Lamb of God," executed by Her Majesty's own hand, and splendidly framed, as a souvenir of her visit, and an expression of the deep interest she takes in the work. Would that all the kings and queens of earth might follow such a right Royal example.

Dr. Stephenson, of the Children's Home, Bonner-road, London, purposes visiting Scotland in March. Ayr, Greenock, Glasgow, Paisley, Edinburgh, and Hawick, are the places to be favoured by a call from the Doctor and his choir from the Home.

Ayrshire Christian Union will have a conference at Kilmarnock on March 3, on "The Divinity of Christ as set forth in John's Gospel." These conferences are very quickening to spiritual life, and are much enjoyed by attending Christians.

Dr. Pentecost is about to start a fortnight's mission in Cowcaddens, a very rough quarter of Glasgow, but one where evangelists have already done great things. His next district will lie to the east of the city, and from thence he will pass to the south-western suburb of Pollokshields. From Feb. 25 until March 1, a series of meetings for business men have been held. For the last two months the St. Andrew's Hall Sunday evening meetings have been packed, and as many as fifty inquirers have been aided in one night.

The National Bible Society of Scotland dropped good seed by the wayside last summer when it presented every foreign attendant at the Exhibition with a Bible in his or her own language. The attendants included Parsees, Buddhists, and Mohammedans, yet the gifts were gratefully accepted. In after days the fruit may be shown.

Out of three or four hundred lads taken from the waif, stray, and juvenile delinquent class, it was hardly to be expected that the criminal element would be totally lacking. By the incendiarism of four boys, the training ship Cumberland, which was the salvation of many a lad, has been burned to the edge of Gareloch waters. The Cumberland has for many years been the chief object of interest as she lay safe on this beautiful arm of the Firth of Clyde, and there is much sadness of heart amongst lovers of good work as to what will now be done. The poor homeless boys have been kindly housed meantime in Glasgow.

Those who have spent even a stray holiday in any of the Scottish farming shires, and have given the most casual glance at the "bothy" life of the men servants, will readily confirm the opinion of Forfar Established Presbytery when it expresses the belief that these represent, in the country, the lapsed masses. They are hardly to be got at, seeing they are continually changing their "bothy" abodes. The causes for non-churchgoing in the towns are many, and difficult to tabulate, but intemperance is a mighty factor for evil, it is confessedly the source of poverty, religious indifference, and bad physical environment.

The Mission to the West Coast of Scotland is now thirty-three years old, and its history has been one of steady growth and extension. But for the Mission very many people in the Western Highlands and Islands would be without the means of grace from January until December, owing to their distance from church and the impassableness of winter roads. The agents have therefore been increased from twenty-eight to thirty, and, through their instrumentality, a great revival has taken place in Coll. There is sad poverty in the homes in the Island of Lewis, and the little children are miserably clad.

Luke North.

Professor Franz Delitzsch, D.D., Ph.D.,

University of Leipzig.

IF there is at present in religious and theological circles in Germany one person whose character is pre-eminently interesting and sympathetic, it is certainly that of Professor Franz Delitzsch. Who has not heard of his commentaries on the Old Testament, of his remarkable Hebrew translation of the New, of his prodigious activity as a professor and as an author? Who can tell how many English and Scotch pastors, attracted by his great reputation as a learned man and as a Christian, have come to sit at the feet of the celebrated professor of Leipzig? Our readers will not therefore be surprised to find in our pages a biography of a German scholar whose lessons, during the past forty years, have been attended by more than one generation of English divines.

Delitzsch is both a learned man and a Christian to an eminent degree. No one better than he has succeeded in reconciling two things often considered as irreconcilable—profound science and sincere faith. If the Professor, now seventy-five years of age, has been able by arduous study to arrive at an astonishing degree of scientific knowledge, he also had as a young man to win his faith at the cost of many a struggle against indifference and doubt. His career is in itself sufficiently eloquent, and it is worth our while to retrace its principal features.

(From Photograph by Georg Brokelmann, Leipzig.)

Franz Delitzsch was born in February, 1813, at Leipzig. His parents were in humble circumstances. He became an orphan in early life, but a Jew named Hirsch Lévy took the boy under his protection. Delitzsch says that without the paternal solicitude of this kind man it would not have been possible for him to carry on his studies. May we not trace to this circumstance the sympathy that Delitzsch has always manifested towards the Jewish race? At any rate, the benefits received from an Israelite remained engraved on the heart of the young man, and were largely repaid in after life. Delitzsch is not a Jew by birth, as has been sometimes asserted.

He passed through the regular stages of public instruction, the elementary school taught according to the system of Pestalozzi and Lancaster; the Gymnasium, where he began the study of Hebrew, and where he became, as he himself says, a thorough rationalist. "I felt myself drawn towards God," he says, "but the person of Christ meant nothing to me." He began his University career, and plunged head foremost into the great systems of philosophy. Christian friends, however, were trying to gain him over to evangelical truth. He resisted a long time, but yielded at last, and he still remembers the spot at Leipzig where the ray of Divine light entered into his soul, and where he was able to say with the Apostle, "My Lord and my God."

From this time Delitzsch studied theology and Oriental philology. He became connected with missionary efforts among the Jews, a work to which he has rendered signal services. At Leipzig he was intimate with the missionaries Messrs. Goldberg and Becker; the latter initiated him into the study of rabbinical Hebrew. One great desire engrossed him at this time, and was the subject of much prayer: he longed for the conversion of his Jewish benefactor. Some years later his prayer was answered, and Hirsch Lévy fell asleep in Jesus.

In 1842 Delitzsch obtained the degree of Doctor in Philosophy, and the right to teach in the German Universities. He had published a learned essay on the legends relating to the prophet Habakkuk. He was called as Professor to Rostock in 1846, but he left that town in 1850 to respond to a call from Erlangen. A group of distinguished men had made this University one of the most important in Germany. Thomasius, Frank, Von Hofmann, Herzog, Spiegel, Karl von Raumer, Zeschwitz, and Ebrard, were not far distant. It is easy to understand the influx of pupils who crowded to Erlangen when Delitzsch began to lecture on the Old Testament and Von Hofmann on the New.

It is a custom in German Universities that when the professors attain to celebrity they are called, when a vacancy occurs, to a more important seat of learning. Delitzsch was not long without receiving such a call. In 1867 the University of Leipzig offered him the chair of Old Testament Theology. In this great centre of German learning and of Lutheran faith, Delitzsch had surroundings which were eminently sympathetic, and colleagues not less distinguished than those he was leaving at Erlangen—Kahnis (who died a few months ago), and Luthardt Fricke.

In the University of Leipzig Delitzsch has taught for more than twenty years, and there he hopes to remain to the end of his earthly career. There he has been in contact with hundreds of students from all Protestant countries, and has pursued with indefatigable zeal his task of a Christian professor, the representative of positive exegetical theology. There he has exercised the most cordial hospitality towards his students of every nationality—English, American, Norwegian, Swedish, Swiss, &c. His reception-room and his table are often a Babel of tongues. The Professor himself speaks English with great facility.

Such, in outline, has been the life of Dr. Delitzsch: one of studious retirement in the midst of the activity of a German University town. Delitzsch has visited England, Switzerland, and other countries. Last year, passing through Leipzig, the writer wished to see his venerable Professor. He was absent spending his holidays in Holland, learning Dutch and searching into the libraries of that country. During the session, besides his regular lessons, the aged but indefatigable Professor gives lectures to the Anglo-American Society at the Institutum Judaicum and at the Lusatian Students' Society. There is no theologian in Germany who, with such a widely extended reputation, writes with so much simplicity and such hearty cordiality.

It would be difficult to give, in a few sentences, anything like a complete idea of Delitzsch as a professor and as a writer. A Hebrew scholar of the highest order, versed in all Hebrew literature, he has published commentaries on the principal books of the Old Testament—Isaiah, Habakkuk, the Psalms, Proverbs, Job, Ecclesiastes, Song of Solomon, and Genesis. These commentaries are remarkable for exact scientific research, for the importance attached to grammatical construction, and for the astonishing erudition which they display. What makes his works especially valuable is the religious spirit that reigns throughout in a degree rarely met with in the exegetical writings of our day.

In his commentaries Delitzsch treats his subjects as a whole. A continuous idea runs through them. His explanations are not merely a series of separate notes; they form a chain binding firmly together the different parts of the text. He may sometimes exaggerate the typical and allegorical meaning, and has also a certain subtlety of thought; but he is remarkable for the force with which he takes hold of the Messianic types and prophecies contained in the books of the Old Testament, and brings out of them the story of salvation. He published in English in 1880 an interesting study on the Messianic prophecies.

His style, generally, is rather encumbered with uncommon expressions; its characteristics are power and originality; it is rich, varied, and coloured.

Amongst his writings on Rabbinical literature we may mention his "History of Jewish Rabbinical Poetry" (1836), which shows prodigious learning in so young a man, for, when he wrote it, he was only twenty-three years of age; "Anecdota zur Geschichte der mittelalterlicher Scholastik unter Juden und Moslemen (1841)," and a number of other works on different points in the history of Israel, and also of the mission among the Jews. He has always been a zealous and sincere advocate of the cause of Israel, and Jews in all lands have long since learnt to love and esteem him. His principal work in this department was the publication in 1877 of his Hebrew New Testament, which has already passed through eight editions. Who can tell how much good this translation has done among the dispersed children of Abraham! It has awakened in many a heart the desire to come to the knowledge of Christ, the true Messiah, and has been a blessing to Jews in distant lands.

Among his principal works are: "The Sacrament of the Real Body and Blood of Christ" (1844), "Die Biblisch-prophetische Theologie" (1845), "The Four Books of the Church" (1847), "The System of Biblical Psychology" (1855), which was translated into English, a first-rate essay on this difficult subject; "System des Christlichen Apologetik" (1869), &c. He has also given attention to the New Testament; he treated the question of "The Canonical Gospels" (1853), "The Epistle to the Hebrews" (1857), "Ein Tag in Capernaum" (third edition, 1881). There are many others of which we will not attempt even to give the names.

It has been said of Delitzsch that in him "the man was greater than even the theologian." This is surely high praise, when we recollect what scholarship he possesses. Germany has sometimes been represented as overrun with infidel professors. When a theologian like Delitzsch is so highly appreciated it is clear that evangelical principles have still their influence in the German Universities. Moreover the Professor is not only a great scholar, he is also a faithful believer in Jesus Christ. He is not only consumed with a thirst of knowledge, but also with an earnest love for souls. He strives to speak to the understandings of his hearers and also to make the truth penetrate into their hearts.

POST OFFICE EMPLOYÉS.

It is most cheering to observe the rapid progress of Christian work among Post Office employés through the three kingdoms. Generally speaking, the controllers and postmasters give hearty support to the Christian Post Office Association, which in less than two years has become an agency having a very distinct influence upon large numbers of those connected with the service. The first annual meeting was held on Wednesday last week in the City Temple, Holborn Viaduct, the assembly being large beyond all expectation. The building was well filled, and for the most part the audience was made up of Post Office employés.

Sir Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B., secretary of the Post Office, presided, and the proceedings were characterised by earnestness throughout. In the course of his opening address, Sir Arthur referred with pleasure to the progress of the Association, and recognised in its growth the distinct blessing of God upon the initial efforts of two or three ladies not connected with the service. Christian members of the Association have been much benefited, and their efforts to bring others to a knowledge of the Saviour have been greatly blessed. Herein the speaker saw the highest aspect of the work of the Association, which knows no denomination, and is full of promise for the future. That promise will be realised just in proportion to the reality of the Christian life of each individual member. In conclusion, Sir Arthur Blackwood expressed a hope that the order of the words in the title will in due time be fully justified, by the Post Office being emphatically Christian, and a great blessing to the public which it serves, and with which its members are daily brought into very close contact.

Canon Wilberforce delivered a powerful address. Having spoken in terms of warm admiration of the modern principle of special efforts to reach special classes of people, he founded some words of encouragement and counsel upon the expression, "Behold, He cometh with clouds" (Rev. i. 7), which, he said, though doubtless referring to the future glorious appearing of the Lord, may also be taken as an assurance that He is ever at hand when trial and distress overtake those who trust Him. Proceeding to urge communion with God, the speaker pointed out that Post Office workers cannot but be better for being Christians. People around will read such as profess godliness a thousand times more than they will read their Bibles. Man is not his own centre; his heart and mind must be set upon God. Those who know Jesus, by whom God is manifested, learn the secret of a quiet mind, and are at once impelled to an active life. God's guarantee is that we may have our sins forgiven forthwith; but though our standing before Him is absolutely immovable, our present sinlessness is not ensured. Though our salvation is of God, our holiness is the outcome of successful struggle with the evil around us, with his guidance and help. Dwelling upon the importance of exercising moral courage, the Canon said that if we would be safe, we must testify for Christ, without fearing the sneers of men. In conclusion, he expressed a hope that the members of the Association would give up the use of intoxicating drinks, which are the cause of so much sin and misery.

After a few hearty words by Mr. R. M. Webb-Peploe, the meeting closed. The telegraph messengers marched to the Temple from their respective offices, in some cases headed by their bands. During the evening many kindly allusions were made to them, and also to the large number of young women connected with the service.

JEWS IN PARIS.—Mr. L. C. Mamlock, missionary of the London Jews' Society, Paris, writes that he has again been permitted to gather some fruits of his labour among God's ancient people in Paris. Another son of Abraham has been drawn by the Gospel to the Saviour, and to confess Him openly in baptism.

SIGHTLESS CHILDREN.—A Branch Home has recently been opened at Alexandra House, Palace Gates-road, Wood Green, N., in connection with the Home for Blind Children, Hackney, for the reception of incapable blind children who are not eligible for admission into any of the institutions for the blind. These poor children require more loving sympathy and help than even ordinary blind children. Miss Rye earnestly asks for the sympathy and help of Christian friends for her sightless family.

"THE CHRISTIAN" FOR SOLDIERS.—Mr. Henry Hull, soldiers' missionary, Sandgate, Kent, writes to say that some of those soldiers to whom friends send copies of The Christian have to pay threepence postage, because the senders paste together the wrapper and the packet; that is contrary to the Post-office regulations. It would be well also for senders of copies to inform the recipients of their address, in order that any change of barracks may be noted. When soldiers move, papers and letters are forwarded, but they have to pay extra postage. Attention to these points will save trouble and expense.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICES.—Dear Sir,—I should be very thankful if friends would come forward and assist me in the Young People's Mission work at Princes' Hall, Piccadilly, (1) by collecting girls and boys who do not attend Sunday-schools, young people employed in places of business, &c., and bringing them to the services and proposed gatherings; (2) by assisting me to arrange outdoor services, country rambles, sketching and collecting parties, &c. I shall be very pleased to supply further information.—Yours, 43, Gordon-square, W.C. H. J. Meares.

DEAF MUTES IN CHINA.—It is said there are over a hundred thousand deaf mutes in the Chinese Empire. For these there exists no institution. Rev. J. Crosslet, an American missionary, and Mr. Cranston, from Scotland, are trying to help this numerous and sadly neglected class, and they are earnestly looking for some qualified teacher of the deaf and dumb willing to give himself to this work, to go out and found an institution where these afflicted ones may be educated and brought to the knowledge of God's grace. Any desiring to help should write to Rev. J. Crosslet, care of United States Consulate, Shanghai; or Rev. J. Edkins, Peking, China.

HEBREW-CHRISTIAN WORK, N.Y.

Rev. Jacob Freshman preached on the Jewish question last Sunday evening in Whitfield's Tabernacle, Tottenham Court-road. Since his arrival from New York, he has been to Scotland, where kind friends interested in the Jewish Mission have aided him in his work. He reports £100 from a friend in Glasgow, and is also expecting a large donation from Edinburgh, in aid of the £1000 he is endeavouring to raise for the first Hebrew-Christian Church in America.

Mr. Freshman leaves soon for Jerusalem, to see his Jewish brethren there. In his absence we shall be glad to receive any help towards his good work that friends may send to us.

SOLDIERS' HOME, CAPE TOWN.

Dear Sir,—Permit me to thank your readers heartily for the copies of The Christian which are being sent regularly both to the Soldiers' Home and the Home for Aged Ladies. The kindness is much appreciated, and I am asked to convey the thanks of the recipients.

Through your kindness, I am enabled to supply the Soldiers' Reading-room at Wynberg, as well as in Cape Town, with a copy.

Lately in the military hospital one of the most earnest of our soldier-workers entered into rest. Converted during Mr. Varley's mission, two years ago, he became at once a zealous worker. Renting a room in a low neighbourhood, he, with some of his comrades, preached the Gospel nightly to the poorest of the natives. The room became over-crowded, and had to be enlarged. Unweariedly he worked after each day's military duty, until illness laid him aside. The poor coloured people went constantly to the hospital to inquire after him. Black and white wept around his grave, and there a few weeks later, a little native girl was found tending the flowers. She said he had brought her to Jesus.

He was only a private, aged twenty-two, but this young life has proved again that it is possible for our soldiers to be missionaries as well as witnesses for Christ. M. S. Osborn.

The Soldiers' Home, Cape Town.

EASTERN SOUDAN.—Mr. Francis William Fox, 8, Queen Anne's-gate, Westminster, S.W., writes to say that he is anxious to see a small Medical Mission established in the Eastern Soudan, as one among many other measures which may be adopted for ameliorating the condition of the people of that region. Any of our readers interested are invited to communicate with him.

MISSIONARY ARROWROOT. — Messrs. Dymock Guthrie and Howden, 135, George-street, Edinburgh, who have kindly undertaken to distribute the finest arrowroot from the Native Christians of the New Hebrides, Island of Aneityum, under the Free Church of Scotland, at 1s. 3d. per lb. asks us to notify that the smallest quantity sold is two lbs., and that remittances for small parcels to be sent to the country snould include postage, viz., under 3 lbs., 6d.; 4 lbs., 7½d.; 5 lbs., 9d.; 6 lbs., 10½d.; 7 lbs., 1s.; 8 lbs., 1s. 1½d.; 9 lbs., 1s. 3d.; 10 lbs., 1s. 4½d.; and 11 lbs., 1s. 6d. Parcels over this weight, and under 28 lbs., will be sent by passenger train.

FAREWELL TO MR. BLAIKLOCK.—The president and committee of the Gospel Temperance Movement tendered a farewell reception to Mr. George Blaiklock, at the Memorial Hall last Friday evening. The gathering was thoroughly representative. Mr. William I. Palmer, of Reading, spoke in warm terms as to the work that Mr. Blaiklock has accomplished in this country. A number of local and provincial friends, including the secretaries of the National Temperance League, Band of Hope Union, and Irish Temperance League joined in expressing regard for the high character and services of Mr. Blaiklock, and in commending him to friends in Australia. The whole meeting was of the heartiest and warmest description.

THE KOLAR MISSION.

Miss Anstey, of the Kolar Mission, Mysore, whose work is well known to our readers, in a recent letter says:—

The Lord has given this Orphanage and Mission favour in the eyes of the heathen. It is a sermon preached in India as to the truth of a prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God. It is a witness to the truth—a living daily witness that cannot be silenced.

Our Mohammedan deputy commissioner is most friendly. At Christmas he sent us fruit for 400. The other day a Brahmin gentleman sent fifteen rupees, with a request to have it spent on good food for the children. Again, when our Mission people observed my jubilee at their own expense, one of the native gentlemen present declared that he heartily echoed the expressions of the prayers offered up for me. In those petitions mention was made of the Lord's goodness in enabling me to establish the Mission some eleven years ago, and to carry it on ever since.

When I think of this work as a powerful witness of the truth, I feel encouraged to believe that it is not the will of the Lord that this door of usefulness should be closed.

FRIENDLESS GIRLS.

Many will be glad to learn that Mr. E. W. Thomas and his Committee have now added to the Preventive Homes, already doing good service at Parson's-green and the Hampstead-road, another Home of the same type at 459, Holloway-road. This was opened with a devotional meeting on Thursday, last week; the large attendance of visitors on the occasion was a clear indication of the interest taken in the object. It is matter of devout thankfulness that such excellent provision has been made to meet the wants of so many young servants "out of place," and of others absolutely friendless in this quarter of the Metropolis. Mr. R. C. Morgan presided. Rev. Marmaduke Washington preceded the dedicatory prayer by a most appropriate address on Eccl. xi. 1. The Home was then formally declared open by Mrs. F. A. Bevan, at the close of an exceedingly sympathetic and encouraging address.

An interesting feature in the proceedings was the presentation of an address by Mr. Nicholls, on the part of the Committee, to Mrs. Bevan, cordially thanking her for her unabated interest in the work. In response, Mrs. Bevan said that it was increasingly her desire and that of her husband to be enabled to testify to all working in the Lord's vineyard, that it was only by steadily keeping their hand to the plough they could expect to see the results they longed to see. Mr. E. W. Thomas said he had been very greatly encouraged in all that concerned the Home. An unknown friend had sent £200, and tidings had reached him of £25 having also been given. He could not but take these things as indications to go forward. The meeting was also addressed by Rev. H. J. Berguer and Mr. Allen Davis, hon. secretary of the new Home.

EVENING HOME FOR WORKING GIRLS.—Two years ago a quiet work was commenced among girls in a house in the Wandsworth-road. It has been carried on by several ladies, who, though themselves busily occupied, desire to win their less favoured sisters for Christ. The Home is open every evening. A marked improvement has shown itself in the outward conduct of those who attend. There is great need of a loving and devoted Christian lady who would be willing to assist in this work. Help is also needed in the way of ladies' left-off clothing, boots, &c., or remnants of print. The hon. sec. is Mrs. Jenks, 27, Union-grove, South Lambeth, S.W.

MR. SPURGEON AT HOME.

The famous Tabernacle pastor returned from the Continent last week. Though not completely recovered from the effects of his recent accident, he was able to preach morning and evening on Sunday to crowded congregations. He stated that during his absence he had had most happy fellowship with friends belonging to all denominations. Though he was from time to time confined to the chamber of sickness, he blessed the Lord for it, and praised him for recovery.

The morning discourse was founded upon John xxi. 12. The Lord Jesus, said Mr. Spurgeon, is always thoughtful of bodily wants. The fact that He thought of the hunger of his disciples on this particular occasion may be a warrant to the people of God as churches to try and fed the poor. Mr. Spurgeon laid great stress on the point that all Christians must attend to the commissariat of their soul, dwelling upon the importance of "a meal with Jesus," and of being in a thoroughly flourishing condition within. "We want," he cried, "stamina if we are to work for Christ, and there is no stamina without the food of heaven. The most fascinating, living evangelist, if he attempts to live in his own work, will make a very great mistake. He must feed himself on heavenly bread. He who is nourished with heavenly food can always be put through his facings."

WORK IN GREECE.

Until about three years ago the few converts had to face the usual taunt that the missionaries' money was the object of their converts. It was then decided that the foreign missionaries should retire. The few converts banded together and threw their income into a common fund, from which distribution was made to the brethren as each had need. God blessed this effort, and spiritual blessings resulted. The little band clung to the Lord and one another, under the title of the "Greek Evangelical Church."

The Athens and Volo brethren have buildings of their own in which to hold their gatherings. Not so, however, at the Piræus where a work of grace is going on. The preaching is well attended. A man and his wife have been ejected from their employments for not permitting the priest to come each month and sanctify their house for the usual fee, an old custom for fleecing those who belong to the Greek Church. The persecution, however, has only served to quicken the faith of the converts.

There is, besides Miss Lierhamer's well-known work among sailors, her Sunday-school and visiting work among waifs and strays. At Volo fourteen members have been admitted. At Athens, among others, a priest was converted, and has gone forth as a colporteur to convey the truth to others. Thousands of copies of God's Word are doing their silent work. Help towards erecting a suitable building, so urgently required for carrying on the work at the Piræus, will be welcomed by Rev. Dr. M. D. Kalopothakes, Greek Evangelical Church, Athens.

THE CONGO.—Mr. Frederickson and his wife, who are labouring at Galabala, on the Congo, writing to Mr. J. C. Smith, of the Soul-winning and Prayer Union, Newport-on-Tay, say they are enjoying good health, although sickness and death have been rife in the region. Some of the people are disposed to accept Christ, but they are keeping back for fear of their kings. At Vunda, not far from Galabala, Mr. Frederickson recently found the natives willing to hear the Gospel, and desirous that he should build among them.

A MISSION IN NEWCASTLE.

(From a Correspondent.)

The city of Newcastle-upon-Tyne has been during the past week the scene of a very promising and encouraging general Church of England mission. The Bishop of the diocese and his clergy spared no pains on their preparation for the work, and it would seem that their efforts are being richly rewarded.

The mission was preceded by a quiet day for for church workers, conducted by Canon Body, whose striking and forcible addresses were highly appreciated, and found very profitable by Christians of all sorts of different schools of thought. His afternoon address on the necessity of conversion was most impressive and definite. On the Saturday morning the parochial clergy of Newcastle and most of the missioners met at St. Nicholas' Cathedral, to hear an address of welcome and of counsel from the Bishop. Very heart-searching and thoroughly to the purpose that address was felt to be; and, in that happy service, the mission found a most auspicious commencement.

Canon Body is the missioner at the Cathedral, which is also a parish church; but the vicar, Canon Lloyd, invited Rev. W. Hay Aitken to address special gatherings for business men there in the middle of the day. Canon Body's services have been very largely attended, and he has expressed himself as much encouraged and gratified by the definite spiritual results that seem to have flowed from them.

Mr. Hay Aitken has delivered a series of addresses on some of the great problems of life, taking for his subjects such inquiries as, "Is life worth living?" "What makes life worth living?" and so forth. From the first the attendance was very large, but towards the end of the week the nave of the grand old church was crowded, and the vast congregation, composed of men only, overflowed into the choir and filled it. The rapt attention and wonderful stillness of that most remarkable gathering, as the preacher worked his way, step by step, to the reductio ad absurdum of materialism, and then went on to speak of the blessedness of the life of faith, prompted the hope that not a few were listening for words whereby they might be saved. The same preacher is holding two services daily at Jesmond Church, which have also been very largely attended, and where he reports that a very hopeful work of grace seems to be going forward.

That veteran missioner, Rev. W. Haslam, has also been addressing crowded congregations at St. Silas's, Byker. We have heard good news of Dr. Morris's work at St. Paul's, and of Mr. Russell's, at St. Ann's. Mr. Somerset Pennefather, the nephew of one whose name is familiar to our readers, has recently been appointed Canon Missioner of this diocese, and upon him the work of organising the mission has to a great extent devolved. He is himself happy in having secured the services of a very gifted missioner, in the person of Rev. Armstrong Hall, whose ministrations are much appreciated by the very important congregation from a social point of view, gathered at the beautiful new church of St. George's.

The Bishop has been most assiduous in giving addresses in all sorts of places, and to all sorts of people—on the quay side, at factories and workshops, and, last Sunday night, in the Town Hall. This very active dignitary has given proof that a bishop is intended to be something more than a sort of ecclesiastical figurehead. The latest news that has reached us of him is that he is to address the prisoners in the gaol. So far as we can gather, showers of blessing are falling all around. We thankfully accept these hopeful indications, and trust the last days of the mission may prove the best. In most of the churches it will, we believe, be continued till the end of this week.

The Baptist Visitation.

At our request brief reports have kindly been sent to us by the pastors of nearly half the Baptist churches taking part in the recent united mission throughout London. We append the greater number of the replies, excluding details; as will be seen the results of the mission are fraught with encouragement, and full of promise for the future work of the churches. The most marked effect of this visitation by provincial pastors seems to have been the quickening of the spiritual life of the churches:—

Penge Tabernacle (Pastor, J. W. Boud).—All the services were well attended, and we feel sure will be productive of good.

New Southgate (Pastor, J. L. Bennett).—All the services were well attended, and many found it good to wait upon the Lord.

Waltham Abbey (Pastor, W. Jackson).—The services were well attended and calculated to quicken believers, instruct inquirers, and awaken sinners.

West-end, Hammersmith (Pastor, W. Page).—The attendance at all the services was good; a very hallowed feeling pervaded all hearts, and it is believed much good will result.

East-hill, Wandsworth (Pastor, J. W. Ewing).—Large congregations gathered, and a deep impression was created by the stirring words of the deputation. All the services were highly successful and profitable.

East Plumstead (Pastor, T. Henson).—The words of our visitors produced deep impressions, and we are looking for future results. Two young men came forward for prayer and help. Doubtless much blessing will follow the mission.

Brockley-road, S.E. (Pastor, J. T. Wigner).—In the whole of our services there was the right tone. We had the gracious presence of the Divine Lord, and the Holy Spirit's grace was felt and known. We are thankful and hopeful.

Regent's Park Chapel (Pastor, F. B. Meyer).—Four services were held. The attendances were not as large as could have been desired; but the effect of the mission has been helpful and wholesome.

Barry-road, East Dulwich (Pastor, A. J. Grant).—The attendance each evening was very fair, and great interest felt in the messages delivered by the visitors. Much good has been done, and desires expressed for a repetition of such services.

Cross-street, Islington (Pastor, F. A. Jones).—The attendances have been fair. The members of the church and congregation have received a spiritual stimulus to devotion and service, and have valued highly the Christian fellowship of honoured brethren from the provinces, who have brought messages of encouragement and Christian sympathy from the churches at large.

Brondesbury, N.W. (Pastor, J. C. Thompson).—The meetings were good, and have resulted in blessing to the church. The work was taken up in the spirit of prayer, and the result has been a general quickening, with special cases of inquiry. We anticipate more direct results by and by, and intend to follow up the work by special evangelistic efforts on Sunday evenings. The church is missionary and evangelistic, and inquirers are looked after and brought in at the ordinary services.

Poplar and Bromley Tabernacle (Pastor, W. Knight Chaplin).—In response to the call of the Baptist Union it was resolved to set aside the usual weekly meetings, and to conduct a fifteen days' mission—February 10 to 25. Notices were taken by visitors to about 10,000 homes. Open-air meetings were held previous to the indoor gatherings. The average week-evening attendance has been from 300 to 400. Many are known to have entered upon the service of our Lord Jesus Christ during the progress of the mission.

Trinity Chapel, Bexley Heath (Pastor, G. K. Smith).—The services were seasons of spiritual refreshing. In spiritual enjoyment and stimulus to believers the meetings were highly successful. The able and beloved brethren who came as missioners evidently felt the burden of the Lord, and were graciously helped to speak words full of encouragement. The afternoon conferences were a new feature, and proved helpful by allowing a free expression of opinion by friends in the congregation. Our hope is that the brief visit will be fraught with lasting and blessed results.

Tiptree Heath.—Rev. W. and Mrs. Jackson, of Waltham Abbey, held a seven days' mission here. Many were deeply impressed.

Stockwell Baptist Church, South Lambeth (Pastor, Arthur Mursell).—A number of meetings were held; a very happy feeling prevailed, and there was a deep impression throughout.

Harlington (Pastor, F. Thomson Smythe).—A four days' mission was held here. All the meetings were well attended, and the church has been strengthened by the visit of the brethren.

Hornsey-rise (Pastor, Geo. Duncan).—The meetings were well attended, but 90 per cent. were Christians. A good spirit prevailed, and no doubt good will result. The mission ought to be made annual.

Rye-lane, Peckham (Pastor, J. T. Briscoe).—The interest was sustained throughout, and the object of these services, the deepening of the spiritual life, was kept in view. Some refreshing seasons were enjoyed.

Leytonstone (Pastor, G. T. Ennals).—Addresses excellent, attendance good, and power attended the word. The visit of our brethren has been most helpful, and beyond present enjoyment we look for a revived interest in church life and work.

John-street, Bedford-row (Pastor, J. E. Shepherd).—With us the main desire was the deepening of the spiritual life of the people, and this we trust will be fully realised. But we have reason to believe many hearts were reached, and we look for conversions.

Abbey-road, St. John's Wood (Pastor, W. Stott).—Our mission has been a success. We have had good attendances. A hearty feeling and much prayer have characterised all the meetings. There has been a manifest deepening of spiritual life, and souls have been converted to God.

Chalk Farm, N.W. (Pastor, Geo. Scudamore).—The services were fairly well attended. We could have wished for more outsiders. The messages delivered by the preachers were well adapted to stir up church members, and were equally suited to the young and old, decided and undecided. The word has been blessed to many, and we are looking for fruit.

Walworth-road Chapel (Pastor, W. J. Mills).—For the first few days the attendance was small, owing to inclement weather. The services were evangelistic in character. Twenty-five inquirers have been seen. The church has been constant in prayer, and in labours, distributing invitations, &c. We hope for much permanent good indirectly through the meetings.

Haven-green (Pastor, W. T. Adey).—Services were held, with well-sustained interest, from Monday till Friday. It was felt that the spiritual life of those attending was stirred into freshness, and for the young people it was decided to form a class of inquirers, under the pastor's leadership. The spirit of earnest prayer was very manifest, and there can be no doubt that tangible results are following the mission.

North Finchley (Pastor, A. B. Middleditch).—Prior to our mission, a week of special prayer was held in drawing-rooms, cottages, and school-room, all well attended. Ladies made a house-to-house visitation, giving a personal invitation, with the result there were good audiences every evening. It is hoped that Christians have been quickened, and it is known that some have been brought to decision.

Gunnersbury (Pastor, J. Cumming Brown).—The meetings here were very encouraging; not in the number of strangers brought to them—there were not twenty, so difficult is it to move a genteel locality—but in the deepening of Christian life of believers, and the bringing to decision of a few undecided ones of our congregation. They have prepared the way for having at any future time such a series of meetings, and that is a great advantage.

Streatham, S.W. (Pastor, J. Pearce Clark).—The attendance was fairly good, in spite of snow and sleet. The meetings were very quiet, but warm and purposeful. Definite results were seen after almost every one. Already more than a dozen hopeful professions of conversion to God have been made, and we fully expect to hear of many more. The general life of the church has been deepened, its energies roused, and new doors of opportunity have been opened.

We have also received encouraging statements of the work at Wynne-road, Brixton; Mare-street, Hackney; Park-road, Plumstead; Commercial-road, E.; Romney-street, Westminster; Borough-road; Lewisham-road; Upper Holloway; Highbury Hill; Fulham; and Bloomsbury.

DR. PENTECOST IN GLASGOW.

The last series of meetings by this evangelist was held in the Christian Institute, as we have already stated. Night after night the hall was well filled. The Bible-readings at noon have been attended by from 400 to 600, and the addresses have been full of instruction and inspiration. The evangelistic meetings have been very striking as to results. In the after-meetings Dr. Pentecost always insists that those seeking prayer should leave their seats and come forward to front pews. The ordeal is trying and one requires to be in earnest about salvation before taking such a step. At every meeting there were inquirers. Some of these after-meetings were solemn and impressive.

Last Friday a social meeting was held in the Institute, of all those who had professed conversion and who had handed in their names. Over 500 invitations were issued, and about 350 were present, besides workers. Mr. Campbell White presided, and the following gentlemen gave suitable advice to the young converts, Rev. Dr. Bonar, Rev. Mr. Donald, Messrs. W. A. Campbell, Alex. Sloan, W. M. Oatts, and others. The chairman called for short testimonies, and all over the hall young men and women spoke of their having surrendered to Jesus. Some of their stories were very interesting. Infidels and sceptics told of their simple trust in Jesus; backsliders spoke of being restored, and others gave simple testimony of conversion. Dr. Pentecost closed with an earnest address, calling on the young converts to be "out and out" for Christ.

For the next fortnight Dr. Pentecost gives addresses to business men in the Merchants' Hall, at 1.15 every day, and conducts an evangelistic meeting at night in Cowcaddens Free Church. Then he goes for two weeks to Bethany Hall; after that to Pollokshields for a fortnight; and lastly to Dennistoun District for two weeks.

WORLD-WIDE PRAYER UNION.—Mrs. Merelith asks us to give notice that this Union, organised by the late Rev. E. Melville Pym, will still be carried on in connection with the annual Convention for the study of prophetic Scripture. Information will be circulated among the members, and an "Occasional Paper" will be forwarded to them. Invitations to the Convention will be posted to them from the office at the Conference Hall, Clapham-road. The Convention will (D.V.) be held this year on June 18, 19, and 20.

THE EAST LONDON SEWING-CLASS FUND.—It is now twenty years since this fund was started. During that time a class has been held in Sidney-street, Mile-end, all through the year, and in the winter months it has had a large membership. Other classes have been opened at Shadwell, Stratford, and Whitechapel. The work was personally superintended by the late Lady Hobart, who regularly visited the class held in Sidney-street. Her daughter, Lady Albinia Hobart-Hampden, is now helping to sustain the endeavour. The classes are good occasions for spiritual instruction to the women. With more outside help, it would be possible to admit larger numbers to the classes, which prove a great assistance to many poor women. Lady Albinia Hobart-Hampden's address is 63, St. George's-road, S.W.

DOCK LABOURERS OF EAST LONDON.—The North-East London Gospel Mission continues, as it has opportunity, to show kindness to the dock labourers. These poor men stand about, in large bodies, for hours every day, in the hope of a "call" to work, and the disappointed are always numerous. Tickets for a free dinner of Irish stew and bread are very welcome to them, and such a form of charity can hardly be abused. In consequence, however, of the limited assistance received this season, only about half as many dinners as last year have so far been given. On Thursday, last week, the hall in Charles-street, Millwall, was filled with hungry men of this class, to whom Christian compassion was practically shown. The need is expected to continue for quite a month longer. The Director of the Mission is Mr. W. Chorley, 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N.

Evangelistic Notes.

Rev. A. Abraham has held Gospel services in the Methodist Church, Bailieboro, Ireland. It is believed much real good was done.

Hazelbury Plucknett.—A mission has been held here by Mr. A. W. Rogerson, of the Evangelisation Society, with most encouraging results.

Rev. W. R. Mowll, of All Souls', Langham-place, has held a mission in Christ Church, North Brixton, from which much blessing has resulted.

Mr. Richard Murphy is holding Gospel meetings at the George Clark Halls, Paisley. They are well attended, and much blessing accompanies the word.

Mr. G. C. Needham has returned to Dublin, from the South of England, and is now in the midst of a good work at the Baptist Church, Rathgar.

Gospel services were held last week, in connection with the Baptist churches, at Lechlade and Arlington, Gloucestershire, conducted by Mr. James Sprunt.

Mr. John M. Scroggie conducted a mission which has been attended with great blessing, in Victoria Free Church, Glasgow, last week; over 100 seeking souls were dealt with.

Rev. J. Hallowes has changed his address to 144, Hagley-road, Birmingham. God is blessing his missions more and more. In the last three, quite a hundred persons professed surrender to Christ.

Evangelistic services were held last week by Rev. Robt. Barron in the Presbyterian schoolroom, Cairncastle, Ireland. Pointed and earnest addresses were given, and a very deep interest was awakened.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith are conducting special services with much spiritual blessing at Dalston Junction. On Sunday evening last the large Baptist church and schoolroom were crowded to excess, and hundreds could not obtain admission.

Baptist Missions.—Special missions have been held in Baptist churches at Dormans, Surrey; Moretonhampstead; Sandy, Beds.; Sittingbourne; Waterbeach, Cambs., and Wrexham, spiritual life in the members being aroused, and outsiders led to the Saviour,

Mr. Edward Hurditch, of the Evangelistic Mission, has just concluded an eight days' mission in the village of Marden, Kent. Despite the snow, the villagers assembled in goodly numbers in Mr. Fox's barn, and the power of God was manifest. The mission was a blessing to many.

Sittingbourne.—Rev. J. S. Harrison, from Australia, has recently held a mission at Sittingbourne. The congregations were large, and a goodly number professed to decide for Christ. Mrs. Harrison sings the Gospel in a clear and telling style. Mr. Harrison is an able preacher; his sermons made a deep impression upon the hearers.

Mr. Walter Notman has concluded a fortnight's mission at Lisworney, S. Wales. Believers have been greatly refreshed, and not a few have professed faith in Christ. Many of the cases are of an interesting character. Mr. Notman commenced a mission at Bonvilstone, near Cardiff, for three weeks on Sunday, February 24.

Dr. L. W. Munhall has closed a successful series of meetings in Brooklyn Tabernacle. The Lord of the harvest alone can tell the number of the sheaves. But over two hundred persons have joined our church as a result of Dr. Munhall's work. Mr. and Mrs. Lowe, the Gospel singers, assisted in the services. Vast good has been done, and the results are eternal.

T. De Witt Talmage,
Pastor, Brooklyn Tabernacle.

Brooklyn, Feb. 1.

Mr. D. L. Moody concluded, on February 3, a month of evangelistic meetings in San Francisco. They were attended, night after night, by audiences of from 5000 to 8000; besides a goodly number of seemingly genuine conversion, there has been awakened in the community a wide-spread interest in spiritual matters. Judging from his frequent allusions, "the old country" seems to have a warm place in Mr. Moody's heart. In one of his first meetings, he called for volunteers for a male choir (since organised) on the principle of the Glasgow Mizpah Band, of which he gave a short history, and pronounced their singing to be "the best he ever heard on earth." Mr. Moody, after a ten days' mission in Oakland, purposes visiting some of the southern cities of California.

Mr. Leonard Weaver conducted evangelistic services for ten days in Leicester, in the Workmen's Hall, and on Sunday evenings in the Temperance Hall, with much blessing as the result. The Bible readings were felt to be deeply helpful to the Christians, and we believe many were roused to closer study of the word of God. Many souls also professed to find peace through a crucified Saviour. The following Sunday and Monday were also times of rich blessing. Mr. T. B. Allanson, of Carnarvon, preached with much power, and led the people on to fuller consecration. Mr. Weaver held a series of Gospel services at Old Hill, attended by much power and blessing. Many professed to receive the Lord Jesus, and are now very happy in the assurance of salvation. The Bible readings were exceedingly helpful to Christians.

OBITUARY.

M. HENRI LUTTEROTH, PARIS.

French Protestantism has sustained a serious loss by the death of M. Henri Lutteroth, at Paris, at the age of 87. The author of an important work on the early history of evangelical testimony in France, he for nearly fifty years directed a weekly paper, Le Semeur. He was held in high esteem as a man, while his faith and works greatly endeared him to the Reformed churches in general.

MR. RICHARD PERRIN, DUBLIN.

The death is announced of this gentleman, of an old mercantile family in Dublin. He maintained for fifty years the highest character, and, though consistent, zealous, and decided in his opinions, he seems to have made no enemies. Mr. Perrin had attained the age of seventy-seven. In every charitable work his aid could be reckoned upon; he was at all times ready to undertake personal labour in the cause of the needy and suffering; and many useful projects in Dublin for the benefit of waifs and strays, as well as the ailing and impoverished, owe their origin to him.

MR. A. D. SLADE, CONGO MISSIONARY.

Another name has been added to the long list of those who have fallen while carrying the Gospel to the Dark Continent. News had been received of the death of Mr. Arthur Demaine Slade, of the Wathen station, Congo River, who was sent out by the Baptist Missionary Society as recently as last spring. The deceased relinquished a lucrative partnership in England, feeling he was called to fill the places of those who had so nobly fallen in that dangerous climate, and, like them, has died at his post. He was a singularly healthy and athletic man, aged thirty-seven, but seems to have indiscreetly bathed when overheated, and so contracted a chill. Mr. Slade was a brother of Revs. H. P. Slade, of Hull, and Francis Slade, of Silvertown, both ministers of the English Presbyterian Church.

SOUL WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for March 10, Jer. xxxiii. 3: "Call unto Me, and I will answer thee, and shew thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not."

PORTLAND HALL, ROTHERHITHE.—For nearly fourteen years an excellent work has been carried on in Deptford-road. Sin in its various forms has been rebuked, and the toiling multitudes have been called upon to repent and believe the Gospel. A few days ago a special meeting in aid of the mission was held. Mr. Trevor Francis, one of the founders, presided, and the several workers detailed the success which has attended their efforts among children as well as adults. The sick and needy are cared for, and in many ways sympathy is shown with the people. Mr. Trevor Francis's address is 36, Tressillian-road, St. John's, S.E.

AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND.—Never during the existence of the North London Homes for Christian Blind have we been so pressed for means as at present. The number of inmates whom we have daily to care for is sixty, while almost by every post we are appealed to by other aged ones seeking admission. They have no alternative but the workhouse, unless they are received into the Homes. £130 is required to meet the expense of each month. Your readers, to whose generosity we bear glad witness, will, we are sure, give response to the appeal of sixty blind sufferers.

Henry and Ann Bright.

SALVATION SLUM WORK.

The importance of the "Slum Work" of the Salvation Army was fully demonstrated on Monday evening in Exeter Hall, when, with trophies of Divine grace before their eyes, and the testimony of earnest labourers for Christ ringing in their ears, many were constrained to praise God from the heart. The large audience included many warm friends and supporters of the agencies with which General Booth's name is associated, and the hall was filled with such as were truly delighted to learn that the second year's operations in the "slums" had been productive of much good. The opening prayer, by Major Cooke, who is in charge of this work, breathed a sentiment which ran through the meeting; in that petition God was praised, first, for having sent Jesus down into the "slums" of this world, and, secondly, for having thrust forth saved men and women to take the glad tidings of redemption to the poor and miserable in the courts and alleys of our great cities.

General Booth presided, and, in a vigorous address, gloried in the work of the Salvation Army among the lowest classes of society. Having given some account of the great success which has so far attended the shelters for poor men, he announced the speedy opening in East London of a shelter for poor women, and a day nursery for children, on a large scale. Rescue work was also referred to, and then came particulars of the "slumming," which is now carried on in several large towns. There are twenty-five Homes of this class, and 60 officers —young women who live in the "slums" and receive no salary, being only supplied with food, lodging, and clothes. A goodly number of these devoted workers were on the platform. Some of them have given up homes of comfort and quiet, in order to win the hearts of the poor toilers by showing them practical help. They nurse the sick, clean the houses and care for the children of women who have to earn a living by incessant toil, and in many other ways they show compassion and kindness, in the hope of thereby leading the poor and downtrodden to the great Helper and Saviour. The weak and erring are also the objects of solicitude, and the "slummers" are ever ready to cheer the fallen and comfort the dying.

As General Booth and others referred to the special duties of the "slummers," the large audience showed an interest amounting to enthusiasm. During the year, 5689 meetings were held, many of them in lodging-houses; 85,328 families were visited, many of them prayed with; 70 fallen girls were rescued; 6222 garments were distributed; 4000 people were assisted by goods, clothes, &c., and 1504 children were admitted to the crèches. Many efforts were carried on, which cannot be here particularised, and yet the expenditure was within £2000. Major Cooke is desirous of opening twenty more "slum" homes and six more crèches. £52 a year will maintain a Home, and £16 18s. a year a "slum" missionary. There were about 300 converts from the "slums" on the platform, and the stories of some of them were deeply interesting. Several missionaries also spoke earnest and cheering words. The General's appeal for funds for this year's work resulted in promises amounting to several hundred pounds. More workers were also called for.

BLIND IN CHINA.—The following message came on a postcard to Mrs. Newbery, of the Home for Blind Children, Kilburn, from J. Crossett, Ningpo, China, dated December 12, 1888:—"Will you and the pupils and friends of your institution kindly regard our want of teachers here in China for the Blind. Among the philanthropic friends of the blind there must be those who could come here themselves or give us teachers through their efforts.....Please send any available literature relating to the blind for creating an interest."

Hungry Blind in China.

By Miss C. F. GORDON CUMMING.

As in the good Providence of God, blessings are so often evolved from what seem to our mortal judgment unmitigated evils, we venture to hope that the practical sympathy of the Christian world, which is now being aroused to help the Chinese in the appalling calamity of wide-spread famine, will prove the true key to unlock many hearts hitherto rigidly closed to all foreign influence, and therefore intensely antagonistic to the preaching of the Gospel of Jesus.

It is evident that the more the distribution of the famine relief fund is entrusted to Christian missionaries, the more will their position be strengthened, not only among the recipients of relief, but also among the mass of a people singularly appreciative of all phases of benevolence. Amongst the missions which would be specially benefited by this direct administration of our offerings on behalf of the starving Chinese is that to the blind in North China, where, at Mr. Murray's school at Peking, starving and most miserable blind beggars are, in the course of from three to six months, transformed into efficient Scripture-readers and singers of sacred song. In many cases they acquire so satisfactory a knowledge of various musical instruments that, while some attract groups of their countrymen in the streets, to hear from their lips the story of the Cross, others have obtained situations as organists in various chapels, and fulfil their duties with delight to themselves, and to the satisfaction of the congregations.

The number of the blind in China is so enormous* and includes so large a proportion of the very poorest of the people, that it is certain that a very large number of those afflicted ones must now be included among the sufferers from famine, and it is certain that, were Mr. Murray able to provide the needful food for starving bodies, the number of his pupils might be very largely increased.

In order to work effectually, he finds it necessary during their course of training to isolate his students from the vile influences of the street, and so small and cramped are the present limits of his school premises that expansion, and the very desirable power of isolating any student suffering from infectious illness, are alike impossible. Still less can Mr. Murray arrange for such total separation of the sexes as will satisfy rigid Chinese views, and induce blind women of the respectable classes to attend the female school—just the women whom it is so very desirable to reach, as blind Bible-readers and musicians thus trained would be certain of a welcome in the zenanas, wherein about 200,000,000 women (the mothers of the next generation) are now living their dull lives, carefully training their sons in that incessant propitiation of their own ancestors which, under the name of ancestral worship, lies at the root of all antagonism towards Christianity.

Strange to say, Mr. Murray writes that at the present moment his neighbours owning the premises on either side of the Blind School are desirous of selling their property, which therefore may any day be bought as the site for a new temple, or for such an objectionable purpose as an opium den. It would be an immense advantage that he should be enabled to secure these two small additions to the property of the Blind Mission, and thus be enabled to establish a separate school for women, while enlarging that for men. At the same time, however, we must note that the very limited funds now at Mr. Murray's command do not admit of his receiving any more students who cannot pay for their own maintenance. Donations for this purpose, as well as for the purchase of the adjacent premises, will be thankfully received by Messrs. Honeyman & Drummond, Chartered Accountants, 58, Bath-street, Glasgow.

A very interesting novelty in China is the correspondence of the blind men trained in Mr. Murray's School at Peking, and already scattered as organists and Scripture-readers in many remote corners of the Empire. Of course it is extremely desirable that these isolated workers should be kept in touch with their teacher and their blind brethren, and, thanks to the facility with which they acquire Mr. Murray's system of embossed writing, this would be easy enough, were it not that transmission by post of the large embossed sheets was found to be very expensive, and, moreover, that the dots were so crushed as to become illegible even to the sensitive fingers of the blind.

In this dilemma, Mr. Murray set himself to devise an envelope so strong as to protect the embossed page, yet so light as to travel by post. His ingenuity found the solution of the problem in a heap of old oil and sugar tins, which, under his instructions, a Chinese tinker soon transformed into small cylinders, each just large enough to contain a rolled letter. This is secured by a thread; a rough paper cover bears the address, and the Imperial mail carries these little tubes as Book Post. The same tubes can be used again and again, and thus the blind men have the great pleasure of a frequent interchange of thought for a very trifling cost, and those at the School in Peking take delight in writing out any new tune or hymn, or other interesting information they have received, and despatching it to their late companions. Thus the little seeds of good are scattered far and wide by this humble instrumentality.

* See Work for the Blind in China, by C. F. Gordon Cumming. Messrs. Nisbet & Co. 1s. 6d. Or, for distribution, from Messrs. Gilbert & Rivington, 2s. per dozen. Postage 4½d. per dozen.

Personalia.

Rev. E. J. Peck has been a missionary among the Eskimo for many years. Writing of his work, the Bishop of Moosonee says:—"Hardship daunts him not; danger is his frequent companion, and his superior is not to be found in the mission field. He is always at work, and is as content to sleep in the igloe, or snow-house, surrounded by his somewhat odoriferous flock, as in his own comfortable bed at Fort George, if by that means he can speak a word for his Master, or cause an extra ray of light to shine in the hearts of those committed to his care.

The late Mr. John Rylands, of Manchester, merchant and Christian philanthropist, is described by a writer in The Sunday at Home. An incident of his early business life is told, which gives a clue to his success, and to his inflexible Christian character. In many of his journeys he found it an unwritten law to indulge in wine at the commercial table. Everyone was expected to drink and pay his share. This youth of eighteen or nineteen steadily refused. It was represented to him that he would make himself disagreeable to the rest. To all expostulation he replied, "For one thing, I cannot afford it; for another, if I muddle my brain with wine I cannot attend to business." So he went his own way, to the disgust of the others, many of whom succumbed to the loose habits of "the road," while the youth who had the courage to withstand them throve and prospered.

Count Lev Tolstoi.—The life and writings of this eminent Russian philosopher are the subject of an extremely interesting paper by Mr. Richard Heath in The Leisure Hour. Several sketches by a Russian painter show the occupations of the Count, in the life and labour which he considers the only true one. "We see him engaged in agricultural labour, harrowing and mowing, but we do not see him at his indoor occupations of making boots, or mending the shoes of peasant women who are widows." A friend of the writer of the sketch, being in his native country after years of absence, made a pilgrimage to Yasnaya Polyana. He found Tolstoi living in a room at the top of his former palace, the rest of the apartments being occupied by several peasant families. Tolstoi acted as his servant, attending to all his wants himself. Long and earnest were the conversations of these two men, both of whom had, for the sake of leading what they thought a right life, quitted the higher ranks of Russian society and made themselves one with the poorest.

Miss Von Finkelstein.—After a lengthened and most successful period of lecturing work at the Antipodes, Miss Von Finkelstein is now enjoying a brief period of rest in visiting the Holy Land. She hopes to return to the Australian colonies at the end of this month, and to commence another series of Palestine lectures there early in May. These representations of Eastern life, as illustrating Holy Writ, have met with much favour among our Australian cousins.

Mr. R. M. Ballantyne, the well-known writer of books for boys, has been interviewed at his Harrow home by a representative of The Pall Mall Gazette. We extract the following passage from the account:—"Do I advisedly give a religious tone to my books? Yes, decidedly. I hate cant, but I feel very strongly on this point. I may or may not have been very successful in my efforts in that direction, but my aim in writing from the beginning of my career (and my first book I wrote for my mother's amusement, and then never dreamed of taking it up as a profession) has been to work in the spirit of the text, 'In all thy ways acknowledge Him.' Friends and reviewers have sometimes charged me with 'overdoing religion' in my books, and being 'goody-goody.' It may be so; but I can only say I would rather err in that way than give forth an uncertain sound in the midst of a world where multitudes refuse to recognise that, whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, we are bound as well as privileged to do all to the glory of God; and I feel my responsibility as an instructor of young boys very keenly. I do not think one can be too particular how one writes for them."

The Book World.

SOME very graceful poems by C. Maude Battersby, entitled VILLAGE PICTURES, are published by Mr. E. J. Clayton, 62, Carter-lane, E.C. The themes cluster around the village church and its kindly pastor; while the stanzas themselves show a strong gift of versification and musical cadence.

HEART BREATHINGS. By Mary E. Bumstead. A small volume of poems, in its third edition. The breathings are very warm, and tell of overflowing love to Christ, and full-souled confidence in God. Rev. J. T. Wrenford, of Newport, Mon., contributes a hearty introduction. (Southport: T. Greener, 136, Lord-street.)

A third volume of Messrs. W. B. Horner & Son's excellent series of PENNY STORIES FOR THE PEOPLE has been issued (1s.) The "Stories" will be found very useful by Christian workers; Gospel truth is pleasantly interwoven with the narratives, which are all of a most interesting and thoroughly readable character, and calculated to accomplish much good.

THE DIVINE ENIGMA CONSIDERED. By an Old English Churchman. 1s. Kensit. The object of this pamphlet is to answer the question, "Who and what is the Beast of the Apocalypse?" By a number of quotations from the early Fathers, many important historical references, and several independent arguments, all briefly expressed, the author arrives at the conclusion that the Church of Rome meets all the requirements of the prophecy.

Our occasional contributor, Mr. J. Kee, of Larchhill, Donemana, Strabane, Ireland, has published a little selection of his poetical sketches. He is a genuinely gifted interpreter of the beauties and changing moods of nature, as seen in different parts of the green isle. His descriptive verse is singularly fresh and pathetic, and throughout there runs that indefinable something that proclaims the true poet. Copies of the little book, called SPRAY, can be had from Mr. Kee direct, 6d. each.

NOT CUNNINGLY-DEVISED GOSPELS. By C. Underwood. Cloth, 1s. 3d. Kensit. Happily, the genuineness and antiquity of the Gospels is not to-day made the point of infidel attack so frequently as once was the case. Nevertheless, it is well that the grounds of faith should be kept well before the Christian public. This little book is a well-meant endeavour to place within the reach of plain English readers, historical evidence of the undoubted origination of the Gospels in the Apostolic age. As, however, the author has overlooked the important testimony of the ancient manual known as "The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles," his collection of extracts from early writings is wanting in completeness.

BRANDS PLUCKED OUT OF THE FIRE. By Canon Ellison. 1s. Church of England Temperance Society's Depôt, 9, Bridge-street, Westminster. With the object of showing the need of definite efforts to rescue drunkards, and also the signal blessing which has in the past attended endeavours to this end, the author records deeply interesting cases which have come within his own knowledge of men and women of intemperate habits being quite reclaimed to respectability and Christian life. This new edition includes chapters on temperance work and female intemperance.

DAS CHECKBUCH DER GLAUBENSBANK. This is the title of Mr. Spurgeon's "Cheque Book of the Bank of Faith" in a German dress, translated by E. Spliedt, and published by D. B. Wiemann, Barmen. It is well that such an excellent manual should be accessible to German Christians, and we are glad to notice that the spiritual vigour of the original is admirably conveyed in the translation. The work is to be completed in twelve parts, eight of which are already issued. The subscription price is 30 pfennige each part, making about 3s. 6d. of English money for the entire book.

THE GOVERNMENT YEAR BOOK. Edited by Lewis Sergeant. 6s. T. Fisher Unwin. This second annual issue of a useful book shows a careful editorial hand throughout. As a comprehensive and reliable record of the actual forms and methods of Government, not only in Great Britain and her colonies, but also throughout the world, the "Year-book" stands alone. There is an introduction, on the diffusion of popular Government and on the nature and extent of international jurisdictions; a review is also added, of the chief occurrences affecting national and international Government during last year.

DAVID: HIS LIFE AND TIMES. By Rev. W. J. Deane. 2s. 6d. Nisbet. This is equally as successful a performance as the author's previous contributions to the "Men of the Bible" series. The chequered story is admirably told, due regard being paid to the inner life of the king, which the Psalms so grandly exhibit and illustrate. On doubtful points, Mr. Deane brings to bear a sound judgment, but whether or no we always follow him, or look at things from his point of view, we cannot but pronounce his work an exceedingly useful one. Written in an easy, flowing style, it is, moreover, a model of biographical beauty.

THE CRUSADE OF RICHARD I. Selected and arranged by T. A. Archer. 2s. 6d. D. Nutt. This is another volume of the "English History from Contemporary Writers" series. The extracts are from many records by Christians and Mohammedans, Englishmen and Franco-Syrians, and the reader is mentally transported to the scene of conflict, and interested as well as instructed by the babble and rumour and prejudice of rival nations and rival religions. The narrative is well presented; moreover, the notes are numerous and valuable, while the illustrations add greatly to the practical utility of the book.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF THOMAS WITTS. F. Kirby, 17, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street. Formerly of Her Majesty's 52nd Regiment Light Infantry, the author is now minister of the Strict Baptist Church meeting at 796, George-street, Sydney, N.S.W. This first of two parts deals mainly with his early life, which seems to have been to a sad degree wayward and unhappy. Mr. Witts' subsequent conversion to God and first Christian experiences are also described. The description is, however, marred by several uncharitable and unjust references to believers other than those among whom Mr. Witts now finds himself. The story is prolix, and not specially instructive.

THE FULNESS OF THE NATIONS. By Alder Smith. Hodder & Stoughton. This book claims to give "the A B C of the promises given to the House of Israel," and, what with its frequent repetitions and continual recapitulations of points and positions it is as wearisome a study as the acquirement of the alphabet itself was made to some of us. Dr. Alder Smith believes that the ten tribes of Israel are to-day to be found as a company of "Gentilised nations;" in other words, as the British people. Some of the most important questions in the argument are unhesitatingly begged, and from not a few Scripture statements altogether unjustifiable inferences are drawn. We regard the book as a good argument against the so-called "Anglo-Israel" theory, as it well shows the shifts to which one is put who tries to prove the "identity" from Holy Writ. A better understanding of the main facts of dispensational truth would certainly guard Christians from favouring this speculative notion.

THE COUNTER REFORMATION. By A. W. Ward. 2s. 6d. Longmans. An important addition to the "Epochs of Church History" series. On the outbreak of the Reformation in Germany, many of the best members of the Church of Rome exerted themselves to effect a Catholic revival, and for a considerable period great efforts were made for the recovery of the losses inflicted upon the Church by the successes of Protestantism. This "Counter Reformation" is lucidly described by Professor Ward, who brings to bear upon his task ample reading, great regard for accuracy of detail, and a critical instinct in evident sympathy with the Protestant cause. This work admirably unfolds an important chapter of ecclesiastical history.

THE BIBLICAL ILLUSTRATOR: EPHESIANS. This is another volume of the work on which Rev. J. S. Exell has for some time been diligently engaged. Seven hundred pages of close print in exposition of six brief chapters of Holy Writ is certainly abundant as to quantity. The quality of the excerpts is very variable; while some are of great value, others are distinctly inferior in point of interest and force. Similes, anecdotes, and emblems, as well as historical and scientific illustrations, collected from a wide range of reading, constitute the most useful feature of the book, which, however, would have been much more handy if reduced to half its present size by the exclusion of redundances and essentially weak quotations. Nevertheless, preachers and others will find the work very serviceable. (7s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.)

The Illustrated London News of February 9 had, as a supplement, a successful portrait of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, suitable for framing.

PEACE IN THE STORM. By J. H. Burridge. This booklet speaks reassuring words to doubting and tried Christians. (1d.) G. Morrish.

Under the title of THE TEACHER'S CROWN, Mr. E. Stock has published a stimulating address to Sabbath-school teachers, by W. J. Baxter. (2d.)

CHRIST THE GREAT SUBSTITUTE. By Rev. J. H. Wood. A plain, homely appeal to the unsaved, exhibiting vital redemptive truth in a forcible manner. (1d. E. Stock.)

HOW CAN I BE SAVED? By Heyman Wreford. This is the second edition of a searching booklet, giving personal incidents in illustration of the way of salvation. (1d. A. Holness.)

IN HIS NAME, the monthly record of the Ragged School Union, contains, in its February issue, an excellent and life-like portrait of Mr. George Holland, of George-yard, Whitechapel.

A recent number of The Graphic contained an admirable illustration, entitled, "Her Majesty inspecting the Queen Victoria, the Hospital Ship of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, in Osborne Bay."

An admirable and highly sympathetic sketch of the Salvation Army and its work, by the Hon. Mrs. Drummond, reprinted from Time, is published from the Office of the Army. (2s. 6d. per hundred.)

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, in consequence of some of his readers objecting to the title of his monthly, The Anti-Infidel, proposes to change its name with the beginning of the next volume to Faith and Reason.

DAILY TEXTS AND HELPS FOR THE YOUNG. By E. Agate. Geo. Stoneman, 67, Paternoster-row. Here are texts for a month, with reflections. The compilation is not exactly what is required for children generally.

PASTOR CHINIQUY writes from Montreal, where he is now resident:—"It has been my privilege these last twelve months, to preach the Gospel before, at least, 10,000 Roman Catholics, who with very few exceptions have listened with respect and attention. Many of them have publicly renounced their errors to follow Christ. Among these converts there are five priests. It is a public fact now that there are many priests of Rome whose faith in their Church is shaken."

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a United Y.M. and Y.W.C.A. mission at Ealing, March 3 to 17, by Mr. John Wood, of the Evangelisation Society.——For blessing on a fortnight's mission at Kilmarnock, in connection with the Ayrshire Christian Union.——For blessing on a fifteen days' misson, to be conducted in the Victoria Hall, New Brighton, by Mr. J. Butler, of the Evangelisation Society, commencing Sunday, March 3.——For much blessing on a fortnight's mission in Rev. Robert Howie's Church, Govan, conducted by Mr. John M. Scroggie, commencing March 3.——For an aged evangelist, that his health may be restored, and that he may again be able to labour for his Master.

The Late Rev. D. Anthravady.—The friends of this Burmese missionary are preparing a memoir, and appeal to all who knew him to furnish them with any letters or incidents that will aid them in this project. Letters should be sent to Rev. J. S. Aaron, Mission Press, Rangoon.

Among the Churches.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. R. Sewell, at the annual meeting of Old Meeting Church, Uxbridge, testified to a remarkable religious awakening among the young in the Sunday-school.

PRESBYTERIAN.

From the report submitted at the annual meeting of Rev. D. Fotheringham's church at Tottenham it appeared that the congregation have had a very prosperous year in every department. Branch missions at Sewardstone and Coleraine Park are centres of much good work.

Principal Rainy, of Edinburgh, will introduce Rev. John McNeill to his new congregation at Regent's-square Church on Sunday morning. On Thursday next, at the public meeting to welcome Mr. McNeill to London, the speakers are expected to include Principal Dykes, Dr. Parker, and Rev. Hugh Price Hughes.

SALVATION ARMY.

The total number of officers now in the work is 7608. The demand for trained officers as yet exceeds the supply.

New Southgate, N., has just experienced a revival. The work there has, for some time, been very hard, but now there are signs of improvement.

The Army have opened a station at Stone. A number of soldiers, from other Pottery towns, paraded the town, and large congregations gathered in the barracks.

The work in Scotland, under the command of Major Adams, is going forward. In Glasgow, and other towns, souls are being saved, and the number of soldiers is increasing.

BAPTIST.

The Baptist last week had a leading article entitled, "Heathen London's Cry to Baptists." Our contemporary would be glad to see practical shape given to Dr. Clifford's idea of a Baptist London "Mission," somewhat after the Wesleyan plan.

Thirty-eight members have been added to the church at Prickwillow, Cambs., since the commencement of Rev. A. D. Campbell's pastorate in May last, and there are a large number waiting to be received. A fortnight's special services have just been held, conducted by Revs. E. Blake (Ely). C. Gomm (Soham), and the pastor, assisted by bands of workers from Ely, Soham, and Isleham Fen, the attendance being large, and much blessing being experienced.

At the twelfth anniversary of Highgate-road Chapel (Rev. James Stephens, pastor) an encouraging report was submitted, from which it appeared that ninety-four members had been admitted during the year, making a total membership of 654. The sum of £425 had been contributed for foreign missions. Seven members of this church are labouring in the foreign field as missionaries, another is about to leave for China, and four others are in training for the same work.

METHODIST.

Rev. Thomas Champness purposes sending five more of his Joyful News evangelists abroad early in May.

The Birmingham North Wesleyan Mission, under the direction of Rev. J. G. Mantle, is succeeding beyond all expectation. "Our class-meeting difficulty," writes one of the helpers, "is not to secure the presence of the members, but to find room for those who are anxious to meet. The Coffee Palace and Artisans' Club, lately opened, are as crowded at night as the gin-palaces and beer-shops used to be."

A "Central Mission," similar to those in London, Birmingham, and Manchester, has been inaugurated in Leeds, Wesley Chapel being the headquarters. The work has begun in a quiet way, under the superintendence of Rev. Stephen Cox. The promoters are much encouraged by the start. "Old institutions are being worked with new vigour, and new work is being commenced every week. Loving toilers on the spot are working with might and main, while volunteers from all parts of the town are putting their shoulders to the wheel."

Home Mission Conventions continue to be held in various places with remarkable success. Rev. J. Earnest Clapham, speaking at York, said that within the last thirty years Methodists have increased their fabrics to an amazing extent, but their spiritual forces have not increased to a like degree. There is to-day a beggarly array of half empty seats in large chapels in some towns. In some parts of rural England Methodism has died down, if it has not died out, and in others it has died out altogether. They must and they will put an end to this state of things.

With a view to reviving an interest in religion in some of the large village congregations in the Luton (Beds.) Wesleyan Circuit, Rev. W. Waters, one of the circuit ministers, recently volunteered to spend a week in one of the largest villages, ten miles from the town, living on the spot and conducting a special mission. Accompanied by a friend, he spent every morning in going from house to house, speaking pointedly to the people on the subject of personal religion, and praying wherever he went. He held church meetings each afternoon for promoting Christian holiness, and preached every evening to large congregations. The result has been an awakening all over the village.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

In connection with Hereford Adult School, W. H. Wilson, of Cockermouth has just held ten days of special services, which have been much blessed.

The energetic and devoted workers of the Burley-road Mission, Leeds, are cheered by the presence and help of Howard Nicholson, of London. Many are asking their way to Zion.

In Metehuala, Mexico, the Friend's Mission is at work among 45,000 Roman Catholics. The opposition is fairly aroused, but the authorities protect from violence, and some of the people are hearing the Gospel.

A very successful ten days' mission has just been concluded at Highgate-street Mission, Birmingham, conducted by Sarah Bell and Marie L. Gilpin. Many found blessing. The Mission is large and flourishing.

Education has always been a strong point with Friends, and Kansas, U.S.A., feels its need in the matter. Hence the appeal for help to complete the "John Bright" University of Wichita. The trustees have 300 acres of land and a good site.

The Monthly Record of the 15th inst. gives reports from over thirty adult schools, and indicates great and varied services for the good of young people and working men and women. Vast influence for good is exercised by these democratic institutions so Christianly carried on.

NOTE FROM IRELAND.

A most interesting missionary valedictory meeting was held in Rosemary-street Presbyterian Church, Belfast, on Tuesday evening, when farewell was taken of Dr. J. A. Greig and Mrs. Greig, Rev. Wilfred W. Shaw and Mrs. Shaw, and Miss Nicholson, who are immediately starting for work in Manchuria (N.W. China).

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

The U.P. Synod's evangelistic deputies are to hold evangelistic meetings during the next four weeks in Hamilton.

The Blantyre Works Y.M.C.A. are holding a fortnight's evangelistic meetings. Addresses are given by local ministers and others.

The Hamilton Evangelistic Union held their annual meeting in the Soldiers' Institute, on February 18. The reports proved that the Union to be in a vigorous condition.

The Foreign Mission committee of the United Presbyterian Church have had to refuse many invitations to take possession of fresh districts in foreign fields. In India, China, and Kaffraria the work is extending, but more money is wanted.

Rev. S. R. Macphail, of Liverpool, last week gave two lectures at Elgin, N.B., on a recent tour in the Holy Land and Syria. Mr. Macphail left the Free High Church, Elgin, eleven years ago, but the fruits of his ministry during the nine years he was there are not few. His present visit of eight days' has been a time of great refreshing to all. Mr. Macphail has not lost any of his enthusiasm; his addresses on the present occasion were characterised by careful thought, and delivered with great power.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. Wm. Ward, of Sheffield, for over fifty years a minister of the Primitive Methodist Connexion.—Rev. Bartholomew Edwards, the oldest clergyman in England, for over seventy-five years rector of Ashill, Norfolk, who was within ten days of completing his one hundredth year.—Mr. Wm. McCarter, of Derry and Castlerock, a devoted elder of the Irish Presbyterian Church.—Rev. Arch. McGillivray, minister of the Free Church, Fearn, Ross-shire. Miss Maggie MacKee, one of the hundred missionaries who went out to China during 1887, under the auspices of the China Inland Mission.—Mr. Edward J. Baxter, J.P., of Newcastle-under-Lyme, formerly a Methodist New Connexion minister.—Rev. Alex. Montgomery, Presbyterian minister, Magherafelt, Ireland.—Rev. J. E. Dalton, for over thirty-six years rector of Seagrave, Leicestershire.—Rev. James Prophit, parish minister of St. Mungo, Dumfriesshire.

RYDE Y.W.C.A. AND SEASIDE HOME.—The tenth annual report of this Association and Home is an encouraging one. The earnest desire of the committee is to be of service to young women, in trying to save them from evil companions by providing them with a pleasant and comfortable retreat when the hours of business are over. There are Bible and educational classes, also lectures on cookery, temperance, and other subjects. A debt of £400 upon Garfield House is an incubus, of which the committee would be glad to be rid. Mrs. J. T. O. Johnston, Caithness House, Ryde, is the honorary secretary of the Association.

TASMANIA.—A valued correspondent, Mrs. Fagg, writes from Newtown, Hobart, describing efforts among the poor, the infirm, and the criminal. In some districts of the colony the Gospel is seldom heard, and suitable tracts and papers are very welcome for circulation by Christian workers. The following extract from the letter shows a sad state of affairs:—"Some young men came out from England and 'took up' a piece of land on a peninsula. For more than a year they have had no service—nothing to mark the Sunday from other days. They live in a hut, obtaining provisions from such steamers as happen to call."

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The Liverpool Sailors' Home and coffee-taverns are reducing the value of licensed houses.

The Liverpool Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children last year dealt with the cases of 1381 children, mostly due to drink.

"Brands Plucked out of the Fire" is the title of a shilling book by Canon Ellison, and contains accounts of remarkable cases of rescue during his fifteen years of Church temperance work in the parish of New Windsor.

We regret to hear of the death of Rev. A. G. Marment, so long and so honourably known as an earnest temperance worker. Newcastle-on-Tyne was his last official sphere, his valuable police-court rescue work there being suddenly cut-short by a serious accident.

The Mayor of Birmingham has protested against the want of thought on the part of people who give intoxicating drink to policemen. It appears that in Birmingham the other day there were under the consideration of the Town Council no less than seven cases of intoxication on the part of policemen.

Mrs. Eynon, of the B.W.T.A., Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, lately addressed a meeting of ladies at Rochester, urging that Christian women ought to do more aggressive work on the lines of total abstinence in sight of the terrible havoc drink is making in homes and churches. At Margate and Ramsgate, at drawing-room meetings, Mrs. Servante, of London, and Mrs. Eynon advocated the Master's claims upon his servants to deny themselves for his sake.

FOREIGN.

The temperance societies at Malta, under the auspices of the National Temperance League, are reported flourishing.

A resolution prohibiting the manufacture and sale of liquors was thrown out by the Canadian House of Commons on Friday last, by 99 votes against 59.

The Y.M.C.A. at Cookstown has passed a strong resolution deploring the prevalent use of ether in that neighbourhood, and calling on the Government to pass some measure for restricting the sale of this pernicious drug.

Mr. Matthew Burnett's second year's Gospel temperance work in New South Wales has resulted in 12 250 signing the pledge, and over 16,000 donning the blue ribbon. Amongst the converts all classes are represented.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

NORWAY.—The Friends of Missions Society have divided Norway into eight districts, comprising some 900 auxiliaries and 3000 ladies' work meetings. The Society supports important operations in South Africa and Madagascar.

AT VERDUN the Freethinkers assembled in force to hear M. Eugène Réveilhaud (who has made a tour in the department of Meuse) lecture on "Science and Faith." The preacher's logic was irresistible, and the enraged Freethinkers consequently resorted to interruption.

THE BLUE CROSS TEMPERANCE SOCIETY, founded at Geneva in 1877, numbers to-day 5000 members, all total abstainers. Of these, 1500 were formerly addicted to intemperance. The Paris branch of the Society is about three years old, and of the hundred members several were formerly drinkers.

FRENCH RECOIL AGAINST ROMANISM is showing itself in many ways. One of the latest manifestations of this spirit is the determination of the Municipal Council of Rochelle to name a projected new thoroughfare, "Avenue de Coligny," after the well-known Huguenot who fell in the massacre of St. Bartholomew's Eve.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY OF FRANCE last year distributed 24,280 copies of Holy Scripture, being a slight advance upon the operations of the previous twelve months. The present year began with an adverse balance of 6000 francs, and the Society calls upon churches to whom it makes grants not to overlook their obligations.

THE LORD'S DAY IN BERLIN.—Under new regulations, the soldiers in Berlin have every facility for attending Divine service on Sundays. Another pleasing reform is the suppression of race meetings, which have long broken the public rest, and the interdiction of political gatherings on the Lord's Day. It is to be hoped that the good example thus set in Berlin will be imitated through the Empire. Der Wahrheitzeuge says: "It is no secret that these new regulations are the result of the Emperor having used his personal influence."

FRANCE.—That the "broad" section of the Reformed Church of France does not represent present-day Protestant sentiment in the country was made abundantly clear on Sunday, Feb. 10, when the Presbyterial elections took place. The chief interest centred in Paris, where for some years the so-called "Liberals," who do not insist upon a doctrinal basis, have been in the majority, and exercising an influence which threatened to sap the life of the Church. The contest ended in a decisive victory for the "orthodox" candidates, who maintained the right of the Church to control the pastors by holding them to evangelical principles. Of twenty-five members elected on the councils in Paris all but one are evangelicals. The result has caused much joy among the spiritually minded Protestants of the Republic.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded by Rev. Thomas Robinson, Vicar of [illegible], Hyde End-road, London, E., of whom card of members may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the Union, and take its Monthly Notes, which are [illegible] from these.

SUNDAY, MARCH 3.—Genesis XLVI.

After the resolve with which the last chapter closes, the patriarch seems to have been overtaken by sudden qualms as to his duty, especially remembering the disastrous consequences of Abraham's and Jacob's going down into Egypt; and therefore he went to Beersheba, by special sacrifices to obtain the distinct guidance of God. How necessary that we should always act on Prov. iii. 5. We cannot wait on God in vain. He will assuredly speak to us and guide us (2). So Acts xvi. 9.

How eminently comforting was the Divine assurance (3).—When we know, after patient waiting, that we are on God's plan, we need not fear. The Bible is full of Fear nots (Isa. xli. 10). When God goes down with us into Egypt, we have no need for alarm. The promise that he should come up again (4) doubtless refers to the nation of which he was head; it was not to be absorbed into Egypt. And it was sweet to the old man to know that his favourite son would close in death those eyes which had become dim through many tears.

The journey to Egypt.—The number is given at seventy (27). Stephen speaks of it as seventy-five (Acts vii. 14), because he adds the children of Ephraim and Manasseh. How slow is the advance the fulfilment of God's promises: 250 years had passed since xii. 2, and now only a handful of souls, but soon the little one was to become a thousand. God keeps a record of his pilgrims.

The meeting (29).—What a contrast to the bitter wail of xlii. 36 (compare Rom. viii. 29). There seemed an anticipation of Luke ii. 29. But he was not to die yet; several happy years still awaited him. What will it not be to see the face of Jesus, and be for ever with Him, as secure under his care, as Jacob under Joseph's. The hatred of the Egyptians to a pastoral people arose from the bitter results of the invasion of the shepherd-kings, whose intrusion on Egypt is a matter of history But see Isa. liv. 17.

MONDAY, MARCH 4.—Genesis XLVII.

Joseph was not ashamed of his kin, though they were shepherds, and his father was old, decrepit, and lame. Would that all young people were equally mindful of those who expended so much care on their early years (Eph. vi. 2). Nor should any of us be ashamed of our Elder Brother, who is not ashamed of us (Heb. ii. 11 and Mark viii. 38).

Jacob's presentation to Pharaoh (7).—His confession recalls Heb. xi. 13. Few—Terah, 205; Abraham, 175; Isaac, 180; but Jacob only 130 at this time. Evil—what a contrast to Esau's splendid successes. Some might even pronounce his life a failure. Yet he blessed Pharaoh. "Without controversy the less is blessed by the greater." Jacob was greater than the greatest monarch of his time. He was a royal man, with a Divine patent of royalty, "A prince with God" (xxxii. 28). These things made him royal, as they will make us. Prayer, suffering, contact with the angel.

Joseph's administration of Egypt (14).—One-fifth of the entire produce was hoarded in the vast granaries, and when the years of famine came, he sold, first for money, and then for lands and cattle, so that, by a masterstroke of policy, the Egyptians became tenant-farmers of the crown. He was diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord (Rom. xii. 11). His one thought was that God had made him ruler (xlv. 8). Do your daily work, remembering that God has put you just where you are. Therein abide with Him (1 Cor. vii. 24). Our Joseph can not only keep his church, but also feed the dying world.

An old man's faith (30).—He had spent seventeen years in Egypt, but his heart was away in the land of promise. He knew that his people should go thither again, and there he longed to lie, that he might be amongst them when the promises were fulfilled (Gen. xv. 15).

TUESDAY, MARCH 5.—Genesis XLVIII.

The summons of the dying man brought Joseph speedily to his side, and the sound of the loved voice revived him. With wonderful accuracy he began to review the past. He dwelt especially on the weakest point of the celestial ladder, and words of promise (3, 4). Though one hundred years may have passed since he heard those words, they were as fresh as ever. Then he adopted the two lads of Joseph as his own (5). Then his mind wandered to that scene just outside Bethlehem, where he had parted from the beloved Rachel, whom he was soon to meet again (7). But from that reverie the sight of those young faces called him back (8). And he blessed them.

The names for God (15, 16). "the God of Abraham and Isaac."—Let us so live that one bond between our children and God may be that He was our God, before whom we walked. "Which fed," i.e., shepherded. It was natural to a shepherd to attribute to God the same qualities of shepherdly care as he was wont to exercise (xlix. 24). Here is the first trace of the Shepherd-Psalm. "The Angel which redeemed me." He ever accompanies us still. No evil touches us. What seems evil is good in disguise (Ps. xxxiv. 22).

The distinguishing between the two lads (14).—There was nothing arbitrary in this. Certain qualities in Ephraim demanded that he should be in the first place. God is no respecter of persons, and will lift even the youngest to the front rank if there are elements in the character which he approves (1 Sam. xvi).

Once more the old man's faith flames up (21).—Our dearest die, but God is with us for ever (Heb. xiii. 7). And in full assurance Jacob anticipated the apportioning of the land, and appropriated one extra portion to Joseph. There Joseph was afterwards buried (Joshua xxiv. 32, and John iv. 5).

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 6.—Genesis XLIX.

A third time did Joseph stand beside his father's dying bed, alongside of his brethren; twelve strong, bearded men. How intense the awe as they heard their names called one by one, and listened to that trembling voice reading their destiny from the pages of the future. And let us always remember that destiny is made of character. This scene is an anticipation of the Judgment-Throne, where all secret things shall be exposed, and the irrevocable doom pronounced.

Reuben sacrificed a proud position and splendid abilities for one act of sin. Instability of character leads to sensual indulgence.

The curse on Simeon and Levi was changed in the case of Levi into a great blessing, in consideration of Exod. xxxii. 26. They were scattered, but they became the priests of the Lord, and their inheritance was in Him.

Judah became the royal tribe, of which the Lion was to come (Rev. v. 5, and Heb. vii. 14). Shiloh is Peace-giver, or the Giver of Rest. He who says, I will give rest, and ye shall find rest (Heb. iv.).

The position of Zebulun and the following tribes in the land of promise is accurately foretold. Compare the allotments of Joshua xviii. Notice the exclamation of the dying man in ver. 18. Such waiting cannot be disappointed (Isa. xxvi. 8, 9).

Joseph's blessing is pre-eminently beautiful. Fruitful. This is mentioned twice (John xv. 3). But fruitfulness is only possible where there is the wall of separation, and the well of communion. When these are present, the branches droop over the wall with clusters of blessing to a thirsty world. Let us seek Divine strength, and that the mighty hands of God may be placed upon our own poor, weak hands (Ps. cxliv. 1). When once we are separate, we enjoy blessings beyond count (26, and 2 Cor. vi. 16). Then, with another charge about his burial in Machpelah, the weary pilgrim was gathered to his people, went over to the other side, and saw again Rachel, and Leah, and Isaac, and Rebekah; the great host gathering through the ages (Heb. xi. 40).

THURSDAY, MARCH 7.—Genesis L.

The days of mourning for Jacob were only two less in number than for a king; 300 miles were traversed by that splendid funeral cortege. Not only the family of Israel, but the magnates of Egypt, went also. The words, beyond Jordan (10), indicate that this book was finished on the further side of Jordan, where afterwards Moses died (Num. xxxii. 32). When God wills to do honour to any servant of his, He can bring it about in the most remarkable way, being quite independent of human methods and reasonings.

Joseph's brethren seem to have felt as if they could not believe that they were really forgiven. Their deep sense of sin made them mistrustful. Have not we all been afflicted thus? "Can such sinners as we are hope for mercy"? At such times let us not look in on ourselves, but at once seek the presence of Jesus, who will graciously reassure us, and speak comfortably to us (21). Give God credit for his perfect forgiveness, when once He forgives; it is needless and mistrustful to go to Him again about the same sin.

Joseph's old age came at last. Ninety three years had passed since lifted from the pit; eighty since he had first stood before Pharaoh; sixty since he had buried his father. He saw the faces of his great-grandchildren (23). There was realised Ps. xci. 16. Again the old promise was quoted (xv. 16). And he commanded that his bones should be unburied, so that at any moment, however hurried, when the trumpet of Exodus sounded, they might be ready to be caught up, and borne onward in the glad march for Canaan (Heb. xi. 22). This coffin in Egypt (26) to the eye of sense seems the end of all; to the eye of faith the pledge of the Exodus.

FRIDAY, MARCH 8. Exodus I.*

When Joseph was dead, the people multiplied, and were fiercely persecuted. There is an analogy here to the multiplication and persecution of the early church, after the death of the Lord Jesus (John xii. 24).

The new king.—There was probably a new dynasty desiring to prevent the recurrence of shepherd domination. "Let us deal wisely" (Ps. ii. 2). However great are the services rendered to men, they are soon forgotten. The only thing which can give lasting satisfaction is the Divine "Well done."

The first policy was to make their lives bitter with bondage (Dan. vii. 25). A picture has been discovered on the walls of an Egyptian tomb, in which men, with a Hebrew cast of face, are evidently being compelled to make bricks by Egyptian taskmasters, who stand by armed with sticks. It is possible even that some of the pyramids were built by the enforced toil of the much-suffering Hebrews. But this failed (12).

The second stroke of policy was to begin with the children. Pharaoh and Herod set us an example in turning their attention to young life. Save or destroy the children, and you affect for good or evil the whole destiny of a people. But this policy also failed (20). Days of sorrow and anguish have always been growing days for churches and individuals. Let persecution and trouble come, we wax very mighty (Rom. viii. 31).

The heroism of these two women (17).—On the one hand, was the royal edict; on the other, the Divine fear. It may be that they were not Hebrews by birth, but Egyptians who did office for the Hebrew women, and had learnt to fear God. If so, their conduct was more remarkable. But all such action, however obscure and ignorant the doer, is noticed and rewarded by God (20, 21). He is never in debt for any kindness done to Himself or his people; and He gave them a name and place in Israel.

SATURDAY, MARCH 9.—Exodus II.

When matters have reached their worst in respect to God's people, He is preparing a deliverer. So it was in Egypt. Moses was more than ordinarily beautiful; he was exceeding fair (Acts vii. 20). His parents hid him by faith (Heb. xi. 23). Perhaps they had received some special revelation of his great future, on the strength of which they dared to disobey the royal command. And in the same faith they launched him in the ark, not on the Nile only, but on the Providence of God. Miriam stood there to watch. Surely this is the true attitude of faith. There was no fear of consequences, from crocodile or royal executioners; but a simple desire to see what God would do. And He inclined the daughter of their greatest foe to preserve the life, which was to inflict the direst blow on the national life. How little do men realise that they are working out God's plans, when they seem most free to do their worst (Ps. lxxvi. 10, and Acts ii. 23).

We know little of Moses' education, except what Stephen says (Acts vii. 22). Josephus speaks of him as being a great soldier, and filling important offices in the state. But the memory of what his mother had taught him concerning the hope of his people never deserted him, and he made a choice which decided his whole career (Heb. xi. 24, &c.).

His first attempt to emancipate his people ended in failure, because it was originated and carried out in the impetuosity of the flesh. "It came into his heart." "He supposed" (Acts vii. 23—25). He thought that a few blows of his might would do it. But this was not God's method (1 Cor. i. 26). And he must be taken to the back side of the desert, in order to be drained of all creature self-sufficiency, so that, he who seemed so stalwart and mighty, became as it were a little child in his own sense of helplessness, though even in his long and weary education. God alleviated the hardships of his lot, by finding him a home and love (Ps. lxviii. 6).

* As our next issue will appear on March 8, the day upon which the book of Exodus will be commenced, we shall reserve the introduction to that book until that date.

Meanwhile the anguish of the people increased. It became almost unbearable, and expressed itself in three different forms. They sighed, and cried, and groaned. And God regarded them. God heard; God remembered; God looked; God knew. Oh weary sufferers, not one sigh is wasted on the air; all enters into the heart of God, and He will arise to save.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, March 10.

THE CHILDLIKE SPIRIT.

Mark ix. 33—45. Golden Text: x. 15.

During the journey from the district of Cæsarea Philippi towards Capernaum, the incidents recorded in Matt. xvii. 22—27 transpired. As bearing particularly upon this lesson, note the prediction of the cross repeated in ver. 22, 23. In a house—perhaps Peter's—in the city of Capernaum, the incidents of this lesson took place. See parallel passages, Matt. xviii. 1—7; Luke ix. 46—50. The lesson instructs us concerning Humility (33—37); False Zeal (38—41), and Occasions of Stumbling (42—45).

Humility.—The disciples had held an unworthy dispute during their recent journey (33, 34). "Who should be greatest"?—Among the incidents which may have led to such a dispute may be mentioned particularly the commendation of Peter after his confession (Matt. xvi. 17—19): and the choice of three only to be with the Lord on the Mount (Matt. ix. 2). But such a question, at such a time shows "how little the Saviour's repeated prediction of his sufferings had yet taken root in the mind of his disciples. In their thoughts they had already distributed crowns, while the Master had the cross in his eye."—Lange.

"They held their peace" (34).—They were ashamed even to mention in the presence of Jesus that which they had eagerly disputed by the way. Their silence was an acknowledgment of their sin. For all our conversation an excellent rule would be, only to say what we are not ashamed for Jesus to hear. The spirit of pride and ambition which had led to the dispute was the direct opposite of the spirit of Christ.

The Saviour's answer is given solemnly: "Sat down, and called the twelve" (35).—They were already subdued and ashamed, and were now to hear what would further rebuke their pride. "If any man desire to be first," &c.—The phrase may be understood in two ways, either as declaring the penal result of ambition, or as announcing the condition of true greatness. Lange says the clause "includes two rules: Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased: whosoever humbleth himself shall be exalted." For the disciple, as for his Lord, humility is true greatness (Matt. xx. 28, 29; Phil. ii. 5—11): while an unworthy ambition to be great is followed by humiliation.

The truth is enforced by an object-lesson. "He took a child" (36). Note Mark's graphic description, "in the midst," then "in his arms." Does not this last touch reveal our Lord's love for children? "Whosoever shall receive," &c. (37).—The connection, and Matt. xviii. 4, suggest that the feature of childhood which is emphasised is humility, the absence of which appeared in the disciples. "By this humility, the child's understanding was yet free from vain imagination, the child's heart from rivalry, the child's will from stubbornness."—Lange. The spirit that would receive children was not common (Matt. xxi. 15, 16; xix. 13); but they who are childlike will receive them (Matt. xviii. 4, 5); and at the same time will receive Jesus and the Father. The children to whom our Lord refers are not simply believers who are childlike—nor persons of any age just born into the kingdom—but, literally, children who believe (42). Jesus nowhere even hints at the idea that children must become men before they trust in Him. Happily the Church is learning to recognise and to receive young Christians.

False Zeal (38—41).—"John answered."—"Through the words of Jesus just spoken, John's mind got a gleam of light, and his conscience smote him."—Morison. His recent manifestation of zeal had not been in character with what he had just heard. Hence "he answered." "We saw one," &c. (38).—We know little about this man. Probably, almost certainly, he was a true believer in Jesus; he made use of the name of Jesus for casting out demons, with no such result as followed to the sons of Sceva (Acts xix. 13—16); but he was not among the disciples themselves. This last was in John's view a reason for rebuking him. Note his word: "He followeth not with us"—not with Thee. There is the beginning of the party spirit, leading to exclusiveness and intolerance. His zeal was not according to knowledge. "Forbid him not" (39).—The disciples would not receive him; but Jesus would. Even if there was much in the man that was faulty and imperfect, yet the smoking flax must not be quenched, and the good work he was doing in Christ's name must not cease. Note the three reasons given in the next three clauses, each beginning with "for." "No man which shall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly speak evil of Me" (39). Assuming, therefore, that he is only a beginner in the service and faith of Christ, and that there are still many things needing correction, yet don't restrain his zeal. Let faith, in every young Christian, act and move according to the measure of its development."—Lange. We make John's mistake when we fail to recognise and encourage even the imperfect service of the new disciple.

"For he that is not against us is for us" (40).—Contrast this with Matt. xii. 30. Both state the same thing, but in opposite ways. Neutrality in relation to Christ is impossible. Morison well says, "When we are judging ourselves we should apply the law, as in Matt. xii. 30; but when we are judging others the law as here."

"For whosoever shall give a cup of water," &c. (41).—This is a third reason. Not only is the man who casts out demons in the name of Jesus not against you; but even the man who gives a cup of cold water in my name. Do not restrain either one or the other. The friendly feeling which prompts even the smallest gift to disciples of Christ as such may increase, until, from receiving the disciples of Christ, they pass on to receive Christ Himself. Is not this one form in which they obtain their "reward"?

Occasions of stumbling (42—45).—"Whosoever shall offend," scandalise, or cause to stumble. "One of these little ones that believe."—How clearly the Saviour took for granted that little ones such as that on his knee would be among the believers. The spirit of pride which has just been rebuked is, of all things, most likely to cause them to stumble. How serious the sin! Judge by what follows. "A millstone"—not the small hand-mill, but the great millstone which required an ass to work it. To be cast into the sea with such a weight round the neck is awful: but even that is better than the consequences of stumbling these little ones!

"Thy hand" (43); "Thy foot" (45).—These may be causes of stumbling to ourselves. Shall we allow them to keep us out of life? Better lose what is as dear to us as these members than lose life. The doom of those who allow anything to stumble them is described in awful words. They are too solemn to need exposition. To add to their force is impossible: to weaken by attempting to explain them is unwise.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

A few days before the massacre of St. Bartholomew's day, a soldier was taken ill while on guard, and besought a number of ladies passing at the time to get him a little water, as he dared not fetch it himself. A young English woman only heeded the request, and on the day of the massacre God rewarded her act of kindness by saving her life, through the efforts of the soldier whom she had relieved.

Archbishop Cranmer, after he had signed a disavowal of the Protestant faith, and had retracted his error, was led to the stake, and stretched forth his right hand, holding it in the flames till it was entirely consumed, and exclaiming several times, "This hand has offended! This unworthy hand!"

MR. E. C. NEWBERY, writing from Bordighera, Italy, says:—In January I opened a new Gospel hall, built by my landlord. There were some 120 persons present, and a young woman who was saved at San Remo in December, delivered a marvellous testimony. The new hall at San Remo is far too small. We are urged to go and open meetings in four other towns, but so far the way does not seem quite clear. God is drawing souls to Himself through Jesus being exalted, and we are now praying for workers of his own choosing and training, and likewise for aid to finish and furnish our halls.

BROTHERHOOD.

"A brother is born for adversity."—Prov. xvii. 17.

"I would the joy which cheers my life
Might haply light on thine;
I would the clouds athwart thy sky
Might spend themselves on mine.
The added grief no pain would be,
Nor were it loss to lose for thee."

So pleads the heart, and nobly pleads—
The heart both true and tried—
When self is buried 'neath the rush
Of love's uprising tide.
All aching for another's woe,
It sighs, "Ah, let me feel the blow."

Yet vain the sigh. So weak, so poor,
Is human love at best,
We cannot intercept the storm;
And, though we bare our breast,
The arrow may not miss its mark;
The sword, it strikes not in the dark.

Alas, alas, for human love!
How powerless and how frail!
Yet there is One to interpose
Whose love shall aye prevail.
O'er Him the waves and billows went,
On Him the sword its fury spent.

Our sin, our shame, He freely bore,
The Man of Sorrows, He.
We hail Him Brother evermore,
"Born for adversity."
Where cleft the spear his holy side,
Our daily care and grief may hide.

"OH, MY FATHER."—The poem under this title, suggested by the story with the same heading by Lady Hope—both of which appeared in The Christian—may be obtained (50 copies for 7d., post paid) from the author, Miss L. L. McL. Backler, Norland, Champion-park, Denmark-hill, London, S.E.

AMONG EAST-END JEWS.—Mr. Israel Isaiah Aschkenasi continues his labours among the Jews of the East-end. By the kindness of a number of friends, he has been able to assist the poor, while instructing the ignorant and preaching Christ to all who will hear. The premises 160, Brick-lane, Spitalfields, are resorted to on Saturday afternoons by men, women, and children, to whom the Gospel is proclaimed in their own tongue. The young are looked after, house visitation is carried on, and Mrs. Aschkenasi interests herself in the Jewesses, who highly appreciate her kindness. Mr. Aschkenasi's address is 52, Alconbury-road, Clapton, E.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.—A Conference of Workers among Seamen is proposed to be held at the Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Home, London, on April 20, 21, and 22. All friends interested in such work are desired to send their names and addresses to "The Secretary" of the Institution as early as possible, that it may be seen how far the suggestion meets with approval. Board (and lodging for a limited number) would be provided for delegates at very reasonable rates. Hints as to employing the time of the Conference to the best advantage will be thankfully received by Mr. and Mrs. Hedenström Welin, Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Home, West India Docks, London, E.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.—The influence of the Evangelical Alliance, in regard to cases of religious intolerance, is generally acknowledged; and it is gratifying to learn that God continues to give his blessing to the efforts of the Society in this direction. A striking illustration of this fact is furnished by a communication from the Constantinople branch of the Alliance, which appears in the March number of Evangelical Christendom. An Armenian merchant at Alacham, in Turkey, who had embraced Christianity, has suffered considerable persecution and imprisonment during the past year. Representations were made by the Alliance, on his behalf, to the Turkish Government; and the kindly offices of the British Government were also secured. The result has been that Nicolaki Effendi, the Protestant merchant, has been released, and allowed to return to his home.

The Shivering & Suffering Poor

Sympathising friends are heartily thanked for contributions toward giving Food, Coals, and Clothing to the Poor of a very poor London parish. For each 10s. forwarded, 15 adults or 20 children can be provided—by a local Committee—with a substantial meal.—A. ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY 20,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual severity. Hundreds of poor men have been gathered in, and their need supplied, while scores have been turned away, for want of room, in the most destitute condition.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; or Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by the EDITORS of "THE CHRISTIAN."

DONATIONS RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1888.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

Davies, 77, High-street, Kingsland, N.; Miss Collings, Florence Cottage, Bridge-road, Redhill, Surrey.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

The Farm House, Little Oddyn, Horsted Theyne, Sussex.—Miss Harriet Mason appeals for funds for her Home of Rest for business women. During the three years it has been open over two hundred have been received.

Plumstead Cage-lane Mission.—Building operations to enlarge the hall are quite at a standstill for want of funds. Extended accommodation is sadly needed, as it is not possible to seat the large numbers of persons who attend. There is a school of over 850 children. Poverty is also acutely felt in the district, and cast off clothes, as well as other assistance, will be gladly received by Miss Russell, 1, Thames View-terrace, Plumstead.

WORKS BY F. B. MEYER, B.A.

ELIJAH:

And THE SECRET OF HIS POWER.

Sixth Thousand. Nine Original Illustrations. Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

From The Rock:—

"The lessons to be learnt from the life of this prophet are well drawn out and emphasised in the pages before us. . . . Mr. Meyer's language is clear, forcible, descriptive, and interesting; his doctrine is always pure and elevating."

From The Presbyterian Messenger:—

"This is a most stimulating book. It sparkles with heavenly light, and glows with heavenly fire from beginning to end. We honestly and heartily recommend it."

ISRAEL:

A PRINCE WITH GOD.

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

With full-page Illustrations of the River Jordan and Jacob's Well. Sixth Thousand. Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled bds., gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

From The Baptist Messenger:—

"We have had considerable pleasure in reading this book on the life of Jacob. Mr. Meyer has great descriptive power. He can tell a narrative well. The subject in his hand glows with life; and the scenes and events in the history of his hero pass vividly before you, and are ever being used to force home on the readers some great and important principle. The volume is prettily got up, well bound, and embellished with frontispiece and illustrations."

ABRAHAM:

Or, THE OBEDIENCE OF FAITH.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

With Nine Illustrations Specially Engraved for this Work.

"This book is beautifully illustrated, and so tastefully bound as to be a most acceptable gift book. But the contents are such that no Christian can rise from its perusal without feeling consciously strengthened in God and inspired afresh for the godly life. Our teachers may learn from it how to draw out the spiritual lessons of the sacred Word."—Gospel Magazine.

"We have walked through 'Percival's Picture Gallery' with great pleasure, admiring the chaste productions of a rich fancy, and the skilful interweaving of the moral with the picturesque. We would recommend our readers to follow our example."—Footsteps of Truth.

"Percival is a bright, gifted, true-hearted young artist. His 'Picture Gallery' consists of representations of Scripture incidents from the Old and New Testaments, which are here delightfully narrated, and no less clearly expounded. For the young the volume will prove deeply interesting and instructive."

THE GOLDEN TREASURY BIRTHDAY BOOK.

With Beautifully Illuminated Frontispiece.

Presentation Editions: Morocco, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.; rich coloured leather, padded, gilt edges, 4s. 6d.

In this country very few books, except the "Pilgrim's Progress," have been so largely circulated or so widely read as Bogatzky's "Golden Treasury." In addition to the issue of Bogatzky in the ordinary form, the Publishers have also produced an Edition, Arranged as a Birthday Book, a form in which it is believed the volume will be welcomed by many. In this "Birthday" Edition four additional pages are introduced at the close of each month's portions. These extra pages are arranged with thirty or thirty-one blank square spaces—one for every day of the month. Each of these squares is adapted for receiving four entries; consequently, the total number of names which can be inscribed in the special pages of the "Birthday" Edition amounts to over fifteen hundred.

Cheap Edition: Cloth, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

MORGAN & SCOTT'S COMPLETE EDITION.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Early Christian and Protestant Martyrs in all Parts of the World. With Frontispiece Engraved on Steel, and Twelve Full-page Illustrations.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 12s. 6d.

"This is a new edition of Foxe's useful and standard work. It is a most masterly exposure of what Popery really is, and what it can do when it has the upper hand. The perusal of this book should form part of the education of our youth. Heads of families should purchase it for their children to read. Popery could find no place where 'Foxe's Martyrs' is studied.—Christian Progress.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN"

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CHRONIC HŒMOPTYSIS, with INCIPIENT PHTHISIS.—CASE of Mr. A. G. JERRAM, of SOUTHAMPTON.

For some months this patient had suffered with profuse expectoration, spitting of blood, and severe night sweats, and was reduced to so weak a state that (he says): "I could not walk a hundred yards without great fatigue, and I was reduced to a skeleton."

Before this his doctor had told him that his only chance was to go abroad, and it was the only chance of saving his life.

The patient persevered with my medicine for six months, with cod liver oil as an auxiliary (I generally approve this when the quality of the oil is unexceptionable, and it is found to digest—see my book). The result was that he recovered; and this is what he says, writing last month (January 10):—

"Every one in our village thought I was not going to last long, but thanks to your medicine I am quite well and strong as I ever was in my life. I can walk from Shirley to Southampton and back, a distance of six miles, twice a day. I shall be pleased to answer any enquiries from any sufferer on their sending a stamped envelope.—A. G. JERRAM, 11, HIGH-STREET, SHIRLEY, near Southampton."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

"A SURPRISE GIFT."

DEAR FRIENDS,—

With much joy I received a few days ago a draft for £108 15s. given voluntarily by our boys in Canada out of their earnings, as "a surprise gift" to me to help out this year's party. Besides this collective amount I have received several instalments from individual boys towards the repayment of their emigration expenses. I am sure you will agree with me that this is a most gratifying proof, not only of their prosperity, but of the spirit of honour and gratitude that prevails amongst them.

We are now very busy preparing our band to start (D.V.) on March 21, per s.s. Vancouver. For this effort we need £1000 during the next few weeks in addition to our ordinary current expenses; by means of it we shall put 100 precious young lives far away from many evil associations, with much brighter prospects in life than they could ever have had in this congested metropolis. Not only so, but we shall create 100 vacancies in our Homes to gather in others needing similar training and the same happy start in life by and by.

It will be a great encouragement, I know, to our dear boys across the sea, if I am able to tell them that their grateful remembrance of their Old Home touched hearts in the Old Country, and that their challenge met with a hearty response, and enabled me to give the 1889 boys "a comfortable send-off."

Yours faithfully,

I. W. C. Fegan

CHEQUES AND POSTAL ORDERS SHOULD BE CROSSED "LONDON & COUNTY BANK (SOUTHWARK BRANCH)."

IRISH SOCIETY,

For the Scriptural Education of the Irish-speaking Population, chiefly through the medium of their own language.

ESTABLISHED 1818.

On the 1st of January this year the DEFICIT (including debt to bankers) WAS £1,500. As the Society's Work of Scriptural Education is carried on, mainly, by periodical examinations and payments, its progress generally is impaired, and partially imperilled, by the existing financial pressure.

An earnest appeal is now made to all Christians to give according to their ability. It may be, that some who have been largely blessed with means, will give generously in this crisis, so that the above special sum may be raised before the end of March, and thus a New Financial Year open for the Society without this great hindrance to the freer course of God's Most Holy Word.

Contributions will be received in England, by National Provincial Bank, 212, Piccadilly, London; Messrs. Nisbet & Co., Berners Street, London, W.; Rev. T. Keane, or Rev. R. Mease, Irish Society, 32, Sackville-street, London, W. In Ireland, by Rev. W. Fitzpatrick, 17, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin.

Paris City Mission.

President: LORD KINNAIRD.
Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, Esq.

This Mission was formed in Paris during the time of the last Exhibition there, and it has proved a great and permanent blessing.

Its model is the London City Mission, both in constitution and action.

Sixteen leading Pastors, Ministers, and Laymen form its Committee, including Pastor Theodore Monod, Rev. F. Howard Gill, and Rev. R. W. McAll.

Eight devout and earnest Missionaries—seven French and one English—now carry a knowledge of the glorious Gospel to the poor of Paris; teaching from room to room and in public places, defending and circulating the Holy Scripture. So pressing is the

NEED FOR MORE EVANGELISTS

that the small and overpressed French Churches will contribute a third, and in some cases half, the support of new Agents.

The International Exhibition of this year opens an effective door for evangelising Paris and France.

Contributions are earnestly needed to sustain and increase this testimony of Jesus.

Statements about the Society will be sent free by the Hon. Secretary for England, J. M. Weylland, 31, Carlton Hill, St. John's Wood, N.W., who will gladly receive Contributions.

Bankers: BARCLAY, BEVAN, RANSOM & CO., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Ald. Sir R. N. Fowler, Bart., M.P.
J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman.
Clarence Smith, Esq., J.P., Hon. Secretary.

For 103 years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 240 Christian men and women.

Funds are urgently needed.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.

Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

EAST END DISTRESS. — Rev. Thomas Jackson, 41, Powerscroft-road, Clapton, London, E., appeals for assistance for destitute families. Children's Free Dinners, and Soup Kitchen Fund in urgent need of funds. Gifts of money, food, or clothing promptly acknowledged, and exclusively appropriated to the relief of destitution.

BETHNAL GREEN GOSPEL AND TEMPERANCE MISSION.—The Committee urgently appeal for funds for the following objects:—(1) To provide special help for the starving poor, thousands of whom are always living on the verge of starvation, and are at this season of the year in a pitiable state of want. Money to provide food and firing and gifts of clothing will be gratefully accepted and wisely used. (2) To purchase Gospel and Temperance tracts. (3) To support missionaries and evangelical mission work. (4) To pay off a debt of £500 on a large mission hall and institute, in which a most important and cheering work is being done.—Contributions may be sent to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C., or to Rev. W. Harvey Smith, 203½, Bethnal Green-road, London, E.

AN APPEAL FROM JERUSALEM.—The Evangelical Mission to Israel is in great need of Christian help. Those of the Lord's children who would like to know it and afford their help, should correspond with Mrs. T. Walker, The Hall, Glenn, Leicester; Henry Tasker, Esq., Brook Side, Andover; and Mr. Robert Morgan, 138, Clifden-road, Clapton, London. We are also known to the editors of this periodical for more than 20 years. We may mention the following branches of the work are carried on:—The Gospel to Jews in their houses, and every opportunity. Our meetings in the Mission-room are as follows:—Sunday morning, Worship; evening, Gospel. Tuesday evening, Lecture on Prophecy. Wednesday noon, Mothers' Meeting. Friday evening, Bible-class. Saturday, Lecture to Jews. The Reading-room open all day. Night School, Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday, from 6 to 9 p.m. Pray for all the branches.—D. Christopher Joseph, Evangelical Mission to Israel, Jerusalem.

FUNDS URGENTLY needed to carry on Evangelistic Work amongst Poor at East End. Also are in great need of funds just now to carry on our SOUP KITCHEN AND CHILDREN'S HALFPENNY DINNERS. The work is strongly recommended. Donations gratefully acknowledged by George Fuller, Superintendent, Brunswick Hall, Brunswick-road, Poplar, E., or by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, The Christian Office. Left-off clothing, Tracts, &c., thankfully received. The "Widow's Mite" would be welcomed.

TRAM-CAR AND 'BUS SCRIPTURE TEXT MISSION.—Established 1883, to publish the Word of God to the millions who travel by these means. Funds much needed. Address all communications to Mrs. E. Wood, Hon. Sec.; or W. Walters, Hon. Treasurer, 53, Paternoster-row, E.C.

THE SUFFERING POOR.

THE LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY

Is in URGENT NEED of DONATIONS for AID to the POOR by Tickets for Coal, Bread, Lodgings, &c., which are available all over London and Suburbs; also for its Convalescent Homes at Bournemouth and Sandgate, with 185 beds.—Donations will be most thankfully received by John James Jones, 98, High-st., Homerton, London, E.

CAPITAL WANTED to build a large Hall next door to the Seamen's Institute, Rouen, to seat 450 people. There will be a shop below. The premises are already rented for £160 per annum. Will a Christian capitalist discount a bill for £500 at a reasonable rate to carry on this work. —Rev. John W. Herivel, Rue Grand Pont, Rouen.

THERE ARE BYE-PATHS of human suffering from whence no cry is heard. Miss Faithfull, The Institute, 136, Regent-street, earnestly pleads for many needy, invalid, and distressing cases. The winter is so severe, want so great.

ZENANA MEDICAL COLLEGE, 58, St. George's-road, S.W.—Who will give 100 guineas towards earnest appeals from a former Student for free Scholarships for two of her Syrian pupils? R. C. L. Bevan, fifty guineas.

THE PRESENT TENSES OF THE BLESSED LIFE.

CLOTH BOARDS, 1s.; Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

Sixth Thousand.

"This book will plant in many hearts the formative thought by which alone it is possible to build up a worthy reproduction on earth of the noblest life it ever saw."
Christian Leader, Dec. 20, 1888.

"A beautiful and deeply spiritual little book."
The British Weekly, Dec. 21, 1888.

"A series of more than usually helpful meditations on passages of Scripture which the Author cites, as showing the phases of Eternal Life, which is even now begun in all who have named the name of Christ."—The Quiver, Feb. 1889.

"A truly helpful little book for all earnest souls who are pressing on in the ways of holiness."
Footsteps of Truth, Jan. 1889.

"The Author has learnt the secret of living in the will of God, and he is doing his best to teach this secret to others. It is the very book to put into the hands of a humble Christian, seeking a higher, calmer, and steadier life."
Irish Congregational Magazine, Jan., 1889.

"A delightful little volume from Mr. Meyer's pen, full of stimulus and encouragement."
The British Messenger, March, 1889.

Ninth Thousand.

"A more suggestive and helpful volume it would not be easy to name: and it is so tenderly persuasive in its tone that few will be able to read it without deriving spiritual benefit from the perusal."
Christian Leader.

"Every page is full of stimulating thought for Christians; and we can heartily commend its earnest admonitions and stirring appeals for a HIGHER LIFE. From beginning to end it is a live book, and is worthy of a place in every Christian's library."—Christian Commonwealth.

"Like all Mr. MEYER'S writings it is delightfully practical and experimental. His teaching gives no uncertain sound, and the way in which he corroborates every statement by appropriate passages of Holy Scripture is truly admirable."
Christian Treasury.

"This is a valuable little book. Those who know by experience something of the life of a Christian—but who long for further progress, and a fuller, happier, service—may find in it much helpful counsel."—The Times.

"MANY INFALLIBLE PROOFS."

The Evidences of Christianity;

Or, The Written and Living Word of God.

By ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D.

"A handbook of Evidences of Christianity by which the author found his way out of the deep darkness of doubt into the full light of day, and found that the Bible was the Book of God and Christ the Son of God. May it help many out of Doubting Castle!"—Methodist Times.

"A book like this deserves a place beside Cooper's 'Bridge of History over the Gulf of Time,' as a forcible and interesting evidence of the truths of Christianity. Dr. Pierson tells us in his preface that, having himself been in the dense thicket of doubt, he is desirous of leading others out by the pathway by which he emerged into the light of faith. This volume reiterates the unshaken proofs of the Bible as a Divine Revelation, and also shows how Jesus Christ was none other than the Son of God. It is neatly bound, and has a portrait of the writer."—The Bookseller.

PATIENCE HART'S FIRST EXPERIENCE IN SERVICE.

New Edition, 33rd Thousand. Cloth elegant, 2s.

Dear Sir,—As I have no personal interest in the sale of the late Mrs. Sewell's works, may I say that, to my mind, the one most worthy to be kept in remembrance and circulated is "Patience Hart's First Experience in Service." If a copy of this were given to every girl when she goes to her first place, it might, with God's blessing, prevent many a sad history of sin and ruin.—Truly yours, Discipulus.—The Christian, Feb. 8, 1889.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

Rev. J. Denham Smith has at length "fallen asleep." He breathed his last in perfect calm at 8.50 on Tuesday morning. His desire that his home-going might be during sleep was granted. In our next issue we hope to give a portrait and sketch of the long and happy life work of this eminent servant of God. The funeral is fixed to take place to-morrow (Saturday), at Hampstead Cemetery, at three o'clock.

The suicide in Madrid of Richard Pigott terminates the earthly part of a melancholy and inglorious career. Seldom has history revealed such a perjured and prostituted life record. The unhappy conspirator is now beyond human censure, or even pity, and we leave him to the One who will mingle all possible mercy with strict and impartial judgment.

But what can be said of those who tacitly encouraged Mr. Pigott in his deeds of infamy, and thereby made themselves accessory to his crime? As journalists we feel humiliated and ashamed that any respectable English organ of public opinion, much more that a newspaper, bearing the proud title of "the leading journal," should have covered itself with such confusion and contempt as are now heaped on The Times for its action in publishing, without strict proof of genuineness, the letters supplied to it. Almost worse than the initial error is the altogether inadequate explanation and apology dragged out of it by the proceedings of the Special Commission. All newspapers are fallible, and liable to be imposed upon, but the mark of gentlemanly, not to say Christian, behaviour, lies in the readiness to make full atonement, even for a wrong that may have been unwittingly done.

Whilst the newspapers are full of accounts of entertainments and parties, upon which wealth is literally lavished, the following item, taken from The East London Church Chronicle, is of deep interest:—

Let us learn thrift from an old lady who lives in Whitechapel. Her rent is paid for her, and her weekly allowance consists of relief tickets for half cwt. of coal, one four-pound loaf, two ounces of tea, half a pound of sugar, and a shilling. The shilling is spent as follows: clothing card, 2d.; oil and wood, 1d.; meat, 3d.; soap, 1d.; butter, 2½d.; vegetables, 1½d.; apples for dumpling, ½d.; flour, ½d. The meat means either bones or the trimmings of fish and meat from an eating-house. She and another old woman put by one lump of coal each week, and this lasts them through the summer months, when coal tickets are not given out.

A clerical friend in Whitechapel tells us that for a long time after he took up his work in that locality he was quite unable to take his dinner at the close of a hard day's visiting, so sick was he made by the sight of so much suffering and hunger, which it was quite out of his power to relieve. Yet there are hundreds of people who are spending upon foolish and sinful dinner parties sufficient to feed hundreds upon hundreds of these starving people, and who are indignant that occasionally Lazarus questions the equity of modern social arrangements.

Rev. W. Allan, of Bermondsey, who has visited the stations of the Church Missionary Society on the West Coast of Africa, lately gave a deeply interesting address at the Church Missionary House, Salisbury-square, on the present state of the little native church at Bonny, formerly the seat of the most debased form of pagan worship and of cannibalism. Mr. Allan said that two hundred years ago English trade was commenced at this spot. Twenty-five years since the first Christian missionary landed there, and found the inhabitants sunk in the lowest civilised vices; at the same time they were practising the most debased forms of idolatry and openly addicted to cannibalism. How deeply humiliating to hear facts such as these! If the "Christianised commerce" of the remaining decade of the nineteenth century will be true to its title, what results may we not expect from the preaching and practising of the Gospel, seeing that in spite of the terrible scourge of two centuries of anti-Christian intercourse and influence, twenty-five years have sufficed to transform one small portion of that moral wilderness into "the garden of the Lord."

The Report of the "Centenary Conference on Foreign Missions," held in Exeter Hall in June last, was published by James Nisbet & Co., in the middle of November, in two large 8vo. volumes. Within three months two editions, amounting together to 7000 copies, were sold out. The demand is still such as to encourage the issue of a third edition of 5000 copies—making 12,000 sets, or 24,000 volumes in all. That these volumes are of exceptional interest and value is seen from the fact that it is a rare event for a Report of Meetings to have a bonâ fide sale of more than a few hundreds. The work was said to be the cheapest book of the season when it was published at 7s. 6d., but now these same two volumes of 600 pages each are offered to the public for 6s. Such an offer should command an immense sale, which the work well deserves from its intrinsic value, even more than its very low price.

The Christian Statesman says:—"There are still 200,000 Indians within the borders of the United States un-Christianised, and amongst these there are only eighty-one missionaries at work." Well, this is bad enough; but what shall we say about the destitute state of the Malay Peninsula and the surrounding country, such as Singapore, Malacca, Penang, with one and a quarter millions of pagan and Mohammedan souls still unreached, with only some five missionaries all told. More than half of the whole population are under the British flag and protection. Every part is open from end to end; accessible to workers of any denomination or nationality. Here is a field ready for a host of workers, among some 600,000 Chinese, as many Malays, besides Tamils and others. The Europeans and Eurasians are fairly cared for, but not the heathen and Mohammedans.

We are almost constantly in receipt of communications from different parts of the world to the same purport as the following. We need hardly say that we feel thankfully encouraged by such tokens of appreciation, and shall be only too glad if the kind suggestion of the writer is taken up, and acted on by our readers:—

May I give vent to a pent-up feeling? The Christian of February 21 has incited the oft-recurring desire that your journal might find an enlarged sphere of usefulness. Who can read of the Lord's doings throughout the world in the columns of this evangelistic-missionary paper without being cheered thereby? How re-invigorating are such reports! Who can read and remain indifferent? May I not urge the scores of evangelists, the hundreds of pastors, and the thousands of readers who are constantly stimulated through the pages of The Christian to make a conscientious painstaking effort for a large subscription list. Many who subscribe for one copy might easily subscribe for a dozen, and post them weekly to poorer friends. Evangelists, through their committees, and pastors from their pulpits can recommend it. Let there be a determined effort made by every reader, until 100,000 copies shall be sent flying through all lands supplementing the work, and comforting the workers.

A correspondent in Ireland writes to us as follows:—

In conversation with a "Nationalist," I lately received much interesting information. This chiefly: that there is a growing restiveness under the Italian yoke, with an increasing desire for a return to the simple faith of St. Patrick. Some Roman Catholics are hopeful that not many years hence Irishmen will treat Papal interference in religious matters as they have treated Papal interference with politics. The recent "Rescript" dropped harmlessly as from a palsied hand, and is now buried in oblivion. A recent brief tour through the South furnished me with abundant proof that the country is on the eve of spiritual blessing. The Bible is winging its way through multiplied opportunities to the homes of the people. Thousands are to-day reading God's Word fearlessly, while thousands more are doing so in secret.

A report of the Lower House of Convocation admits that betting and gambling are largely on the increase. This serious admission proceeds from public men, who may be supposed to know the people. The recommendations of remonstrance with all persons in authority, employers of labour, captains of ships, and managers of railways, are most valuable, and ought at once to be acted upon. But more is needed. In view of the endless evils of the betting mania, and the way it is carrying into all social ranks a feverish excitement that unfits for honest industry, and undermines morality, is it too much to expect that a solemn remonstrance from Convocation would induce leading legislators, and persons on the summit of society, to withhold the influence of their example from scenes which stimulate the betting passion?

The resumption of the Lords' Committee upon the Sweating System will doubtless draw public attention again for a little while to one of the most serious of the pressing questions of the day. Painful as much of the evidence was that was given during the previous sittings of the Committee, it was exceeded by that which the physician of the North London Hospital for Consumption tendered on Thursday, last week. Dr. Squire stated that most of his patients were dressmakers, or tailors. He added the striking fact that 25 per cent. of the whole number of deaths in London from consumption was among tailors; his belief was that this was due to want of fresh air, of exercise, and of suitable food. Overcrowding, he asserted, was a more prolific cause of consumption than the climate.

Correspondents who have read Mr. Archibald Brown's protest, "The Devil's Mission of Amusement," write suggesting measures whereby the little book may be put into wider circulation. One friend writes:—

If a small fund could be instituted at the office of The Christian, so that the clergy and pastors as well as directors of missions and Sunday-school teachers could be supplied with copies, I feel sure great blessing would result. Each copy should be accompanied by a letter drawing attention to the book, and asking for its careful perusal.

A learned and interesting paper, on the Aborigines of Australia, by Dr. Fraser, of New South Wales, has just been published by the Victoria Institute. Reference is made in it to the religion of the ancestors of the people of Pergamos. The rites were fearfully sensual, so that in the address to that church, Rev. ii., the city is twice spoken of as a stronghold of Satan; but the ancient superstitions included the giving of a white stone and new name which was not to be divulged. Our Lord would thus, according to the author of the paper, refer to a custom that was known, and promises the new name and stone which the heathen could not know, but which would become a new nature and a safeguard amid existing abominations.

At a meeting of the same Institute last week, the President of the Royal Society in the chair, and the President of the New South Wales Royal Society reading a paper, it was said that Genesis i. is a grand picture in bold outline of what took place in Creation; and, while the text-books of science had been continually changing during the last thirty years, this picture remained true for all time. Doubtless scientific text-books will just as much vary in the years to come; and it becomes the young men of this day to be as calmly confident that Scripture will outlive future changes of science, as were the untroubled believers of a past generation.

Infidelity is, according to some interpreters, to be the mark of the last days. There is much in these times to justify such an opinion. The Nineteenth Century for March has two more papers in this direction. Professor Huxley, continuing his attack on Christianity, seeks to discredit the testimony of the Evangelists by showing that, in the age of ignorance and semi-barbarism that followed the breaking up of the Roman Empire, legendary lore found acceptance. Mrs. Humphry Ward argues that a "new Reformation" is at hand, when there will be a devotion to Christ which repudiates his resurrection, his credentials that He came forth from God, and his claim to throw hope over the future of the world's history. Meanwhile, in the same Review, Mr. F. W. H. Myers tells us that France and Germany, where this sort of scepticism prevails, are honeycombed with a tacit despair, and that the present is the darkest hour of the world's thought. Most assuredly these things will not lead wise men to give up the Gospel of God.

A correspondent makes the excellent suggestion that a Social Reform Association should be founded (on the lines of the British Association) for the discussion of matters bearing on national and social well-being and well-doing. He says:—

Think of such a meeting convened annually in one of our large centres with the earnest advocates of public morality, temperance, peace, those opposed to gambling, and others, held for ten or twelve days; with the various branches of these and other similar subjects treated of by the most competent persons, according to a carefully arranged programme. Would not the bringing of the entire subject of public morality, and its various parts which are inseparably woven together, in one view, and the sustaining of the attention for a lengthened period, be calculated, under God, to exercise a great influence for good and produce excellent results?...One thing I regard as most essential, namely, that the work should be distinctively connected with undenominational evangelical Christianity, and should take for the standpoint of its proposed efforts an earnest belief in the truths of the Holy Scripture.

The spiritual claims of the Church of Rome are well illustrated by an appeal now in circulation for funds for a new church in North London. While those who sell large numbers of sixpenny tickets are to receive valuable prizes, all who render financial assistance have spiritual advantages held out to them, as follows:—

Your name will be placed under the High Altar of the new church, where it will remain for ever.

One thousand Masses will be specially offered for all the contributors.

Two Masses each month in all the houses of the Passionist Order for all living benefactors, and a Mass each month for deceased benefactors.

This is not all, but it is enough. Rome will multiply prayers for the dead and the living—for a financial consideration! The mystery lies in the fact that shrewd and intelligent people can bring themselves to believe in the efficacy of such prayers.

The question of the limitation or suppression of infantile life assurance is surrounded by difficulties, and the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children will have to proceed carefully in dealing with the subject. There can, unfortunately, be no doubt that the so-called "burial societies" are the foundation of much infant mortality; but, on the other hand, those societies are in thousands of cases helpful to the prudent. Perhaps the suggestion which has been made by the Coroner for Surrey, that only the necessary funeral expenses should be insured, will be found to meet the difficulty; if it does, Mr. Hicks will have done good service.

The action of the Bishop of Gibraltar in refusing to license a chaplain to take duty at Monte Carlo has been much commented upon. It is being urged by Rev. Mr. Wollaston, of Cannes, that there are many reasons why a chaplain is now needed, but that he should be "a very John the Baptist, to protest against the evils of the place." The question is a somewhat difficult one, but people are now going to reside at Monte Carlo on account of its extreme salubrity; and even if such were not the case, surely it would still be desirable that those who frequent the unholy place should not be left without some one to convey the message of warning. But his convictions against gambling must be uncompromising, and he must have the courage to express them.

THE NEW BALOLO MISSION.

The new Mission on the Upper Congo, described in a recent issue by Mrs. Grattan Guinness, may well excite the interest and sympathy of those who feel for the woes of the millions who inhabit the Dark Continent. We trust that as the time draws near for Mr. John McKittrick and his devoted party of six or eight to leave for their distant sphere of labour, many more eyes will be turned to Balololand, and a large volume of prayer will ascend to God abundantly to bless the missionaries and prosper their message. Mr. McKittrick, the leader of the expedition, is the only one of the party who has had any experience of the country, but two others have worked as missionaries for some years elsewhere, and all are believed to be as well adapted to do their part as they are heartily desirous of promoting the glory of God by preaching the Gospel to the ignorant and erring populations of Central Africa.

Christian domestic life is, we rejoice to say, to be illustrated to the Balolos. Mr. McKittrick takes out with him a wife to whom he was married on Thursday afternoon last in the East London Tabernacle, Burdett-road, E. The lady, Miss Frances Theodora Fooks, has for five years been working in Beyrout and Damascus, and we trust she will be much blessed and a great blessing on the Upper Congo. In the evening a missionary farewell was held in the Tabernacle, when, with others who are shortly going into "the regions beyond," the party was commended to the Lord in earnest prayer.

Mrs. Guinness delivered a stirring address on England's responsibility in regard to the heathen. It is hoped that, starting on March 28, the party will be at their station in about two months' time. Captain Hore, from Lake Tanganyika, spoke of the darkness of Central Africa, but rejoiced to be able also to testify that, while labourers are called upon to endure much, they are being blessed by many evidences of the sufficiency of the Gospel, not only to meet the needs of the people, but likewise to give them a good hope through faith. Lord Radstock followed with some earnest words. He urged self-examination as to what each of us can do and is doing to let our light shine, and counselled those who go abroad, as well as those who remain behind, to "wait only upon God."

Pastor A. G. Brown briefly addressed the outgoing missionaries, basing his remarks upon Acts xx. 18—27, in which the prince of missionaries relates some of his experiences to the Ephesian elders. Having pointed out the number and nature of the characteristics of Paul's service, the speaker advanced several important lessons and duties. If service is not emphatically to "the Lord," it is contemptible; to be effective it must not be spasmodic, but "at all seasons." Pride may co-exist with Christian endeavour, but if Christian service is to be really acceptable, it must be rendered with "humility of mind"; it is possible to talk in a cold professional manner on great truths, but Paul's ministry was accompanied with "many tears." Having further remarked on the fact that the Apostle "kept back nothing that was profitable," but taught "from house to house," as well as "publicly," testifying as to one Gospel to all alike, both to "Jews and Greeks," Mr. Brown earnestly commended Paul's great and glorious example to the outgoing missionaries, asking them likewise to imitate the Apostle by preaching only "the Gospel of the grace of God." We read that when he had finished addressing the elders, Paul "kneeled down and prayed with them all"; so when Mr. Brown had rehearsed these precious exemplary truths, he asked the Lord to keep the mission party, and graciously use them to his own praise and glory.

THE BLOOD OF CHRIST
IN RELATION TO SANCTIFICATION.

Our recent notice of the teaching of the Faith Mission Pilgrims has called forth several replies, which it is impossible for us to notice at length. But we quote the following from a letter received from Mr. James F. Govan :—

All we desire to contend for is that in the Gospel of Jesus Christ full provision is made, through the power of the Holy Ghost, for our presently enjoying salvation from sins of the heart—from unholy anger, wrath, bitterness, malice, pride, sloth, envy, jealousy, love of the world, impatience, worry, discontent, fear, inordinate self-love, unholy desires and affections, rebelliousness, unbelief, and such like—as well as from the outward manifestations to which these indwelling sins would pre-dispose us. This we hold Scripture fully teaches.

Perhaps the Pilgrims will better understand our position when we express our hearty endorsement of these words. We would unite with them in proclaiming the desirability and the possibility of a full salvation. It is not our desire to lower the standard of Christian life; but we do want for ourselves and them to "hold fast the form of sound words," and we remind them that any statement of experience which denies 1 John i. 8, and which does not recognise that even in the holiest there is sin needing the atoning blood for its cleansing, is unscriptural and dangerous. It is against such statements that our warning was uttered.

Does not danger lurk behind the following words, which we have previously quoted from "The Holy Life," by W. J. Govan?—"The 'life'-blood of Christ in our spiritual nature cleanses us from all sin. So we must continually drink." This very forced interpretation of 1 John i. 7 is supported by Rev. F. D. Sanford, from whose tract, "Sanctified Wholly," we quote the following words :—

Sanctification is not a state in which we do not need the blood, and that continually. We never needed it more. Sin is only driven from its stronghold by the all-cleansing blood, and can only be kept from returning by the same blessed power—the life (for "the blood is the life"), the glorified life of the Son of God always flowing through the soul, and thus keeping it clean.

This very confusing quotation raises two important questions: first, Is the phrase, "the blood of Christ," ever applied to the glorified life of Christ? Does it not in every place mean atonement? Not the life of Christ communicated in order to drive out sin, but the life of Christ poured out in order to atone for sin? It meets, not our inability to overcome sin, but the guilt which would otherwise cut us off from fellowship with God. And if this is its true meaning, the second question is: Why is not this meaning retained in this passage? Why force into it a significance not even hinted at in other Scriptures? The glorified life of Christ is communicated by the Spirit of God, and is, without doubt, the power for true holiness. It is the possession of this Spirit that enables us to walk in the light. The blood of Christ does different work for the sanctified man—it cleanses him from the guilt of sin which is there, whether he knows it or not, and which, but for the cleansing blood, would prevent his fellowship being maintained.

This is just the truth which the interpretation given by Mr. Govan and Mr. Sanford seems intended to deny. It is assumed that the man who is walking in the light, and enjoying fellowship with God, has no sin that needs the application of atoning blood. Hence the idea of atonement is not allowed, and the blood is unwarrantably applied to the glorified life of Christ which "drives sin from its stronghold." What is this but saying that "we have no sin"?—the very mistake of which 1 John i. 8 warns us. To translate "the blood of Christ" into his "glorified life," and to say that this is what the sanctified need, is to use the same term to represent entirely different things, and to imply that the sanctified do not need the blood of Christ in the sense which it invariably has in Scripture—that of expiation for sin.

"If we say" (we who are "walking in the light") "that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." Observe the contrast with ver. 6—not "we lie" deliberately and intentionally, but we "deceive ourselves." Every man, however perfectly sanctified, who says—as many are saying now—"The prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in me," "Sin is taken away from my inmost spiritual being," is self-deceived. And to be deceived on such a matter is serious. Happily, many do not carry these unscriptural teachings to their logical issue. But the number who do is becoming increasingly great. Will not teachers of sanctification receive an earnest word of warning? For long, many public teachers made the standard of Christian life too low, and made actual conscious sinning to be almost a necessity in the Christian life. Now, in some cases at least, the pendulum has swung to the opposite extreme. And the tendency to claim freedom from the presence of sin, which is more than the Scripture warrants, is raught with dangers more subtle, and more seriously dishonouring to God.

It is often asked, Is not God able to do this? Certainly He is able. He was able to have prevented the entry of Satan into Paradise. He was able to have sent his Son to make atonement as soon as Adam fell. But He did not. And if He is pleased to leave us in this body of our humiliation, and not to change it into the fashion of the body of his glory until the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall say unto Him, "What doest Thou?"

Because we are in the most cordial sympathy with all who are seeking "Scriptural holiness," we earnestly desire that we may all hold fast the form of sound words; and in unfeigned brotherly love we beg the Faith Mission Pilgrims to reconsider the statements we have quoted, and others allied to them.

HEYWOOD MISSION, MANCHESTER, is carried on by working men, whose aim is to reach the masses who go to no place of worship. God has been pleased to own their labours in the salvation of many of the most degraded characters of the city. An effort is now being made to reduce the debt of £420 on the new mission chapel. Particulars may be obtained from Mr. W. Wortley, 109, Starky-street, Heywood, Manchester.

THE QUEEN'S ROAD HALL, WALTHAMSTOW, in which, in days gone by, many a weary sinner has found rest in the Saviour, is now lying in heaps, it having been judicially declared that the structure was erected in contravention of stipulations contained in the freeholders' covenants on the Hoe-street estate. Compelled to remove the hall, the committee have taken the Victoria Hall for Sunday engagements, and the Town Hall for Thursday evening meetings. It is estimated that £1800 will be required before the loss can be made up, and it has been decided not to begin building operations until substantial promises of financial help are received. Inquiries may be addressed to Mr. Ransome Wallis, Walthamstow.

London Missionary Society.

A crisis which has been threatening this Society for several years has come at last; and the question must now be promptly settled whether it is to continue its present work, or withdraw at once from one or more of its fields of labour.

A careful examination of the condition and cost of the various fields of labour has therefore been made, and the Directors have determined upon certain stations in different parts of the world which must be the first to be sacrificed, if this bitter necessity actually comes upon them. Yet they cannot believe that the necessity has come even now. At any rate they are not prepared to sound the retreat without making one more earnest appeal for reinforcements. They believe the work is God's work; that He has opened the doors and has laid upon his people the burden and the privilege of this great enterprise.

There never was a time in the Society's history when its work was so prosperous and so full of promise. The development of female missions has been most remarkable. Medical missions, especially in China, are proving to be the means of richest spiritual blessing. The missionaries in Madagascar are burdened with the care of a work which taxes all their strength and resources to the utmost. New Guinea is repeating the wonderful story of the early days of the South Sea missions. The heavy expenditure of money and of consecrated lives in Central Africa appears at length to have opened the way for earnest and effective work. And the vast mission fields in South India, and in several of the Chinese stations, are ripe for a great harvest. Is it possible, the Directors ask, for Christian men and women to give up such work with clear consciences? Is it wise and worthy of them to desert the fields which as yet are hard and unprofitable in favour of the easier and more remunerative tasks?

It should be clearly understood that there has been no falling off in the Society's income. It is stationary, and a stationary income cannot suffice for a growing work. To do the present work as it ought to be done, an increase of at least £15,000 in the Society's annual income is required. To provide for actual needs at present pressing, an immediate addition to the funds of fully £10,000 per annum must be obtained. The Directors themselves feel the urgency of the question, and have no doubt about the answer which should be given to it. The Society's officials and missionaries also feel the urgency of the question, and are prepared to make large sacrifices rather than to give up the work they love. From the Board the appeal is being made to the constituency generally. The Society's financial year closes on April 30, and the Directors earnestly ask for some clear indication of the feeling of the country before that date.

HYDE PARK HALL.—A tea-dinner was recently given by the friends and workers to a number of men out of employ. Words of hope and cheer were spoken to the guests by the chairman, Mr. E. Tildesly, and a lecture on the Holy Land and the East given by Mr. Cook. Many of the working men were accompanied by their wives: on leaving each couple were provided with two quartern loaves and two packets of tea. It is purposed to hold another such meeting if friends will help to provide means.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Situation surveyed, Defects disclosed, and the Church recalled to her Lord's Instructions.

XV.—Christ's Instructions for his Missionaries:

THEIR PERPETUAL OBLIGATION—SHOWN FROM THE TEXT.

THE enactments of the Lord Jesus, which form the basis of missionary estate, we have studied. They provide for the equipment, deportment, and message of those who go forth. They were first given to the twelve, afterwards to the seventy. They were never repealed or abridged. When Christ committed to them the fuller commission to preach the Gospel to every creature He added nothing more, only giving them the assurance that He would be with them to the end. How otherwise would they go than upon those tried methods in which they had so long been trained, and in whose practice they had lacked nothing? How otherwise did they go after Pentecost? Paul, who laboured more abundantly than they all, neither knew nor followed any other. Therefore, we conclude that they are of unceasing obligation, and as binding on this generation as on that.

But the question of the perpetuity of these enactments is of such vast moment that we will seek so to demonstrate it that no foothold for doubt will remain.

In our last chapters, EVERY POINT WE MADE, WHEN TREATING OF THE DIVINE PHILOSOPHY OF THIS LAW OF MISSIONARY OPERATIONS, ARGUED FOR ITS PERPETUITY, AND WAS A CONTRIBUTION TO THIS PORTION OF OUR SUBJECT. How firmly founded is the truth of the lasting force of this legislation, if it is indeed evident that it gives the necessary and appropriate form in which the messengers must, by the operation of spiritual law, appear; if this form is seen to be needed by the truth itself, by the world to be saved, by the workers themselves, by the circumstances of the Church; and if also it is the mould into which spiritual service has ever been wont to be cast, and the character and condition to which spirituality ever tends, and which crystallised in Christ, and was designed perpetually to bless the sons of men. And of this, those who have read can judge.

It might also suffice to reply that THE BURDEN IS UPON OBJECTORS TO SHOW THAT THESE OR ANY OTHER OF CHRIST'S COMMANDS HAVE BEEN RESCINDED. He came, not to destroy even the law and the prophets. As to the Old Testament, only the mere shadows passed away, but the substance remains. Much more, then, shall his own words, his deliberately given law and solemnly announced predictions, be fulfilled. He came to enact laws whose obligation should never cease. Every institution He established, every precept that fell from his lips, to which a permanent meaning can be attached, became eternally binding. The impress of fixedness and age-during power was upon all that He said and did. He came to end the dispensations of preparation and foreshadowings, and establish the age of complete revelation. The waxing and waning light of the pale moon is not found in his words and deeds, but the strong shining of an unsetting sun. So then, in approaching this vital question of the permanency of these instructions, we have the right, yea, it is our bounden duty, to come with the conviction that they are of perpetual obligation, except indisputable evidence to the contrary exists.

There are many of Christ's eternal sayings, if not most of them, which were called forth by the most accidental of circumstances—the passing occurrences of the hour. But these contributed to the code of New Testament law. Even his actions, such as changing the water into wine in the beginning of his ministry, and the withering of the fig-tree in the end, have an undying application and meaning, the things signified in them not yet having been entirely fulfilled. This being so, shall set and prolonged instructions, that pertained to that to which his servants ever thereafter were called as their life work, be dismissed as of but temporary application?

THAN THESE INSTRUCTIONS, THERE IS, PERHAPS, NOTHING MORE FORMAL IN THE RECORDED SAYINGS OF THE LORD JESUS, AND ABOUT WHICH HANGS THE AIR OF SUPREME IMPORTANCE AND AUTHORITY, EXCEPT IT BE THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT, to which it bears no small resemblance. In fact, the principles that underlie them are found in it; and, even if the instructions be blotted out, they can be virtually reproduced from those marvellous utterances on the Mount. That was the legislation of the King for his subjects; these are his legislation for his heralds. So in these we find the principles of the Sermon on the Mount projected into this divinest of callings, and built about with the secure ramparts of its appropriate condition and outward form, so that his servants should be doubly guarded, being deprived of aught on which sight might lean, or from which selfishness proceed, or to which nature's weakness might betake itself. As the legislation for his subjects is of lasting force, so also is this for his missionaries, which is after all but the soul of the former taking on to itself such outward form as befits these high-commissioned ones.

It has been said that the germs of all New Testament truth, both of doctrine and practice, are included in the Sermon on the Mount. This is true. So in these directions we have such a development of those seed principles as is suited to the missionary character; and elsewhere we have such developments as are appropriate to all classes and conditions of the disciples of Christ, whether pastors or members of the flock, whether teachers or deacons, whether husbands or wives, parents or children, masters or servants, bond or free, male or female, Jew or Gentile. Is it then to be believed that, while all other outgrowths of this primal and comprehensive enunciation of the root principles of the kingdom are to stand for the classes to which they apply, that only one which enlightens his missionaries as to their vocation is abrogated, or was intended but for a passing occasion? Impossible!

Men have even taught that the Sermon on the Mount is applicable only to the Jewish remnant, and not to Gentile believers; and that the Lord's prayer, which was part of it, is not intended for our use. Hence it is not so surprising that these definite directions have been held not to apply now. But we are glad to believe that carelessness, and a conformity to the rulings of worldly wisdom, account for their being gradually departed from, rather than intelligently rejected by a crooked perverseness. They are now lost sight of, not because, after devout scrutiny, they are believed to be remote from us, but in consequence of their being hidden behind the pile of traditional habits of thought and practice in this field of Christian work. And, seeing that no one has arisen in these days to point the Church to this forgotten roll of the oracles of God, the writer does it in fervent hope and prayer that the spiritual will acknowledge these things, and that men of God, who have the ears of the people, will trumpet them forth, and put the Church under responsibility to do what Israel of old had so often to do—viz., search again her sacred books and correct her doings thereby.

But what is the internal evidence of the document itself as to its perpetuity? The objection that might, upon a cursory reading, be drawn from the clause in Matt. x., limiting this particular journey to Israel, will be dealt with hereafter. Passing on, then, we are at once met with the weighty consideration that THE CHURCH HAS ALREADY GIVEN HER VERDICT TO ITS LASTING OBLIGATION. In her missionary operations she has never ceased to claim these very promises, to drink in these consolations, to profit by these predictions, and even to obey such of these precepts as accorded with her mixed practices. Has not the announcement, "the workman is worthy of his meat," ever been the basis on which the right to be ministered to in carnal things accrues to those who serve in spiritual? Have not Christ's servants ever sought to profit by the caution and command, "Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents, and as harmless as doves"? Have they not ever been forewarned by those clauses which tell them they will be hated of all men, and that the cross will divide between them of the same household? Has not the Church fed her hope with that heart-strengthening word, "He that endureth to the end shall be saved"? and fortified her faith by the assurances of the Father's power and care? When did she surrender the privilege given her in the command, "When they persecute you in this city, flee into another"? Thus she has made her election to prosecute her work under this missionary constitution, and betakes herself to this as her spiritual armoury.

But she cannot accept it in part and reject it in part. It stands or falls together. It requires obedience to every precept, if to any. And yet those specific precepts which give to the sent one his suited character and heavenly form, she disobediently rejects, and those clauses designed to continue to her the primitive power of delivering men from the domination of disease and Satan, she has lost faith to appropriate. She has shorn her messengers of that outward form in which they were without purse, scrip, change of raiment, convenience of travel, or the resources and engrossments of human friendship, by all of which they were made models of the faith and self-denying simplicity of life their preaching required; therefore she is consistent in fitting them out with every material supply, and providing against all contingency of disaster; for such is the balanced harmony of this missionary constitution, that if one feature of it be removed, its symmetry is destroyed; if one wheel be broken, its working power is impaired. Take away the typical person, deprived of earthly means, and going forth in naked faith; where can be the fulfilment of the promises of heavenly care and power that applied to such a one?

But there is yet another argument to be drawn from this code, by which its permanency appears beyond question. IT IS BELITTLED, AND MADE IMPOSSIBLE AND ABSURD, IF IT BE LIMITED IN ITS DURATION TO THAT FIRST JOURNEY. It contained provisions that overleaped all restrictions, and proclaimed themselves the marching orders of the Church's van of conquest for all time. Let us reverently note the care with which the Lord, in giving these instructions, sought to save them from dishonour by curtailment or neglect! They contain three departments, in each of which He inserted clauses which stretch into the future.

The first in the order of the record relates to what they were to do and say. They were to preach the Gospel, heal the sick, cast out devils, and raise the dead. Here our Lord inserted an item which had no fulfilment on that journey, nor until He had left the earth—viz., raising the dead. The honour of performing this mighty work was reserved until after Pentecost, when it was given to both Peter and Paul. From this it is evident that this first part of the missionary constitution both reached beyond the Apostolic circle, and applied after the earthly life of the Lord Jesus had been completed.

The next department applies to how they were to go—their equipment. It is here that we have those directions which the Lord knew would be most objected to, and which have been ignored as impracticable, for they denude the messengers of the things of time and sense, and require that they go moneyless and scripless, and receive their needed daily supplies on the principle that "the workman is worthy of his meat." The Lord Jesus inserted in the heart of this section the clause just quoted, and gives it as a reason for their going unburdened by the things of earth. This same clause is referred to by Paul, in writing to the Corinthians upon ministry, as of lasting obligation.

The third of these departments gives detailed directions as to their deportment in the varied vicissitudes of their difficult service. Here we have a number of items which no ingenuity can apply or confine to that first journey. They were forewarned that they would be delivered up to councils, and scourged in synagogues, and brought before governors and kings for a testimony against them and the Gentiles, and that when delivered up they were not to premeditate their words, but be assured the Spirit of their Father would speak through them. They were not to be overtaken by surprise if their nearest relatives conspired to secure their death. They must endure to the end if they would be saved.

And so the chapter (Matt. x.) goes on to the end with general directions, cautions, and consolations that have ever been taken as the heritage of the universal Church. These arraignments before councils and kings, these scourgings in their synagogues, these deliverings up to death, had no fulfilment on those first journeys or during the earthly life of Christ. But how abundantly they were fulfilled after Pentecost, not only in Apostolic times, but so long as the Church retained any considerable measure of faithfulness to her commission. After the descent of the Spirit how applicable was the word concerning his speaking through them. From all this we may see that when the Lord uttered this missionary constitution He had in his eye the entire stretch of the history of his Church on earth. Therefore it applies to all time, and the Church of to-day is bound to revise her missionary procedure by these deathless enactments.

We will next show that primitive example also gives its verdict for their perpetuity. A MISSIONARY.

COUNT CAMPELLO AND ROMANISM.

CONTE ENRICO DI CAMPELLO has been holding conferences at San Remo to advance the cause of "Catholic Reform." It will be remembered that the Count was, up till September, 1881, a canon in St. Peter's, Rome. He there had before him the prospect of a splendid career in the Roman Catholic Church. For conscience' sake he sacrificed all. Unable to worship and serve God according to Scripture teaching, and to be true and faithful to his king and country, as he desired to be; unable to be a Christian without hypocrisy, and an Italian subject without being an enemy of his nation, he voluntarily placed his resignation of his canonry in the hands of Pope Leo XIII. Very early he unfurled the banner of Catholic Reform. He worked for a time in Rome, and then transferred the centre of his labours to his native district in Valnerina, in Umbria, where his cause is advancing day by day.

It is a notorious fact that the Church of Rome in Italy has lost its hold on the great mass of the people. Men of intelligence and education rarely enter a church door. It is also indisputable that, so long as the Church of the country remains what it is, there will be no return to it. The hatred in the Italian mind of the Papal system is something that an Englishman can hardly understand. His whole being loathes it. It is to him the embodiment of everything that, as a man and a patriot, he should hate and despise. What, then, is happening is this, the Italian people are drifting fast into indifference and infidelity. When I have talked to some on religious matters, they have replied, "We are sick of priests and churches. We have thrown them all overboard." Others openly avow themselves infidels and atheists. Still the religious element is strong in the Italian character, and many say, "We should like to have a religion we could believe in."

This is exactly the want that Count Campello seeks to meet. He wishes to see established in Italy a Reformed Catholic Church. Protestant churches in Italy are doing excellent work. Still these are mostly on Presbyterian lines, and therefore, whilst meeting the wants and wishes of many, fail to meet those of many more.

Count Campello has visited San Remo, where he addressed his countrymen in the theatre on his reason for leaving the Church of Rome. The Italians turned out in thousands to hear him. He told them plainly that he left the Vatican because he was wearied of hypocrisy and of slavery. He left it because he wished to profess himself a believer and follower of Jesus Christ. He called upon the Italians to drive the Papacy from their consciences and minds, and hearts and homes, and, if one day an opportunity came to do so, out of their country. And then, in most earnest and impressive words, he urged them to put Christ in the place of the Pope, and the Gospel in place of the Syllabus. In all he said he was supported by the applause of his audience. Even when preaching Christ, there was not raised one cry of opposition. The local press is strongly supporting Count Campello and his movement, and some of the young Italians waited upon him before he left for Umbria to beg his return. A. R.

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

XX.—THE HEAVENLY THINGS THEMSELVES.

HEBREWS ix.

THE eye is quicker than the ear. And there is therefore no language so expressive as the language of symbols. The multitude will better catch your meaning by one apt symbol than by a thousand words. The mind shrinks from the intellectual effort of grappling with the subtle essences of things, and loves to have truth wrapped up in a form which can easily be taken in by the eye, the ear, the sense of touch.

This explains why there is such a tendency towards Ritualism in the Romish and Anglican Churches. Where man's spiritual life is strong, it is independent of the outward form; but when it is weak it leans feebly on external aids. And it was because the children of Israel were in so childish a condition that God enshrined his deep and holy thoughts in outward forms, and material shadows. The untutored people must have spiritual truth expressed in symbols, which appealed to the most obtuse. For 1500 years, therefore, the Jewish worship gathered round the most splendid ceremonial that the world has ever seen—a ceremonial which these Hebrew Christians sadly missed when they passed into the simple ordinances of some bare upper room.

Let us for a moment study those ancient symbols. Choose an expanse of sand; mark out an oblong space, 45 ft. long by 15 ft. broad. Lay all along upon your outlines a continuous belt of silver sockets, hollowed out so as to hold the ends of the planks that form the walls of the Tabernacle. Now fetch those boards themselves, beams of acacia-wood, 15 ft. high, covered with the choicest gold, and fastened together by three long bars of gold, running from end to end. The entrance doorway must face the east, composed of five golden pillars, over which fall the folds of a rich and heavy curtain. Then measure 30 ft. from this, and let another curtain separate the holy from the most holy place. Now fetch more curtains to make the ceiling, and to hang down on either side over the gilded acacia beams that form the outer walls; first, a gorgeous curtain wrought with brilliant hues, and covered with the forms of cherubim; next, a veil of pure white linen; third, a strong curtain of rams' skins, dyed red; and, lastly, to defend it from the weather, a common and coarse covering of badgers' skins. The court is constituted by heavy curtains that hang around, and veil the movements of the priests within.

Let us cast a brief glance at each item as we briefly pass from the outer to the inner shrine.

THE BRAZEN ALTAR, with its projecting horns, to which animals designated for sacrifice were tied (Ps. cxviii. 27), or on which the fugitive laid hold for sanctuary and shelter (Exod. xxi. 14), stood in the outer court. There were offered the sin-offering, the burnt-offering, and the peace-offering. It was deemed most holy (Exod. xxix. 37). And well it might be; for it was the symbol of the Cross of Calvary, that wondrous cross where Jesus offered Himself as a sacrifice for sin; Himself both priest, and victim, and altar too. None could enter the holy place save by passing this sacred emblem, any more than we could ever have entered into fellowship with God, unless there had been wrought for us upon the cross that one all-sufficient sacrifice and oblation for sins, which purges our hearts from an evil conscience. The longer we live, and the more we know of God, the more precious and indispensable does that cross appear; our hope in sorrow, our beacon in the dark, our shelter in the storm, our refuge in hours of conviction, our trysting-place with God, our pride and joy.

> Blest cross! blest sepulchre! blest rather be
> The Man that there was put to death for me.

And if the brazen altar speaks of the one sacrifice, once for all, of Calvary; the laver speaks of the daily washing of the stains of our wilderness journeyings, as Jesus washed the feet of his disciples (John xiii.).

THE SEVEN-BRANCHED CANDLESTICK, from which the light was shed which lit up the holy place, would first arrest the eye of the priest, who might cross the threshold for the first time. Its form is familiar to us from the bas-relief upon the Arch of Titus. How eloquently does it speak of Christ. The texture of beaten gold, on every part of which the hammer strokes had fallen, tells of his bruisings for us (Exod. xxv. 36). The union of the six lesser lamps with the one tall centre one, bewrays the mystery of that union in light-giving, which makes the Church one with her Lord for evermore in illuminating a dark world. The golden oil stealing through the golden pipes that needed to be kept clean and unchoked, shows our dependence on Him for supplies of the daily grace of the Holy Spirit (Zech. iv. 2). And the very snuffers, all of gold, used wisely by the high priest to trim the flame, are significant of those processes by which our dear Lord is often obliged to cut away the unevenness of the wick, and to cause us a momentary dimming of light that we may afterwards burn more clearly and steadily. His life is the light of men. In his light we see light. He sheds light on hearts and homes and mysteries and space, and hereafter the Lamb shall be the light of heaven.

THE GOLDEN SHEW-BREAD TABLE must not be overlooked, with its array of twelve loaves of fine flour, sprinkled with sweet-smelling frankincense, and eaten only by the priests, when replaced on the seventh day by a fresh supply. Here again, as in the last symbol, is that mysterious blending of Christ and his people. Christ is the true bread of presence. He is the bread of God. Jehovah finds in his obedience, and life, and death, perfect satisfaction, and we too feed on Him. His flesh is meat indeed. We eat his flesh and live by Him. The table was portable, so as to be carried in the journeyings of the people, and we can never thrive without taking Him with us wherever we go. This is the heavenly manna; our daily bread; our priestly perquisite. But the people also were represented in those twelve loaves, as they were in the twelve stones of the breastplate. And doubtless there is a sense in which all believers still stand ever before God in the purity and sweetness of Christ, "for we, being many, are one bread and one body, for we are all partakers of that one bread." Oh, is it possible for me to give aught of satisfaction to God! To believe this would surely instil a new meaning into the meanest acts of life. Yet this may be so.

THE CENSER OR ALTAR OF INCENSE is classed with the most holy place, not because it stood inside the vail, but because it was so closely associated with the worship rendered there. It was as near as possible to the ark (Exod. xxx. 6). It reminds us of the golden altar which was before the throne (Rev. viii. 3). No blood ever dimmed the lustre of the gold; the ashes that glowed there were brought from the altar of burnt offering; and on them was sprinkled the incense, which had been compounded by very special art (Exod. xxx. 34—38). That precious incense, which it was death to imitate, speaks of His much merit, in virtue of which our prayers and praises find acceptance. Is not this his perpetual work for us, standing in heaven as our great High Priest, ever living to make intercession, catching our poor prayers, and presenting them to his Father, fragrant with the savour of his own grace, and loveliness, and merit?

THE VAIL, passed only once a year by the high priest, carrying blood, reminded the worshippers that the way into the Holiest was not yet perfect. There were degrees of fellowship with God to which those rites could give no introduction. "The way into the Holiest was not yet made manifest." "The vail, that is to say, his flesh" (x. 20). Oh, fine twined linen, in thy purity, thou wert never so pure as that body which was conceived without sin! Oh, exquisite work of curious imagery, thou canst not vie with the marvellous mysteries that gather in that human form! Yet, till Jesus died, there was a barrier, an obstacle, a vail. It was bespattered with blood, but it was a vail still. But at the hour when He breathed out his soul in death, the vail was rent by mighty unseen hands from top to bottom, disclosing all the sacred mysteries beyond to the unaccustomed eyes of any priests who at that moment may have been burning incense at the hour of prayer, while the whole multitude stood without (Luke i. 9). It is a rent vail now. And the way into the holiest lies open. It is new, and living, and blood-marked; we may, therefore, tread it without fear or mistake, and pass in with holy boldness to stand where angels veil their faces with their wings in ceaseless adoration (x. 19, 20).

THE ARK.—A box, oblong in shape, 4 ft. 6 in. in length by 2 ft. 8 in. in breadth and height; made of shittim wood, overlaid by gold; its lid, a golden slab, called the mercy-seat, on which angel forms stood or knelt with eyes fixed on the blood-stained golden slab between them; for it was on the mercy-seat that the blood was copiously sprinkled year by year, and there the Shekinah light ever shone. In the wilderness wanderings the ark contained the tables of stone, not broken but whole, the manna, and the rod. But when it came to rest, and the staves were drawn out, the manna food for pilgrims, and the rod, which symbolised the power of life, were gone; only the law remained.

The law can never go. It is holy, just, and good. Not one jot or tittle can pass away from it. It is at the heart of all things. Beneath all surfaces, below all coverlets, deeper than the foam, and tumult, and revolution of the world, rests righteous and inexorable law. We must all yield to its imperial sway. Even the atheist must build his walls according to the dictates of the plumb-line, or they will inevitably crumble to ruin.

But law is under love.—The golden mercy-seat exactly covered and hid the tables, as they no longer leapt from crag to crag, but lay quietly beneath it. An ark without a covering, and from which tables of stony law looked cut on one, would be terrible indeed. But there need be no dread to those who know that God will commune with them from off a mercy-seat, which completely meets the case, and is sprinkled with blood. We are told by the Apostle, who had well read the deepest meaning of these types, that "God hath set forth Christ Jesus as a mercy-seat, through faith in his blood" (Rom. iii. 24, 25). Jesus has met the demands of law by his golden life and his death of blood, and we may meet God's righteousness in Him. Our own righteousness would be an insufficient covering, too narrow or too short, but our Substitute has met every possible demand. "Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died." Grace reigns through righteousness unto eternal life.

But, ah, no blood of goat or calf can speak the priceless value of his blood, by which we have access into the holiest. Oh, precious blood, which tells of a heart breaking with love and sorrow, which betrays a life poured out like water on the ground in extremest agony, which gathers up all the meaning of Leviticus and its many hecatombs of victims; the pledge of tenderest friendship, the purchase-money of our redemption, the wine of life; thy scarlet thread speaks to us from the windows of the past in symbols of joy, and hope, and peace, and immortal love. The precious blood of Christ!

PRAYER FOR IRELAND.

A CIRCULAR has been issued by the Irish branch of the Evangelical Alliance from which we extract the following:—

For a number of years March 17 (St. Patrick's Day) has been observed as a day of United Prayer for Ireland. As it falls this year upon Sunday, it has been decided that, in addition to the services which may be held on that day, Monday 18, be also set apart for prayer.

The Council regard with the deepest thankfulness to God the tokens of life and earnestness that are visible in all the churches, and in connection with those efforts which Christian men and women are unitedly making in behalf of the perishing. Renewed energy has been put forth for the circulation of the Holy Scriptures and a healthy Christian literature. Mission services on a large scale have done much to extend the kingdom of Jesus Christ, and at the same time the claims of foreign missions are being responded to with increasing zeal and liberality. Nor are we without reason to hope that the social and political troubles which have so long disturbed the peace of the country are subsiding.

At the same time we cannot close our eyes to the fact that the great and bitter need of our country has been scarcely touched. The deep gulf between classes and parties still remains. The great mass of our people still reject that precious Gospel which alone can bring true rest to the heart, and peace and prosperity to the land. Intemperance is still doing its ruinous work, and Sabbath desecration is continuing its demoralising and God-dishonouring influence. We hope therefore that the forthcoming Day of Prayer for Ireland will find us again united in earnest supplication that it may please God to put forth his almighty power, that He may restore peace and concord to his Church, that He may break down the barriers of prejudice and superstition, and cause the evangelical doctrines which St. Patrick so faithfully preached to be universally embraced in our land.

McALL MISSION IN FRANCE.—Rev. S. R. Brown and Rev. R. McAll are about to visit different parts of the country as a deputation on behalf of this Mission. The following are their immediate engagements:—Bloomsbury Chapel, March 4; Birmingham, March 5 and 6; Bristol, March 7; Cheltenham, March 8; Weston-super-Mare, March 9; Falmouth, March 12; Plymouth, March 13; Exeter, March 14; Torquay, March 15.

Dr. Saphir on the Old Testament.

CONTINUING his addresses on the Old Testament in St. John's Presbyterian Church, Allen-street, Kensington, on Thursday, last week, Dr. Saphir dealt with further phases of his subject before a large and interested audience. At the outset, he deplored the prevailing doubt and unbelief, and pointed out that the questions which are so much debated are not secondary, but fundamental. But such conflict is not accidental, but an inherent necessity, and modern doubt and criticism is not new, as appears by studying the attack of Celsus in the second century of our era.

That the Old Testament should be made the object of attack is by no means disquieting to those who hold Chirst's word to be not merely the word of God, but the highest reason, absolute wisdom, and truth. Jesus founded his claims and based his teaching, and explained all the facts of his life, death, and resurrection, by reference to Moses and the Prophets; and when the Apostles went to the heathen who knew nothing of the Old Testament, they even preached to them that Christ died and rose again, "according to the Scriptures." From these and other facts, Dr. Saphir maintained that there is no way of proving the truth or studying the truth save by reference to the Old Testament; Christ must not be viewed apart from the Divine history with which He was connected.

Speaking of the second advent as the central point from which the whole Bible may be apprehended, both in its unity and diversity, the speaker said: The "glorious appearing of the great God and Saviour" is the coming of Jehovah to Israel and Jerusalem, in order to restore the kingdom to the nation; while it is the coming of Jesus-Jehovah to the Church, in order to receive the saints unto Himself, that they in heavenly places may reign with Him. Moses and the Prophets constitute the Book of Israel and the Kingdom; the Evangelists and the Apostles constitute the Book of the Church. These are better names than Old and New Testament. In the one we have Jehovah, in the other Jesus; in the one Israel and the nations, in the other an election from all nations, making up the body of Christ; one pertains to that which is earthly, the other to that which is heavenly. The Bible is not an aggregate of literary productions, but therein we have the testimony and voice of the Living One who is coming.

Emphasising the importance of Old Testament study, Dr. Saphir quoted words of Schopenhauer to the effect that if a work consists of one idea, and is, in fact, an organism, the beginning cannot be understood unless you know the end, and the smaller and less important parts cannot be rightly understood unless you know the whole, for they throw light upon the whole, as the whole also throws light upon them. A work of such a character must be read through twice, the first time with a patience which can only be obtained by a freely granted confidence that the beginning pre-supposes the end as much as the end pre-supposes the beginning; on the second reading part will be found to explain part. The Bible, said the speaker, is such a book of one idea, with God as its author. He by whom the first three chapters of Genesis were written had the last three chapters of Revelation also in his mind. When, therefore, we have read the whole, and got the solution and the key of the Old Testament in the New, we can begin again, and read Moses and the Prophets in the light given in the Gospels and Epistles, which is the only proper way to read and understand them. Several reasons were stated why this method is rational and according to God's will, specially the misunderstanding of the New Testament by the Jews since their rejection of Christ.

Proceeding to speak on the structure of Scripture, Dr. Saphir said: In the book of Israel, it is God who is the beginning, who redeems, who guides, who commands. God is manifested in creation, in the promise of redemption, in the election of Abraham, the bringing of Israel out of Egypt, the planting of the Tabernacle, and the whole of the Levitical dispensation. The mighty acts, words, institutions, gifts, and promises vouchsafed by God through Moses are the foundation. After that, there comes the account of how this was carried into actual reality, and appropriated by the nation, with all their sins and backslidings. These are found in what are called the historical books. Then there is the response of the believer to what God has said, and this is in the book of Psalms. The prophets follow with the promise of the fulfilment and consummation of all God's purpose. In the book of the Church we have the same order of things. First comes, not what is known about God, but the account of the incarnation and history of Christ on earth, his death, resurrection, and ascension. This is in the four Gospels, which answer to the five books of Moses. Then, in the Acts, we read how all this was appropriated and actually carried out, the planting of the Church in Israel and among the Gentiles. The response of believers to what God had revealed, and the development of Gospel truth found in the Epistles, which are, to a certain extent, the counterpart of the Psalms in the Old Testament. Lastly, in the Apocalypse, we read how all things will be consummated.

Dr. Saphir proceeded to show that the earlier books of Holy Scripture contain in germ all that the later ones unfold, and, moreover, that each and every separate portion breathes the breath of life. The whole are united, blended, and harmoniously wrought together. In conclusion, he again directed attention to the blessed hope of the Lord's return, which is the one central and leading idea that throws light upon Old and New Testaments alike. Leaving exegesis, he spoke in beautiful terms of that affectionate expectancy of Christ which should be in the heart of those who love Him, preparing them to hail with joy the "bright morning star" which heralds the rising of "the sun of righteousness with healing in its wings."

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

THE Shoreditch Tabernacle has proved also a very wonderful centre, and although it was the third visit of the evangelists, greater crowds than ever rallied to the call during the fifteen days over which the meetings there extended. Mr. Fullerton reports that he was never, in any previous mission, brought into contact with so many people who had gone so far astray. Of the hundreds whose names were taken in the inquiry-rooms, it is impossible to say how many were savingly converted or effectually restored; but families, workshops, and whole neighbourhoods will reap an advantage, and many local churches will derive a considerable accession to their membership.

On February 17 the evangelists held six services, and effected a transition from Shoreditch to Dalston Junction. Dalston being a residential suburb, the family rather than the individual is the unit of the congregation, and there are instances of whole families receiving a blessing. Chapel and schoolrooms have been crowded on several occasions. This is not surprising, for the pastor, Rev. W. H. Burton, has a large congregation, and the Church is characterised by spiritual life and vigour. Amongst the converts there was a Jewess, who sang "My Jesus I love Thee." Friends pleaded with friends, and rejoiced in seeing them also brought to her Saviour, and not a few who had been hearers of the word for years were led to decision.

More Leaves from my Notebook.

By Rev. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

Author of "From Death into Life. An Autobiography."

I.—CAST AWAY.

"I do not like your confident Christians," remarked a gentleman; "they should be more humble-minded, and more fearful about falling."

Another gentleman who was in the party said, "I suppose the people you refer to are so careful and watchful that they do not fall."

"No," said the first speaker, "we must all fall, you know!"

"Yes," I replied, "that is true, you will surely fall, if you expect to do so; it will be according to your faith. How can it be otherwise? Do you not think that Christ can keep the believer who trusts in Him for that purpose?"

"Oh, yes, certainly He can," was the answer. "But suppose the believer will not be kept—what then?"

This was uttered in a triumphant tone, as if it settled the question finally.

"But," I asked, "what sort of a believer is he who will not let Christ keep him? The Lord says, 'My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow Me: and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand'" (John x. 27, 28).

"Well," said my friend, "St. Paul himself was not so confident as you make out; for he said, 'Lest, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway'" (1 Cor. ix. 27).

I answered, "Do you really suppose that St. Paul was referring to his salvation when he wrote those words?"

"Certainly," said the gentleman; "he says so."

"Can you really think," I asked, "that, after all St. Paul teaches upon the subject of salvation as God's free gift to man, he meant to say in that passage that he might be finally lost, if he did not persevere in the race, and win it?"

"Was not Judas lost," said my friend, "although he went about with Christ Himself, and preached the Gospel; and, more than that, worked miracles?"

"Yes," I answered, "without doubt we are to understand Judas was lost for ever; because he was never saved. He had an office and a ministry; but he knew he was not changed. On the other hand, St. Paul was saved, and he knew it. He said: 'I know in whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed to Him against that day."

"Well," said my friend, with some hesitation, "I have always been taught that St. Paul did doubt his safety; or, rather, was not altogether sure of his final salvation; though he knew about his conversion."

I said, "Would you be surprised to hear that the Apostle was not referring to salvation at all when he wrote those words about being a 'castaway,' which you quote?"

"I confess," said my friend, "that I hate your Calvinism; you are sensible enough when you keep off that subject."

"You dear man," I answered, "look at the context for yourself. St. Paul is speaking, in the end of the ninth chapter of the first of Corinthians, about a race, and a crown to be had at the end of the race. A crown or reward for something which men may do. That is a very different thing to salvation, which is given to men freely for what Christ has done once for all."

This gentleman had been taught that men are saved at their conversion by faith; but that their final salvation into heaven depended upon their faithfulness to grace.

He was angry at my spoiling this good and "very useful text," as he called it. He thought my interpretation worth nothing—it was only a fancy; whereas, believers might be continually whipped to diligence and faithfulness by putting before them the danger of being lost hereafter! He said he had three excellent sermons upon the subject, which he would lend me. God had blessed them. He hated Calvinism.

However, in place of disputing with him about points of opinion, I preferred bringing him to the statements in God's Word. He became very uneasy as I set them before him. They did not altogether coincide with his cherished views.

I said, "You cannot really suppose that St. Paul meant to teach in this passage that he could run himself into heaven, or run into spiritual life by his own efforts and diligence?"

He did not reply, so I continued, "You must have birth, before you can live; grace before you can grow in it; and life before you can run a race. In England, they do not run dead horses, nor did the Corinthians run dead men."

The third party in the room began to laugh at the idea of dead things running themselves into life. This had the effect of vexing my friend still more. He said somewhat hastily—

"I never did like controversy; it does no good whatever. The fact is," he added, "you are like the cattle which trample down the pastures they cannot eat. This text about being cast away is one of the best texts in the world for believers, it helps to keep them in the way of life. If it were not for such warnings, shoals of them would wander further away."

"It is not well," I said, "to misinterpret God's Word, even though it be to do God's work."

"Sir," said my friend, getting indignant, "if God blesses it, how can it be wrong?"

I answered, "God says in his Word, 'If a prophet come to me with an idol in his heart, I, the Lord, will answer him according to his idol.'"

This did not tend to mollify matters, for my friend's bugbear and idol were both in danger. The former was something he called Calvinism, and the latter, human perseverance, or "the perseverance of the saints."

I endeavoured to show him that the "perseverance of the saints" did not mean man's perseverance with God, but God's perseverance in man.

"Pshaw—nonsense—fanaticism—don't believe a word of it," he exclaimed all in one breath, at the same time rising from his seat.

"Come, sit down," I said quietly, "and I will give you four good reasons why St. Paul did not mean what you think he did."

"Come, sit down, friend," said the other gentleman present, "and let us hear him out."

He did so, and I proceeded to set before them the four good reasons:—

"First," I said, "St. Paul is not speaking about salvation, or life and death, in this passage; but about a race, and a crown to be attained by running for it.

"Secondly, St. Paul never put salvation at the end, but at the beginning of Christian life.

"Thirdly, this same Apostle teaches that salvation is not by works, but by faith alone in the Lord Jesus Christ.

"Lastly, the words "cast away" are not in the original at all. The Greek word so translated means rejected, as unworthy of the prize. Supposing twenty people started to run in the race, only one could obtain the crown; all the rest would be rejected, or 'cast away' if you like."

My friend was very vexed with the four reasons, and still remained unwilling to be convinced.

I told of a similar man who said he was sorry for the Greek, and what did the "'Postle Paul know about Greek!"

The other gentleman laughed again, to the complete vexation of my friend.

However, I bid him think over the matter calmly, and come again. I said, "We will have a talk about the Race and the Crown, and I will show you how to make a good sermon upon the subject."

Dear man, he professed to be very jealous for the truth, and would not have it interfered with by "modern discoveries."

A man, convinced against his will, has to be convinced still.

Thus he went away, without adding more. He was an earnest, though mistaken, man.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.

The monthly meeting of workers on Friday last, at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff-highway, was a season of much spiritual profit. The announcement that Mr. W. C. K. Torre, a valued labourer in connection with the Rest, is about to leave for Buenos Ayres, awakened many regrets; but, in view of the fact that, with his wife and family, Mr. Torre is going as a self-sustaining missionary to a country where witnesses for the truth are sadly wanted, fervent prayers were offered to the God of all grace to prosper his servant's way, and abundantly bless his endeavours in South America. It is hoped that Miss Ullmann, another worker in connection with the Rest, will follow Mr. and Mrs. Torre in a few months.

The meeting was presided over by Mr. J. T Grellier, and addressed by Pastor F. H. White, whose words of spiritual cheer and good counsel were much enjoyed. The subject, "Consecration and Consecration," sounds controversial, but Mr. White's aim and purpose was far higher; for, taking his hearers to the Book of Leviticus, he expounded from chapter viii. the consecration of Aaron by Moses, and from chapter ix. the activities which were afterwards displayed by the one thus set apart. The consecration of which we generally speak is that of service; but he showed that we must not lose sight of that setting apart which precedes, and of which all true Christians are subjects. It was not the flesh of the priest that was sanctified but his priestly clothes; so it is as new creatures in Christ Jesus that we are anointed and set apart for service.

PERSECUTION IN SWITZERLAND.

In view of the eighth anniversary of the Salvation Army in France and Switzerland, our readers will be reminded that this body is still the subject of most cruel persecution.

In November, a State Council issued a Decree forbidding meetings after nightfall. In the village of Trateniles, a decree was issued because some soldiers were beaten on leaving the meetings, the usual logic being that the Salvation Army were responsible for the disturbance. But the meetings continued; there were no further troubles. For breaking one decree, Captain Saundon, Miss Convert, and five others were prosecuted. The captain went on her knees and prayed with the gendarme who was deputed to execute the conviction. He was afraid to arrest Miss Convert, as her family is influential.

After three days she gave herself up. The Perfect gave orders to treat the prisoners severely. After leaving the prison, meetings continued, and twenty-two summonses were issued. All appeared at one court. What a sight in this boasted land of liberty! A friendly pastor was amongst the accused, who furnished his own lawyer, and obtained his postponement. The meetings are now going ahead.

As the plan has failed, the Federal authorities have issued an order to leave the Salvation Army without police protection. The roughs have consequently broken into the hall at Corcelles, beat the soldiers, and tried to get into the officers' quarters.

The anniversary meeting of the Salvation Army is to be held at Exeter Hall on Wednesday next, when Colonel and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn and Miss Sterling will take part.

For the Young.

BRAVE GEORGIE.

One Sunday afternoon, a few summers ago, I was taking a class in a little village school. When the lesson was over and the Bibles closed, the superintendent rose to give the address. I forget what the subject was, the uncertainty of life, perhaps, for he soon began to speak of a little boy, a scholar of another Sunday-school, who, the Sunday before, had been alive, but was now lying dead. He was a brave, manly little fellow, and such a comfort to his widowed mother, who was heart broken at his loss. Young as he was, he had been in the habit of going alone to Stratford and even to London to buy articles for their little shop; and, whenever possible, he would bring the things home himself, so as to save the expense of carriage. Only a week or two before, the superintendent had met Georgie toiling home with a load which he was sure was too heavy for him, so he had placed the parcel in his own office, and sent the boy home to fetch the baby's perambulator, thinking in that way to lighten his burden.

What I heard interested me so much that at the close of the school I obtained the widow's address, meaning as soon as possible to go and see her. Accordingly, a few days later, I found my way to the small general shop. It was a dreary spot, such as is not unusual in the outskirts of large towns. On every side stretched rows of mean-looking and, in some cases, unfinished houses. I found the poor mother, as might be expected, in much sorrow. Yes, Georgie was all that I had heard and more. He had been an untold comfort to her, and how she and the five younger children would manage without him, she did not know. Her husband had been a chemist in Surrey, but through failing health had been obliged to give up his business, and the year before they had settled in a new neighbourhood, hoping that change of air might do him good. But it was a vain hope. He grew rapidly worse, and in a few months died, and then little Georgie with only a child's strength attempted to do a man's work. As might have been expected it proved too much for him. A cold which he caught ended in rheumatic fever, and, though he recovered, he was never really strong again. When the warm weather came, he was able, through the kindness of friends, to spend a week or two at the seaside. He came back looking so much better for the change, and so anxious that his mother should go too. When she hesitated, not knowing how she could leave the business, he undertook to see to everything, and so well did he and the little maid servant manage that when at the end of a few days, his mother returned, "there was not a halfpenny wrong."

One day, when he was in London "on business," a gentleman, amazed at the little fellow, gave him a shilling with which to get some refreshment for himself. He spent fourpence of it on his dinner, then carried the remainder home, saying to his mother, "I thought the children would like a treat too."

His last illness lasted about a fortnight. There was not much pain, only a constant aching at his heart. Sometimes he found relief by lying in the baby's cradle, whilst his mother rocked him, and all the time he was so patient, and so afraid that she would tire herself out. Often his eyes would be fixed on his favourite picture—"The Light of the World," and sometimes he would speak to a younger brother "about Jesus who died for our sins." During the last night of his life he repeatedly said: "Never despair, mother, God will take care of you." When the morning came, he asked to see the lady who was his Sunday-school teacher, and also a neighbour who had been with his father when he died. They both came. When his teacher was leaving, his mother left the room for a minute, and almost immediately Georgie covered his face with his hand, saying to the neighbour at the bedside, "I don't want my mother to see, but I can feel the cold all coming up." Another minute, and, before his mother could return, he was gone.

So Georgie died, a brave little soldier, who fell at his post, killed by the hard struggle for bread. You who have kind parents and comfortable homes, who know nothing of the bitter poverty which is the lot of so many, thank God with all your hearts for his goodness to you, and seek to pass on to others the good gifts which are yours. "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

A SCRIPTURE UNION MEETING.

Such a noise of children's voices,
  Merry faces, hurrying feet!
Quite a tumult, sudden breaking
  On the stillness of the street,
Streaming through the open doorway
  Where the Union members meet.

Will you follow? Don't be frightened
  At that most uproarious din!
'Twill be silenced in a minute
  When they see us entering in.
Come! The old church clock is striking,
  Punctually we must begin.

Hymns and prayer and Bible-reading,
  All as simple as can be;
No one here but girls and children,
  Very quiet folk are we.
Now the message! Master, teach me
  Every word that I shall say,
Giving food of thy providing
  To thy little ones to-day.

See yon group of maiden helpers,
  Quick and gentle, grave and gay,
Somewhat young perhaps for teachers,
  But they all have found the Way.
And their gladsome girlhood mingleth
  Sunshine with the Gospel ray.

There's a rosy fair-haired urchin
  With a gaze serene and clear;
Deep that curly head is plotting
  Subtle mischief, much I fear!
But he seldom fails in coming,
  So we make him welcome here.

See that boy who can't be quiet,
  Head and body forward bent,
Restless eyebrows, wrinkled forehead,
  Eyes most curiously intent,
Face replying to the speaker,
  Like some answering instrument.

Watch that stolid lad beside him,
  Fashioned of far different clay:
Does he understand, we wonder,
  Anything of what we say?
Yet he seems to like to listen,
  And we never warn away.

There's a girl! all "fuss and feathers,"
  Bold, bright eyes, and frizzled hair.
Age? when child and woman meeteth,
  With a not too modest air.
Ah! sweet heart, the teacher pleadeth
  For thy soul in special prayer.

Just behind, a ten-year maiden,
  Simply clad and tender-eyed,
Self-possessed and very quiet,
  Never smiles or looks aside.
Tears (God bless you, little sister!)
  As she hears how Jesus died.

There's a tiny six-year blossom,
  Monarch of her cottage home,
Much too young to be a "member,"
  But she loveth here to roam.
Close-clasped dolly, too, my darling;
  Well, next time she must not come.

Lads and lasses, thoughtful, thoughtless,
  Spirit-touched, not touched at all.
Here, attentive; there, most careless;
  Make the hundreds in the hall,
Gathered of their own free willing
  Just to hear the Saviour's call.

Six! The short address is ended,
  Swells the music, soars the hymn,
Children's voices sweetly blended—
  But the speaker's eyes grow dim,
And the crowd of youthful faces
  Seems to faint, and fail, and swim.

Fades the roof, the white walls widen
  Till she sees a far-off land:
Swaying trees are gently sighing
  By the warm noon breezes fanned;
Comes a group of women leading
  Smiling children by the hand.

Humble fishermen are standing
  Idly by a summer sea,
And a kind-faced Man reclining
  Eyes the infant on his knee,
Sounds the voice of the Belovèd,
  "Bring the little ones to Me."

So we sow, in full assurance
  Of a harvest rich and fair,
Though no present wealth of tillage
  We may garner for our care.
"Cast thy bread upon the waters:"
  We obey, and place it there.

Meekly trusting that the children
  Whom we humbly try to bring,
Through thy Holy Spirit's blessing
  On our feeble nurturing,
May grow up as "polished corners"
  In the palace of our King.

Give me all my bairnies, Master,
  Ah! I want them every one.
Let me meet them in thy presence
  When my sowing time is done;—
So the Scripture Union meeting
  Leaves me kneeling at the throne.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., March 10, Luke xi. 1—13; Mon., March 11, Luke xi. 14—28; Tues., March 12, Luke xi. 29—44; Wed., March 13, Luke xi. 45—54; Thurs., March 14, Luke xii. 1—15; Fri., March 15, Luke xii. 16—34; Sat., March 16, Luke xii. 35—48.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. Josiah Spiers, Bishop Stortford, March 8—20; Gospel Hall, Southgate-road, Wood Green, N., March 22—24, 8 p.m., for teachers and workers; and March 25 to April 5 (Sat. and Sun. excepted), for children, 7 p.m. Mr. Herbert W. Pewtress, South-street Chapel, Greenwich, March 3—8. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Christ Church Parochial Room, Cancell-road, North Brixton, March 4—8; St. Andrew's Schools, New Kent-road, March 10—17. Mr. Macro, Hamond-square, Hoxton, March 11—16. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Romford, March 31 to April 12.

REV. ROBERT WALLACE.—At the meeting at Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle on Monday week, an interesting feature of the evening was the ordination of Mr. Robert Wallace, one of the students of the College, to the work of the ministry in Canada. Mr. Wallace has been engaged in Christian work in that country for some years, placing out in good Canadian homes little orphan boys and girls sent from different orphanages and schools in England and Scotland. In the course of his address he spoke of the numbers sent out each year to the Marchmont Home, Bellevile, Ontario, and how well, as a rule, they turned out. The children are adopted by farmers and others, and are constantly visited in their homes, and a kindly Christian influence brought to bear on them. Mr. Wallace stated that there was a great demand for them, and their position and prospects were infinitely better than they could possibly be in this country. He returns to Canada this month with a band of boys.

Rev. John McNeill in London.

This sturdy son of Inverkip, who has so rapidly shot into the giddy heights of popularity, is now a factor in our London life. His formal "induction" to the oversight of Regent-square Church took place on Thursday evening last week. The wild and wintry weather did not prevent a very large congregation from assembling. Induction services in the Presbyterian Church seem to be based on the principle that the chief actor of the occasion shall have no opportunity of "inducting" himself by word of mouth to the notice of an interested public. All that Mr. McNeill did (besides shaking hands with the congregation as it retired) was to respond in the affirmative to the customary questions designed to test his orthodoxy; one of these pledged him to an acceptance of the Westminster Confession of Faith, barring a reservation as to the status and province of the secular ruler. Before this Rev. Z. B. Woffendale had preached a long sermon on Paul's declaration, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ." The discourse was highly argumentative, not to say pugnacious, and would have been better suited perhaps to one of those free-thinking audiences with which the preacher has had many a tilt and tournay.

Having satisfied himself of Mr. McNeill's soundness in the faith, and given him the right hand of fellowship, the venerable Dr. Edmond, of Highbury, as Moderator of the Presbytery, "charged" his young brother-presbyter in another lengthy discourse, throwing out much fatherly advice as to his prospective duties as preacher, pastor, presbyter, and those relating to his personal welfare. Many who were unacquainted with the routine of such a service must have gone away a little disappointed at the very subordinate part that the "Hamlet" of the evening had to play.

On Sunday morning, Principal Rainy, of Edinburgh, preached at Regent-square, and still further introduced the famous pastor to his new flock.

Mr. McNeill's first innings came at last in the evening service, and right nobly he rose to the occasion. We do not know the exact capacity of the square, old-fashioned church, but probably it is seated for over 1500. Long before 7 o'clock there must have been hundreds more, sitting or standing in the aisles and other open spaces. The front doors had to be closed, and hosts of late-comers went away mourning their fate. The writer (and a few others) by the exercise of a little patient strategy, got entrance by a back door, and he was well rewarded by a seat on the pulpit stairs, literally at the feet of the preacher.

Before the sermon began, Mr. McNeill cast off the encumbering Geneva gown, and manfully addressed himself to the difficult task of preaching his first discourse, to a throng of hearers, partly curious, partly critical, but all on the tiptoe of high expectation. The man who had swayed with his rugged fiery eloquence ten thousand hearers in the Waverley Market, Edinburgh, was not likely to show much nervousness in the presence of a fifth of that number; neither did he. The sermon was an exposition and application of the narrative in Acts iii. of the healing of the impotent man who lay at the gate of the Temple. It struck a truly admirable keynote of a ministry that promises to be one of much power and virtue in reaching and healing those who, by reason of sin, have been lame enough from their mother's womb. Space, unfortunately, will not permit us to give any adequate notes of the powerful sermon. Suffice to say that it was full of vigour and freshness, and packed with weighty admonitions to saints and sinners alike. Mr. McNeill's forte in the pulpit seems to be the illumination and revivification of the Bible narratives. He makes them stand out in lines of living light, as sharp and clear cut as though they had only happened yesterday, and he had been an eye-witness. His description of the man lame from his mother's womb as a type of fallen humanity; his appeals to preachers of the Gospel to vindicate its Divine origin and power; his exposure of the heartless and fruitless church going which goes to and from "the worship of God," and turns its blind eye to the miseries that are all around; his pathetic invitations to the sin-burdened ones; his declaration of personal desire as to the nature of his own ministry in Regent-square; these and many other features of this first utterance were worthy of the high occasion. In an impassioned passage near the close, he said that if sinful men and women were not persuaded and empowered in the name of Jesus to walk in newness of life, through his preaching and ministry, he prayed God to separate pastor and people as speedily even as He had brought them together.

(Winter Travel in the North-West Territory.)

As the great congregation dispersed, one and another could be heard expressing their hope and prayer that this would be the beginning of great things at Regent-square. If the church exercise the same faith, boldness, and courage as its divinely-gifted minister, such a consummation will soon be brought about.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN EDINBURGH.

The meetings have been held during the past week in Broughton-place United Presbyterian Church (Revs. Dr. Andrew Thomson and John Smith). They have been the smallest of the series, owing to various circumstances, but the after-meetings were fruitful, and several striking conversions occurred, more particularly among the young men, through the instrumentality of Mr. Charles Whittle. God has been pleased to own the testimony of his young servant, here and elsewhere, to the awakening and conversion of schoolfellows and others whom he associated with in days gone by. The last night was one which we believe many will remember as long as they live.

On Sunday Major Whittle was to address the forenoon congregation in Free St. Andrew's Church, wherein the week's meetings are held. This is a most important arrangement, as by it the professing Christians see and hear the evangelist, and are often stirred up to concern for the souls of others. The greatest difficulty we experience in Edinburgh is from the supineness of Christians. It is distressing when one meets a Christian lady or gentleman whose presence even at the meetings would, humanly speaking, be a great help, to find such a one begin a long story of regrets at not attending, and a longer string of excuses for the omission. Then there is the other class, who enjoy evangelistic addresses, who always come early and occupy the best seats, often to the exclusion of the unsaved, but who, apparently, never think of bringing unconverted friends or neighbours along with them. Thank God, there are others who have the Christ-like spirit, and who show it in trying to seek and save that which is lost. But how rare such Christians are, even among those who call themselves Christian workers. How inventive such soul-seekers are in bringing the unsaved under the sound of the Gospel, and how striking, and often how immediate, are God's answers to their faith. We saw a mother on the last night, who had herself found Christ that night, patiently waiting for her two little boys, who were being dealt with by the Major's son. All three went out rejoicing.

A young lady has been bringing her Sunday-school class in detachments every night, and God has been hearing her prayers. An elderly man, who found Christ at one of our meetings a few years ago, when he was over seventy years of age, has been more or less engaged ever since in bringing his neighbours, young and old, to the meetings, and persuading them to remain for conversation. He has done more for his Master in these few years than many a Christian in a long lifetime. Oh! for a band of Andrews and Philips! Oh! for sisters in Christ like the woman of Samaria! We ask your prayers for the professing Christians of Edinburgh, and for ourselves, for it is easy to find fault with others in the very thing wherein we are ourselves to blame.

FATHER O'CONNOR, of New York, is said to have been the means of the conversion of eight hundred Catholics during the past five years.

MR. GEORGE FULLER, superintendent of the East London Gospel Mission, Poplar, is purposing to pay a visit to Canada at the close of the present winter's work, chiefly for the recruiting of his health.

LADS IN HOLLOWAY.—Some three years ago a club was started in what is well known as one of the lowest parts of Holloway, Queensland-road, to reach a rough class of lads. It has been increasingly appreciated from the first, there being now some forty on the roll-book. Instead of spending their evenings amidst scenes of temptation they give their time to innocent recreation, educational improvement, and spiritual instruction. The Lord has blessed the efforts put forth, and many of these rough fellows are living witnesses of what his grace can accomplish. Many of their homes, however, are not worthy the name, and the workers are anxious to open a Home, under loving Christian discipline, where those who have the desire can find a comfortable shelter, and be saved from the demoralising influences of their surroundings. £100 will permanently establish a suitable place. The hon. superintendent is Miss Huskisson, 118, Highbury-hill, N.

GIPSIES ON WANSTEAD FLATS.—We were led two years ago to try and do something for these wanderers, who gather on Wanstead Flats every Bank Holiday. As each holiday arrived, we have tried to do something for them by holding services and distributing Gospel literature. We have had much to discourage us, but we have also had encouragements. We hope to continue the work this year. We want, if possible, by Easter, to get an umbrella tent, or small Bible-carriage, so as to take our stand on the Monday in some part of the fair, and so every Bank Holiday.

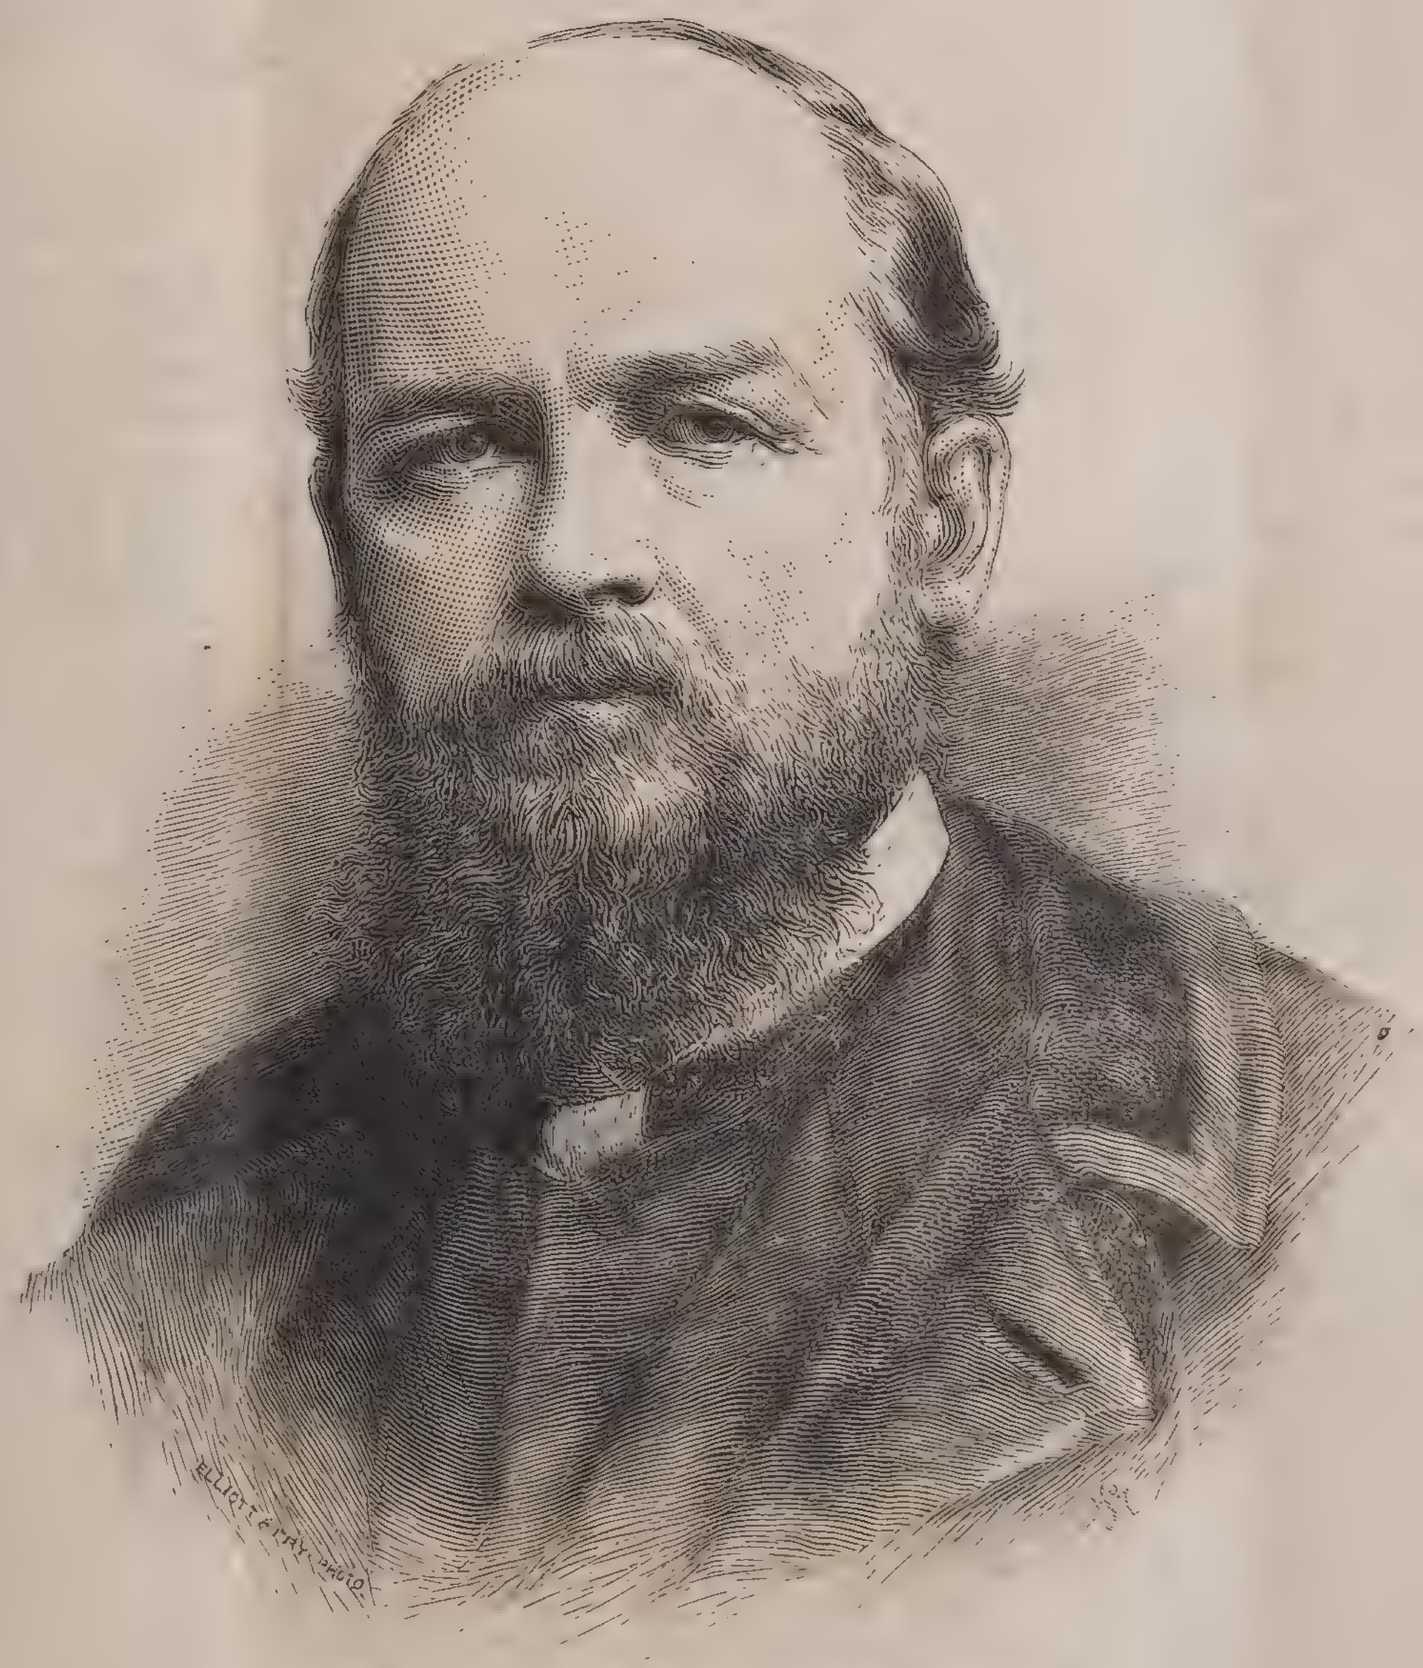
Rev. EGERTON R. YOUNG,

Missionary to North American Indians.



OUR portrait this week is that of a very active worker among a people little known to British Christians. Yet the North American Indians, to whom we refer, are our fellow-subjects; they are, moreover, a people interesting enough on their own account to demand the attention of the Churches in this country.

Rev. Egerton R. Young, who is the subject of our sketch, has come to England at the request of a number of ministers of different churches who have met him in America. He has been for several years a missionary among the aborigines of North America. His work has been among the Cree and Saulteaux Indians north of Lake Winnipeg and west of Hudson Bay. He went out to that almost unknown land in 1868. On their way to their post of labour he and his wife travelled for thirty days with horses over the great prairie regions of Minnesota and Dakota. They crossed into the British territories at Pembina, seventy miles south of Fort Garry, now known as the city of Winnipeg. From that place they travelled down Red River and the whole length of Lake Winnipeg in a little open boat manned by Indians. This adventurous trip was of fourteen days' duration.

Their first home was at Rossville Mission, near a large Hudson Bay Company's fort called Norway House. Here they lived five years. They were four hundred miles from the nearest post office or doctor. They only received their mails twice a year. They were entirely isolated from white or civilised society, with the exception of the few fur traders. Yet they were happy in their work, for it was most successful. Many of those wandering red men were converted, and their old horrid heathen customs were given up. Not content with merely consolidating the work begun by very heroic and self-sacrificing predecessors, Mr. Young extended the mission field until it was over five hundred miles long and three hundred wide.

We can hardly realise the idea of one missionary having a circuit larger than all England, over which he had to travel in summer in a birch bark canoe and in winter with dog trains. There was not a sign or vestige of a road or trail. Yet in summer Mr. Young, with skilful Indian canoemen, travelled thousands of miles up or down rivers, and across stormy lakes, often at great peril. In winter they harnessed up their dogs, four to a sled (see engraving on opposite page); started off through the deep snow into the pathless forests, and visited pagan bands of Indians as remote from the mission house as Glasgow is from London. When night overtook them, they dug a hole in the snow, made a fire, cooked their supper of fat meat, said their prayers, and lay down to sleep in their bed of blankets and robes on some balsam boughs.

Their sufferings at times were severe, but the love of Christ was the constraining power, and there was the thought: If fur traders can endure such hardships for the sake of gain, what does our love for Christ and souls amount to if we cannot endure as much?

(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, London, W.)

Mr. Young speaks in glowing terms of the teeming resources and great fruitfulness of the great North West. As an example of the latter we may quote the following remarks made by him in conversation:—

> When I went amongst the Crees, I took with me four potatoes for planting. In the first year I had a crop of a pailful; the next year I had six bushels; the year after I had 125 bushels; and before I left we raised thousands of bushels. Then, as to wheat, I dragged a bag of wheat in a dog sledge four hundred miles. I harnessed eight dogs to an iron plough which was given to me by the Governor, and ploughed up an acre of land. I sowed my wheat, and hoed it with a hoe of my own making; I cut it with a sickle, thrashed it with a flail, and I and my wife winnowed it on half-a-dozen sheets which Mrs. Young sewed together. Thus we obtained thirty bushels of beautiful wheat, raised, mind you, four hundred miles north of Lake Winnipeg. Having no mills, we ground our wheat with hand coffee mills, and the wheaten porridge which we made was a welcome addition to our bill of fare, as you will see, when I tell you that we had lived for six months on fish, twenty-one times a week.

As to the natural wealth and the possibilities of these vast uninhabited regions, he says that the land abounds with gold, oil, iron, coal, petroleum, and other mineral products. The long-stretching spaces might furnish sufficient land and sustenance for a hundred millions of people. In the face of such a fact, the problem of providing for the crowds of starving and unemployed at home becomes one of practical interest.

Though the cold is severe the winters are very beautiful. There are none of the fogs, mists, and damps that afflict the dwellers in Old England. The aurora shines with wondrous loveliness and splendour. The atmosphere is so rare that objects many miles away seem as if close at hand.

Our visitor has also many interesting facts to tell about the people among whom he has laboured. In former times a good deal of rum was distributed among the Indians, and was productive of great harm. Since the Dominion Government took possession of this great territory, stringent prohibitive laws have been in force, and none rejoice more than the Indians themselves that no intoxicating liquor can be obtained. Any troubles that have arisen have been caused by the disaffection of the French half-breeds rather than the native Indians. These are a fine race, and those of them affected by the Christian missions never require the oversight of constable or magistrate. Mrs. Young says it was not his habit to lock a door or fasten a window, yet nothing was ever stolen from the mission house. His view of the ultimate future of the natives is that they will disappear by absorption, through intermarriage with the whites. The rights of citizenship are granted to them by the Government as they become civilised.

The mission work sustained by Mr. Young, as we have already intimated, has been most successful. Churches have been built, and schools established. There are now five missionaries busy in the large district where at one time he laboured alone. The Bible is printed in the Cree dialect, and many copies have been circulated, besides catechisms, hymn-books, and other religious literature. Some of the Indians are now well-educated men, and are rendering efficient service as missionaries among their own people.

Mrs. Young and family are at present in Toronto, where the children are being educated. For the last few months Mr. Young has been giving addresses descriptive of his work in leading cities of the United States. At Washington amongst those who heard him were ex-President Cleveland and Mrs. Cleveland, who were much interested in his account of the methods of dealing with the Indians. At a subsequent interview in the White House, Mrs. Cleveland said, "Your Indians surely must be better than ours, as you have much less trouble with them than we have in the States." The suggestive reply was: "They have had better treatment." Mr. Young hopes to remain in this country for a short period, and is open to engagements to preach or lecture respecting his deeply interesting work. He may be addressed, care of Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, 11, Bedford-place, Russell-square, London, W.C.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

For several years the Paris City Mission has been doing a really good work. At its annual public meeting a few days ago, Lord Kinnaird in the chair, testimony was borne to the fact that the Mission continues to render welcome Christian service, and also to see cheering fruit of its efforts.

Mr. W. J. Lockie, secretary, briefly referred to the progress of the work. Eight missionaries are employed, and labour under the superintendence of pastors. The committee is desirous, should funds allow, of engaging more agents, for special endeavours during the coming Exhibition.

Rev. T. Howard Gill spoke in warm appreciation of the work of the Mission. Referring to the present "laicising" of education, he expressed great regret at the conduct of the Municipal Council of Paris, which, on finding that the name of God occurred in a grammar supplied to the schools, paid 600,000 francs for a new grammar in which the Divine Being is not once mentioned. In the public hospitals not a word of prayer or any religious service is allowed. Emphasising the importance of mission work in Paris, the speaker observed that there are 11,000 English people in the city.

Lord Kinnaird having spoken a few hearty words, Rev. R. W. McAll remarked upon present opportunities in France. He expressed a hope that the number of the Mission agents would be increased ten-fold, and that all Christians who visit the Exhibition will lend a hand in Gospel work. Words of sympathy were also spoken by M. le Baron S. de Neufville, Rev. S. K. Anderson, and Mr. Hoste, secretary of Miss de Bröen's work. Mr. Lockie's address in Paris is 71, Rue des Batignolles.

WRECKS.—The Royal National Lifeboat Institution has introduced a Bill into the House of Commons, entitled, "A Bill to amend the Removal of Wrecks Act, 1877." It provides for the removal of all wrecks on or near the coasts of the United Kingdom, whether in navigable waters or not, which may prove a danger to the crews of lifeboats in their endeavours to save life and property. The Bill is backed by members representing all shades of political thought, and is likely to receive very general support. The second reading is fixed for Wednesday, the 27th instant.

Back to Africa.

Our beloved young friend, Mr. Graham Wilmot Brooke, starts once more for Africa from Liverpool on Saturday, March 16, on his arduous enterprise to try to get into the Central Soudan. Meetings of a very special character have been arranged to take place in Liverpool on Friday, the day previous to his sailing—in the hall of the Strangers' Rest, 24, Park-lane, at 3 p.m.; and in the Rotunda Lecture Hall at 7 p.m., with an overflow meeting in the Concert Hall.

Mr. James E. Mathieson, of Mildmay, comes down to preside. Mr. Brooke will have his own farewell message to give. Mr. Ernest Shaw, of Ridley College, Cambridge, whose outspoken confession at a late conference at Keswick will be remembered by many, accompanies Mr. Brooke in this renewed attempt to get into the Central Soudan.

Rev. J. B. Whiting, vicar of St. Luke's, Ramsgate, will tell the remarkable story of God's dealings with the missionaries of the Church Missionary Society in the gradual opening of the River Niger. It is by this river, and assisted by this Society, that the present attempt of Mr. Brooke is to be made. Rev. J. Gelson Gregson, who knows India from experience, will speak on the need of that country. Rev. G. C. Grubb, missioner of the Church of Ireland, and who was lately, in company with Colonel Oldham, evangelising in India, has undertaken to speak. Mr. Spencer Walton, who is proceeding shortly to evangelise in Cape Colony and South Africa, can tell of what he has lately witnessed in that land from the effects of the vilest spirit supplied by civilised white men to the heathen blacks at the Kimberley diamond fields and elsewhere.

It will thus be seen that there will be no lack of speakers well able to plead for different parts of Africa and India. But it is desired that a considerable portion of the time shall be reserved for prayer, and for consecration, and for conversing with any who may be desirous of going out as missionaries, either sustained by others, or supporting themselves by their own labour, or having independent means. Others may wish to inquire about the spiritual qualifications needed by those desiring to live an out-and-out life amongst the heathen.

Mr. F. S. Arnot and his party are fixed to embark from London, for his station in Africa, very soon after Mr. Brooke's departure from Liverpool. Both of these young men, Mr. Arnot and Mr. Brooke, in remote parts of Africa, far distant from one another, were each rushed upon by a crowd of armed savages. Mr. Arnot makes a practice of carrying no arms. In the face of these savage threateners he made no attempt to fight, but, assuming a sitting posture, quietly expostulated with them. Mr. Brooke was similarly surrounded, and the spears savagely thrust at his face. He, too, sat down, saying, "If you want me to fight, you must send to the town and buy me a spear, for I have brought none." These young men have taken their lives in their hands, and the Lord in whom they trusted has upheld them both; giving them a mind readily to be themselves killed, but not an atom of courage to shoot a single savage. They have shown us once more how the Lord can safeguard the unprotected, unarmed Christian missionary amongst the savage tribes of Africa, as many of their predecessors had proved before.

Is it not fitting then that much prayer for both of these departing ones, and their respective companies, should ascend from all parts of our country, both in meetings and in the closet? Do we not want much more real prayer at home in connection with our missionaries abroad? And as we see newly opened doors, for instance to the Jews in Russia, and the striking conversion of Mohammedans in North Africa, should we not send up a shout of thanksgiving? Therefore, though few, comparatively, of your readers may be able to be present at the farewell meetings of Mr. Arnot or of Mr. Brooke, yet would we venture humbly but most earnestly to entreat absent ones to join their hearts with ours at that time.

Reginald Radcliffe.

CAPE GENERAL MISSION.

Our three self-supporting missionaries sailed last Wednesday, full of joy and peace in the Holy Ghost. A letter from Dartmouth tells of witnessing already for Christ, but, at the same time, conveys the news that they have on board a Roman Catholic bishop, two priests, and six nuns, who are to establish seven churches and two convents in South Africa. Surely this should be a fresh call for more men.

These men are all going to situations on the Cape Government Railway, obtained through the influence of our good colleague, Mrs. Osborn. The last mails have brought cheering news from her and her co-workers; much blessing among the soldiers and sailors, and open doors up-country. Our co-worker, Mr. G. B. Howe, has started on a tour to visit the railway stations, and so prepare the way for our railway missionary, as well as pay a visit to Kimberley and other towns. He has been working with very great success, and his pioneer work is most successful.

Many who know Mrs. Osborn, and pray for her, will rejoice to see how her quiet, persevering work is breaking out into a widespread mission. I hope to return in August, and, should all be arranged, to take up the branches started, adding others to them as God sends the means, and working in union with those who have already been in the battle-field, and been bearing the burden and heat of the day. I hope to bring out a little book on the Mission in a week or two, and will gladly send a copy to any, on receipt of a post-card, with name and address. The liberality of the Eastbourne Christians went a great way in helping our first three men out, who were earnest members of the Railway Mission there.

GIRLS IN LIVERPOOL.—A new "Evening Home" for girls, is being erected in Liverpool. Twelve months ago the movement was started, for the purpose of enlivening the spare hours of girls, many of whom have cheerless homes to go to after a hard day's work.

PUNDITA RAMBAI'S SCHEME for organising a Home for Child-Widows at Bombay promises to become a large and successful undertaking. A large sum has already been guaranteed to start the Institution and carry it on. The inmates are to be taught nursing and medicine, or to be trained as teachers. Rambai is lecturing in Japan to great audiences.

The Baptist Visitation.

Some reports of the recent ten days' mission in London churches reached us after going to press last week. The pastor of Queen-street Church, Woolwich, states that the members have been greatly refreshed, while the Gospel services were seasons of much blessing.

Pastor Hobbs, of Gipsy-road Church, Norwood, writes:—The services have been well attended, and great spiritual blessing vouchsafed. Many have been led to the Saviour, and the church generally stimulated. The Gospel has been clearly presented, and faithfully enforced.

Pastor Alfred Walker, Fulham, writes:—The services were evangelistic throughout, and were well attended, the neighbourhood having been well canvassed. No great results among outsiders are to be reported, but much interest was shown, and we have some hopeful cases among our own people.

Pastor W. H. King, of Highbury-hill Church, writes:—The co-operation on the part of members of the church was very thorough and earnest. There were many cases of avowed decision for Christ; some of them of very deep interest. It was for all a happy, solemn time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

Pastor A. C. Gray, of Lewisham-road Baptist Church, writes:—The addresses were intensely evangelical, earnest, and able. The people were deeply impressed; Christians were comforted, strengthened, and encouraged. Anxious souls were conversed with. The young people's meeting filled the under part of the church. We expect further fruit in days to come.

From Pastor J. R. Wood, Upper Holloway:—All the meetings had one object, the deepening of spiritual life in believers; they were not evangelistic in any considerable degree. Of course it is difficult to say how far our object was realised. The addresses given were fresh, Scriptural, and stimulating, and the spirit of the meetings marked by quiet power. Grateful expressions are heard on all hands.

Pastor G. W. McCree, of Borough-road Church, writes:—We had much of the spirit of prayer. One evening we had a number of poor men to a substantial tea, and they heard a true Gospel address. Several of them have since attended our services. Starvation and salvation do not go well together. We should feed the hungry and then preach to them. We shall be glad to see the mission repeated. London churches are often awfully dead.

Pastor T. Lardner, of Battersea Park Tabernacle, writes:—The meetings were a time of great refreshing and much blessing. All the brethren faithfully and eloquently proclaimed the Gospel, and sweetly set forth a loving, mighty Saviour. We rejoiced much at the close. Many came out, and more still come, in larger numbers than before. We had a week of preparation and prayer; here, I believe, is the secret of our success. What we are striving after is to deepen the life of God in the soul of every Christian, that there may be a sound, healthy church to labour, and to save sending so many cripples into the harvest field.

Dr. Clifford, President of the Baptist Union, writes:—From reports that have reached me from several of our churches, and from the statements made by the missionaries and pastors at our meeting for prayer and praise, I gather that the ten days' mission has been fraught with real and lasting good. Souls have been converted to God. Faith and zeal have been increased. Devoutness has been nourished, and consecration perfected. One pastor rejoices in the avowal of discipleship made by his daughter, another in the confession of faith in Christ by three members of his congregation, and another writes of 'blessing deep and full through the whole of the ten days.' Moreover, we have learned valuable lessons as to the most effective ways of carrying on such work in days to come.

Several pastors express the wish that the visitation may become an annual institution. One is strongly of opinion (and we agree with him) that the change of preachers each night was a source of weakness. For evangelistic work, no arrangement could surely be worse.

SLAVERY IN AFRICA.

A meeting was held on Tuesday, last week, in Exeter Hall, to consider the slave traffic so far as it affects Africa. The audience included many ministers of religion, military men, and politicians, who listened with much interest to an address on this important subject by Commander Cameron, R.N.

The Archbishop of Canterbury presided over the proceedings, and delivered a thoughtful opening speech. He rejoiced to find that English people are making up their minds that all slavery must come to an end. He would fain we had been moved to this determination by the principle that every kind of slavery is a degradation to him who slaves, and a worse degradation to the man who makes his fellow slave, rather than by the intolerable evils which lie behind the system, and have now assumed so gross a character that the human mind revolts at the very thought of them. Whole tracts of Africa are, he remarked, returning to the silent void which preceded the creation of man on the earth, and we may well ask what is at the root of the matter. There ought to be a power of resistance amongst the people, but we see that among the African tribes there is, unfortunately, nothing that deserves the name of community, no form of national life. We find, however, that the African people form communities round about Englishmen, and learn from them many things. Therefore, continued the Archbishop, it is beginning to dawn upon us that the way to stop slavery is to guide these great nations to profitable labour by what may be called "industrial missions." We either possess or have claims to large tracts of country in East Africa, and it behoves us to consider why God has given us power over them. Whatever we do in the matter, we should do as Christians, and then we shall have God's blessing.

Commander Cameron dealt at length with the horrors of slavery, and the pressing need for the abolition of the system. In Central Africa, he said, whole nations, millions of people, have been swept away, and the iniquity of slavery is increasing. Legitimate trade is a valuable ally in efforts to stop slavery, but it cannot flourish alongside of the fearful traffic. The speaker exhibited large branches of trees, called "slave forks," which are bound to the necks of slaves. The victims of this wicked bondage have no fear of death, but rather desire it, for something worse than death awaits them after enduring the awful agonies while travelling. Commander Cameron claimed that it is the duty of Britain to say to those nations who dabble in slavery, "You shall not do this thing." If we show ourselves perfectly clean in this respect, our influence will be very great. He also claimed that we have an indefeasible right to the great lakes of Africa. In conclusion, he urged the desirability of conciliatory intervention in African affairs for the good of the people, with a police force to maintain order and prevent slave-hunting and fighting. He asked his hearers to pray to God for the success of well-devised proposals to meet the necessities of the case.

Captain Hore, of the London Missionary Society, for twelve years resident at Lake Tanganyika, followed with an address, in which the subject was treated in great detail. He maintained that under good and peaceful government slavery would disappear.

The Bishop of London moved a resolution urging the British Government, either alone or in association with other powers, to consider the possibility of devising measures calculated to diminish and suppress the evil, and, moreover, to use all its influence to secure the maintenance of the Zambesi as an open highway. This was seconded by the Dean of Westminster, and carried with acclamation. A healthy public opinion on this subject in Great Britain is greatly needed at the present time, and if such meetings, with really warm-hearted as well as fully informed speakers, could be arranged throughout the country, much good must result.

RAGGED SCHOOL WORK.

A very large number of Ragged School teachers assembled on Monday week at the King Edward School, Spitalfields. The Baroness Burdett-Coutts presided. In the course of an effective address the Baroness said there was still much evil to be contended against; but times are not as they were; they are more hopeful when compared with the deadness of other days. She referred to the extraordinary influence of the life work of the late Earl of Shaftesbury. He aroused the nation to a sense of its responsibility and taught people to foster a spirit of Christian brotherhood.

Mr. George Holland reckoned that between forty and fifty thousand children had passed through his own school, and he knew of three hundred former scholars who are now working as teachers, &c. He showed that although the slums of London had been in so many instances abolished by the erection of beautiful buildings, the squalor had only been removed to the suburbs where there schools would still be needed. Mr. Montague, Jun., a son of the hon. superintendent of the King Edward Schools, argued that the success of the past is the encouragement for the present. Mr. J. Kirk, secretary of the Ragged School Union, showed the necessity of entering heartily into the great work that there is to be done. The committee are desirous of extending the gymnasia, while greater attention needs to be paid to the libraries of the schools, and to prizes. Mr. W. J. Orsman pointed out that their main object is to bring the children to Christ; and hence it is necessary that in all instances teachers should be converted themselves. Speeches also followed by Mr. Passmore, of Lansdowne-place School; Mr. Goodwin, of St. Giles'; Rev. Prebendary Barnes; Rev. Mr. Twining, Westminster; and Mr. R. J. Curtis.

CONFERENCE ON SPIRITUAL LIFE.—On Wednesday and Thursday last excellent addresses were given at Eccleston Hall by Rev. C. H. Sturdy, E. W. Moore, W. Frith, Lord Radstock, Sir R. Phayre, Rev. John Wilkinson, and Dr. M'Killiam. Owing to the inclemency of the weather the attendance was rather small, but those present realised the power and presence of the Lord.

THE INFALLIBILITY OF THE SCRIPTURES was the subject of a vigorous letter written by the late Rev. Dr. Hugh Martin to another Free Church minister. It has just been published, and the following is an extract:—"It is by virtue of a truly inspired word—his own word—that the Holy Spirit acts as a Person. It is degradation to suppose Him speaking by the word or words of any person less than Himself. He does not speak as a person by any word less than his own word. Deprive Him of his own word, and you make the Holy Spirit merely a force. Alas! how many of our leaders and speakers deal with Divine truth as irreverently as a kitten playing with a cork. I am sorely afraid there is to be a great decline in our Church—a great want of holy courage, in defending the absolute infallibility of the entire Scriptures."

THE LONDON WESLEYAN MISSION.

With the object of increasing interest in the London Wesleyan Mission, a meeting was held on Thursday evening of last week in City-road Chapel, which was crowded with Methodists from all parts of the Metropolis. The Lord Mayor of York presided, and delivered a sympathetic and stimulating address. He dwelt in eloquent terms upon the noble efforts of the Christian ladies at the East and West Central branches, and, as a teetotaler of thirty years' standing, congratulated the missioners upon their success in promoting the temperance cause. Drink he declared to be one of the greatest hindrances to the march of Christianity. It was a sad thing, he said, for a magistrate, who has been a Sunday-school superintendent, to see brought before him young people who had been under his care in the school, and who had fallen through the accursed drink.

Rev. Edward Smith, superintendent of the Central Branch of the Mission, followed with an interesting address upon the triumphs of the Gospel in that thickly populated region. Though situated in the centre of Clerkenwell, St. John's-square Chapel three years ago was almost empty; now on a Sunday night it is crowded with 1000 people, gathered to hear the plain, simple preaching of Jesus Christ. There is a flourishing Sunday-school, a men's Bible-class with an attendance of 100 and between 500 and 600 persons meeting in class. Not a week passes without conversions. Working men now came to the chapel who had not been in a place of worship for twelve or fifteen years before. There is plenty of room for developing the work.

Rev. Dr. Rigg declared that the Forward Movement in Methodism is beginning to be recognised as a national movement. He did not believe anything done even in John Wesley's time was a more remarkable manifestation of Divine grace than some of the work of the London Mission.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, in a lengthy address, pointed out that the only opposition that now exists to the Forward Movement is based upon misconception. He advocated the establishment of great mission centres as essential to the success of the ordinary pastoral work. He broached a proposal that the ladies of the Methodist Connexion should form themselves into an association to maintain the branches of the work in which their sisters were engaged. This suggestion was received with hearty approval, and so was the remark of the speaker that one devoted lady in a circuit could do as much good as two ministers. The only difficulty regarding the London Mission is the want of money adequately to maintain and extend the work. It is absolutely necessary that these Missions should have a regular annual income, and they wanted to encourage Methodists, and all friends of Christianity, to become annual subscribers. To maintain the London work in its present scale £3000 a year is needed. If they decided, as they are almost certain to do, to have a centre in South London, other £2000 will be required. Mr. Hughes, after giving an account of his work in the West-end, appealed to the trustees of this world's wealth, and all who believe in aggressive effort for Christ, to contribute to the work.

Then came Rev. Peter Thompson, whose burly figure is now so well known at Methodist gatherings, and who is immensely popular. He spoke only for a few minutes, but precious were his utterances. Without going into detail, he told of the victories which the Lord had permitted them to witness in the degraded East-end. At St. George's Chapel, "Paddy's Goose," the "Old Mahogany Bar," Spitalfields Chapel, and the Seamen's Chapel, Commercial-road, they are fighting the devil, and having many victories. Mr. Thompson stated that a medical man and his wife, as well as a chemist, his wife, and two daughters, intend to connect themselves with the Mission, and a dispensary is to be established. In order that this might be done, and some much-needed repairs executed upon the Seamen's and St. George's Chapels, £2500 is required. Surely Mr. Thompson's appeal will not be in vain.

OBITUARY.

WILLIAM TWAMLEY, SEAPOINT, DUBLIN.

This Christian worker passed peacefully home on Tuesday, February 26, at the early age of 25 years. He was greatly esteemed and beloved as an earnest and devoted Christian, ever ready to help in good work. He took a deep interest in the poor and needy, especially the waifs and strays. He was an earnest worker and advocate of the temperance and Band of Hope movement.

MISS M. MACKEE, CHINA MISSIONARY.

The China Inland Mission has to lament the loss by death of another of the hundred missionaries who went out to China during 1887. Miss Maggie Mackee died at her post in China, on January 10 last, of smallpox. She was the daughter of a respected elder of the Mourne Presbyterian Church. Her short course in the mission field has been eminently useful. She seems rapidly to have so far mastered the language as to be able to tell the story of salvation to the Chinese women around her, and she had seals to her prayerful work in souls converted. She and another lady missionary had just gone to occupy a new post, and were settling up their new home, when the illness overtook her, which ended fatally in seven days.

MISS CAPPER.

The Society of Friends has lost a devoted worker in the recent death, at the early age of thirty-nine, of Miss Capper, of Headingley, Leeds. At Birkenhead she had been actively engaged in Christian work, and in 1880 she moved to live with a friend at Headingley.

Here, too, her life was one constant confession of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. The Y.W.C.A., Home for Fallen Girls, Mothers' Meeting, Temperance work, and a very successful Bible-class, being amongst the many interests which lay near her heart.

Many in Leeds and elsewhere have lost in her a true friend—one well qualified to instruct in the deep things of God, and "She led me to Jesus" is the expression of many a mourning heart.

MISS S. DAVIES, DUBLIN.

Sarah Davies fell asleep in Jesus, on Wednesday, February 27, 1889, aged 59 years. She had from her early girlhood consecrated herself to God; and in her English home, without any natural tie to Ireland, had always longed to be a missionary in that country. At the age of nineteen she went to live with Mrs. Smyly in Dublin, first helping in the education of her children, and afterwards devoting herself to mission work.

The "Bird's Nest" was specially near her heart. Her book, "Holly and Ivy: a Story of a Winter Bird's Nest," written for children; as well as "Other Cities Also," "St. Patrick's Armour," and many smaller books, proved that she was an authoress of no mean ability. But this, as every other gift, she joyfully laid at the Master's feet, and used only for his glory. Even in great weakness of body and much pain the work was carried on, those around her often wondering at the brave, unselfish spirit that practically ignored self, when others could be helped and blessed.

GROVE MISSION, SOUTHWARK.—Sir,—Since the opening day last December God's blessing has crowned all our efforts. We have professed conversions nearly every Sunday. Both halls have to be used every Sunday evening. We are in the midst of a crowded neighbourhood. A splendid field of work lies before us, and a number of willing workers are hard at work spreading the truth. All our work is gratuitous. We require £400 to pay the final instalment to builder, &c.; unless this is forthcoming, the work will be hampered.

DR. PENTECOST & BUSINESS MEN.

On Monday week Dr. Pentecost began in the Merchants' Hall, Glasgow, a series of ten "talks" to business men. These meetings have been the most striking that have been held by this evangelist in "the second city of the kingdom." The Merchants' Hall is a beautiful chamber, seated for about 400. It is dedicated to important business meetings and charitable institutions. Never before in its history has a purely religious service been held. It was thought by many of the evangelistic committee that Dr. Pentecost was peculiarly fitted for addressing men of culture and business habits. The hall was free for a clear fortnight, and the managers were willing to grant its use. Invitations were sent to all the members (over 1800) of the Royal Exchange, the members of the Stock Exchange, the Association of Accountants, and many of the leading business men of the city. At the first meeting the hall was not only quite full, but gentlemen were standing all around the room, and crowding about the doors. It was with difficulty that accommodation could be got for all.

Dr. Pentecost took for his subject, "What think ye of Christ?" It is needless to state that the evangelist has been heard at his best in these meetings. He feels that he is dealing with practical, keen business men, and has to reach their hearts through their heads. His reasoning was of the closest, and everything advanced was supported by Scripture reference.

During the first five addresses, Dr. Pentecost has had the hall filled to its utmost capacity. He has had listening to him many of our leading merchants (men not often seen at an evangelistic meeting), and it is within the mark to say that, for the three-quarters of an hour the meeting has lasted, he has kept his audience spell-bound. No one leaves till the Benediction is pronounced. Many elderly gentlemen have been present, many of them our "merchant princes."

The subjects of the addresses last week were: "What think ye of Christ?" "What, then, will I do with Jesus, who is called Christ?" "Profit and Loss," "Godliness is Profitable," and "Christ or the Devil?" At the close of the last address, he said that the day before a gentleman in going out of the hall had said to a friend it was "impossible to live up to the high Christian standard of life set forth in these addresses and do business in Glasgow." Dr. Pentecost appealed to the gentlemen before him, and asked if that statement was not a "deliberate lie," and the majority present applauded the remark. The meetings will be continued during the present week. W. O.

THE "SHARON" CONVALESCENT HOME, Chelston, Torquay, founded by the Dowager Countess of Castlestuart, is intended for respectable working women recovering for illness or over-work, and requiring the air of Torquay. The Home is undenominational and teetotal. All applications to be made direct to the Honorary Secretary, Chelston Manor, Torquay.

SUNDAY MORNING PAPERS.—In a recent letter, Dr. Harwood Pattison, of Rochester University, U.S., says:—Referring to the English edition of The New York Herald, which is published in London on Sundays, it may be useful if I make a note of the fact that the strongest objection felt here against Sunday papers is by no means that they are printed on that day. But they are sold, bought, and read on Sunday. They are the staple of Sunday morning literature with many who go from reading them to attend some church service. Nothing can be more demoralising. The average Sunday paper is about as bad a preparation for the average Sunday service as can be found anywhere. In a vast number of instances these papers furnish the excuse for remaining at home from church, and so violate the true Sabbath idea, which I understand to be rest and healthful change of occupation. There is, I am told, only one Sunday newspaper in Canada.

Y.M.C.A. ANNIVERSARIES.

WEST-END BRANCH.

The branch of the Y.M.C.A. at Burlington Hall, Savile-row, Regent-street, celebrated their forty-second anniversary on Thursday evening, last week. The report presented by Mr. John Pearce, the secretary, spoke of good work done during the year, which is bound to have lasting effects; the ordinary evangelistic services, Bible-classes, &c., and the living testimony of the members in their houses of business has borne fruit to the glory of God.

Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, referred to various social evils of our day, earnestly counselling young men to lay hold of the Rock of Salvation, and made an earnest call for renewed activity in carrying on the work. After a few words by Mr. Edmund S. Hanbury, and the Hon. Hamilton Tollemache, Rev. E. A. Stuart, of Holloway, delivered an address. He made some strong remarks on the gambling curse, and affectionately warned young men to be aware of the rationalistic tendency of the age, closing with an earnest Gospel appeal to the unconverted. Mr. Grenfell Williams spoke of the joy in the Christian service and recommended all to put their trust in Christ whom to know is life eternal.

FINSBURY PARK.

The tenth annual meeting of this Association was held on the 26th ult., when the chair was taken by Mr. J. McCann. From the printed report which was circulated, we gather that the work of the Association has been well maintained during the past year. Fifty-seven members and twenty-three associates have been received during the year, and the number of names on the roll now stands at 328.

After singing and prayer, Mr. R. Howard Hinson, the hon. sec., made a short statement with reference to the object of the Association. Whatever auxiliary efforts might be put forth, the supreme object in all its agencies was the conversion of young men. The treasurer (Mr. J. L. Ackland) made the financial statement, which showed receipts, £787, expenditure, £769. The small deficit of £12 was being met by a special effort among the young men. In connection with the debt liquidation fund, an amount of £719 has been raised during the year so that the debt of £1380 had been reduced to £661.

The Chairman dwelt in his speech on the importance of a right use of leisure time. He was glad that the Association was calculated to be so helpful to young men in this particular. He urged the Association to take a firm stand in regard to Sunday observance. He felt it necessary to sound a note of warning, for a tendency to misuse the Sunday was observable even among professedly Christian young men.

Dr. Duncan then spoke on "Essentials to Success." Rev. A. G. Gimson advocated enthusiasm in the physical and intellectual departments of the work; but urged that above all attention should be given to the Bible-classes, which ought to be the backbone of every Association. An appeal for donations in aid of the debt-fund was made by the treasurer (Mr. Ackland), who generously promised to give 50 per cent. on all contributions that evening. About £60 was raised.

A CRÈCHE FOR SOHO.—Rev. W. T. Gracehall, of Copenhagen-street, Rev. E. Wilson—I have much pleasure, in connection with our East London work amongst the poor, in asking your kind help for a Crèche for poor children in Soho. A kind friend has promised £50 towards the cost of building, but we have to raise £100 more before we can proceed with the work. It is the only Crèche in Soho, and will supply a long-felt want. I am sure the readers of THE CHRISTIAN will thoroughly sympathise with our new effort.

Letters to the Editor.

MODERN MEDICAL MISSIONS.

Dear Sir,—I am very sorry that Dr. Chambers should have been misled as to the meaning of my letter of Feb. 22. Of course, my meaning was this, "All the medical cures achieved in modern medical missions have been and are being achieved equally successfully by the children of this world." Having been for four years at work as a member of the London Medical Prayer Union, I have heard enough from medical missionaries to know that this is very generally admitted to be the case.—Yours, Graham Wilmott Brooke.

Shortlands, Kent.

THE RAILWAYS AND THE LORD'S DAY.

Dear Sir.—It may interest your readers to learn that we have recently canvassed the shareholders of the Midland and Eastern Counties Railway Company, and are now canvassing the shareholders of the London, Brighton and South Coast Railway, to obtain the passing of resolutions at the next meeting of proprietors against the cheap Sunday excursion and other traffic. I would gladly receive communications from Mr. Pidduck and others. It is true that Mr. Pidduck's suggestion embraces more than would be within the perview of this Society, but we will give him all the help we can in our proper sphere?

It would help us greatly if all shareholders who wish to see overwork and Sunday work dealt with, would send me their names and addresses, with the character and amount of their stock, or, indeed, without this latter item.

We are fighting an uphill battle for our Railwaymen, and need all possible help from Christian shareholders.—I am, &c., John Gritton, D.D.

20, Bedford-street, Strand, W.C.

"A POISONED BOOK."

Sir.—Under this heading you draw attention, in an editorial article, to the translation of the treatise of St. Basil on the Holy Spirit. It is difficult to fix the meaning, with any degree of precision, of poisoned, when used in this connection. If, however, you wish to insinuate that I have, either in the text or in the notes, misrepresented my author, I shall be glad if you will cite instances of my so doing. It is possible that the ambiguous word is no more than a rhetorical fire-work, and that the writer of your article would be the last person to desire that its meaning should be clearly defined.

No competent modern authority, as Mr. Lovett with truth implies, would deny that section 66 is the genuine work of St. Basil, and as for my notes thereon, with the exception of one, which was critical, they were so purely historical that it is marvellous how any person not utterly devoid of even an antiquarian interest could have objected to them. Your article, apparently, would have a translator not only put his author before the public, but at the same time with more or less of pious fervour express his own views as to his author's opinions. I respectfully submit that it was no part of my work to sit in judgment on St. Basil.

You say that I have "for many years been closely associated with the ritualistic party." It is true that both at Oxford and elsewhere I have been proud to number among my friends some of the leading members of that very energetic and successful party, and many of its rank and file. Still, in forming my own opinions I have tried to be as impartial as I was in presenting St. Basil in an English dress.—Your obedient servant.

Geo. Lewis, Vicar of Dodderhill.

[As to whether Mr. Lewis has misinterpresented his author is a question hardly worth considering, in view of the fact that, in his notes on section 66, he has altogether failed to vindicate pure Christianity. We contend that when a book which is generally speaking good contains erroneous teaching on certain points, it is the duty of an editor to bring such points to the light of Divine revelation, and discriminate between the false and the true. Mr. Lewis did not address himself to this important task, and the last paragraph of his letter evidently supplies the reason why. But we really have no quarrel with Mr. Lewis. He could only edit according to his views. Our contention is that an evangelical Society should not put books into the hands of confessedly Ritualistic editors.—Ed.]

"HOCUS."

Sir,—I have read the remarks in The Christian of February 15, page 8, in which you allude to "the hollow imposture with which the Romish hierarchy are seeking to hoodwink and hocus this and other nations," and I should wish to call attention to the derivation and apt significance of that word "Hocus." In performing the Roman Mass the priests say, Hoc est corpus, and they teach that the bread, thereupon, instantly and actually becomes the "Living Body" of Christ, and offer it Divine worship and adoration, and even carry it about in procession to receive divine honours, as the Host, or "Living Victim," "Christ the Lord." But our forefathers, not having any belief in this conjuration, called the ceremony a "hocus pokus," which in short becomes "hocus," or more mildly, "hoax."

And this "hoax" is really the foundation of all "Romanism," and its imitation, "Ritualism"; and the gains obtained by "masses for the dead and the living" are the great source of all the wealth and influence of the Romish priesthood, for "what will not a man give to save his own soul," or that of a loved departed relative, if the man can once be made to believe this "hoax"? For it must be borne in mind that the Romish priests claim to be the only ones that can accomplish this conjuration. The priests well know that by "this craft they have their wealth," and whenever there is any "danger of this craft being set at nought," they are, of course, "full of wrath," and create a continuous uproar and disturbance, like the "worshippers of the great goddess Diana of the Ephesians" (Acts xix.).—Yours, &c., A Layman.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a mission in Rowington parish, Warwickshire, from March 9 to 18, to be conducted by Mr. John M. McAuliffe and Rev. F. Brodie.——For blessing on meetings being held at Monkton, Ayrshire, March 3 to 12, conducted by Mr. M. E. Steedman.——For blessing on services at the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Ickleton, Cambs., from March 11 to 15. ——For blessing on a mission at Lonesomeford, Warwick, March 9 to 18, by Mr. John McAuliffe.

LONDON LODGING-HOUSES.—Workers in connection with the East London Evangelisation Society and London Lodging-house Mission visited Tuiton-street, Westminster, on Sunday last, when upwards of a hundred inmates had a free breakfast, provided by the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. Cook, the proprietors. After the repast, the Gospel was preached to a goodly congregation of men, who would not otherwise hear it. This house is one of thirteen of the same class in Westminster, which are visited by friends of the Mission named. The director of the Mission is Mr. J. Harvey, 29, Senrab-street, Stepney.

A NEEDY CORNER.—In many a country village aggressive work for God is sustained, though with difficulty, on account of severe agricultural depression. Such is the case with a valuable work in a country village in Essex, where a lady, once living in affluence, spends her life for the good of her poorer neighbours. It used to be a joy and privilege to the lady in question to bear all the expense of the work, but now, through depreciation in land and other causes, she is entirely dependent upon voluntary help for its support. Gospel and temperance work is actively carried on. At the present time £100 would be an immense boon. Mr. Leite Rosas, 42, Kensington Park Gardens, W., will gladly furnish further details.

AFRICA FOR CHRIST.—The steady growth of interest in the work of African evangelisation on the American continent is, indeed, very cheering to witness. A few months ago, The African Mission Herald, a monthly paper, was started as the official organ of the African Mission of the Baptist General Association of the Western States and Territories. The price is fifty cents per annum, and it is edited by Rev. T. L. Johnson, who may be addressed, Post-office box, 678, Chicago. With the present year a more comprehensive monthly publication, costing a dollar per annum, was commenced, The African News, the organ of Bishop William Taylor's work in the Dark Continent. The January issue contained a portrait of the Bishop, and a good deal of information about him and his labours in various parts of the world. Bishop Taylor hopes to send contributions to the pages of his magazine every month. Friends and correspondents must address the associate editor, Dr. T. B. Welch, Vineland, New Jersey, U.S.A.

HIGHLANDERS IN LONDON.

The presence in the Metropolis of the venerable Dr. Aird, of Creich, Moderator of the Free Church of Scotland, was made the occasion of an interesting little gathering of Scotch folk from the far north, last week, at the Caledonian Christian Club. The good Doctor bears his years right well, and wears his honours meekly. His homely talk was heard with great interest and delight. If his locks are scant, his heart is still youthful, and his warm words of commendation with respect to the value of the club to friendless young people from Scotland were well merited. When we mention the fact that Dr. Aird has not visited London since 1833, it will be seen that, like the good Shunammite of old, he loves to dwell among his own people. He preached in Gaelic, and also in English, on Sunday last at Whitfield Presbyterian Church, Drury-lane.

At the meeting in the Caledonian Club, suitable words were also spoken by Mr. Allan, of Aros (Mull), Major Swanson, of the 74th Highlanders (a Caithness man), Mr. Colin Young, and Mr. Arthur Robertson, both of Inverness. Mr. Robertson, as our readers know, is the energetic secretary of the Club, which is in Southampton-street, Bloomsbury, and is a centre of varied effort on behalf of all Scotch people in this great city, who stand in need of help.

HELPING ONE ANOTHER.

The "Help One Another Society," in connection with Hoxton Hall, is the embodiment of an admirable idea. As Mr. Shorey remarked at its annual meeting, on Monday evening, there is unimpeachable authority for its operations in the Scripture dictum, "No man liveth to himself." The members of this Society however, are women. The men have a "Help Myself Society"—very good in its way, but on a lower plane, we think.

The "Help One Another" meeting on Monday was in every way delightful. The members and their friends mustered in strength, and seemed thoroughly to enjoy the diversified programme. That warm-hearted and unfailing friend of every good work, especially of Hoxton Hall work, Mr. W. I. Palmer, of Reading, came and presided over the meeting; he also brought with him some Reading friends, who contributed to the evening's tale of speech and song. The speeches, which we have not space to particularise, were all full of telling points, and well calculated to strengthen conviction and to stimulate zeal in the total abstinence cause. These words of good cheer were plentifully sandwiched with well-rendered music from various kind lady friends. In her brief but very appropriate address Mrs. Noble, the president of the Society, congratulated the members on the good work they were sustaining and urged them to press forward still further. Regrets were cordially expressed by several speakers at the absence, through illness, of Mr. William Noble.

The report submitted by Mrs. Howell, the active working superintendent, was full of encouraging facts, and bright with "the eloquence of hope." The women are not only finding out that they are better without their "little drop," but they are persuading others to join the ranks. It was reported that only two members out of some two hundred had finally relapsed from their pledges during the year. Mr. Palmer and others pointed out that the field of temperance effort among East-end women is very great; so it will be a long time, we fear, before this "Help One Another Society" finds its occupation gone.

The Book World.

A Model Missionary.

Stephen Hislop. By George Smith, C.I.E., LL.D. John Murray. The subject of this biography is described on the title-page as "Pioneer Missionary and Naturalist in Central India, from 1844 to 1863." For fourteen years he toiled in the plains of India before he could be induced to return home for rest and change. For eight of these years he enjoyed the companionship and help of Robert Hunter, but for the remaining six he was alone. After his brief furlough he returned to his beloved work, which, however, ended all too soon in our human judgment. In crossing a heavily swollen stream, both he and his horse were submerged. The riderless horse told the story, and the rider himself was shortly afterwards discovered with turf grasped in each hand—significant of the struggle for life. His Bible in one pocket, and trophies from the excavations of the day in the other, were characteristic of his twofold career. As a missionary, Mr. Hislop deserves to rank with Livingstone in Africa, and Judson in Burmah. His difficulties were hardly inferior, his dangers were frequent, yet his success was most encouraging. Many of the narratives of conversion indicate a fearless confession of Christ, and a readiness to suffer for his name, reminding the reader of New Testament times. Nagpoor and the district have need to thank God for such a faithful and devoted life. His character was as beautiful as it was heroic. Every reader must be the better for contact with him. We commend the book as full of instruction, and calculated to inspire others by its excellently written record of so devoted and useful a life.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Anecdotes on Bible Texts: The Gospel according to St. Mark. By J. L. Nye. 1s. Sunday School Union. Many of the anecdotes are in a high degree illustrative of Scripture teaching, and the book will prove of great value to teachers and preachers. This volume completes the New Testament series.

Bible Chronology and Dictionary. By W. T. Lynn. G. Stoneman. A compact and useful volume. The principal events recorded in the Old and New Testaments are arranged under their probable respective dates. There is also a geographical dictionary of places, and an appendix on some European translations of the Bible.

Vital Truths and Opposing Errors. 2s. 6d. Kensit. In the words of Holy Scripture, Romish error is exposed and evangelical truth set forth, by "Clericus Anglicanus." Dr. W. Cust Gwynne, in editing the work, has added some cogent notes, and many weighty testimonies bearing on Ritualism. Evangelical members of the Church of England will specially appreciate this book.

Hell: Words from the Orthodox Side. 1s. W. H. Howe, 38, Old Jewry, E.C. Dean Goulburn writes an introduction to this anonymous pamphlet. The unscriptural character of Universalism is easily shown, but the author's assumptions as to "the intermediate state" exhibit a decided tendency on his part to go beyond what is clearly revealed.

Scripture Animals. By the late Rev. Dr. Newton, of Philadelphia. 2s. 6d. Here are sixteen sermons to children by one who was pre-eminently qualified to interest the young. By means of natural history information and a large number of anecdotes about animals important lessons are enforced in a manner specially calculated to attract and instruct the little ones. The book is worthy of cordial commendation, and forms a capital presentation volume. (Nisbet.)

The Case for Total Abstinence. By Wm. J. Lacey. National Temperance Publication Depôt. A most exhaustive. yet succinct statement of the case for total abstinence. It is a library condensed. The author has omitted no phase of the question from the range of his inquiry. He has collated a vast number of facts and testimonies of the most important character, and has presented them in a clear, forcible, and interesting style. Popular fallacies concerning alcohol are well exposed; the moral and religious aspects of the question are stated in a convincing manner. We trust the book may find a large circle of readers, and anticipate that it will do good work for the cause of total abstinence.

GREAT NATIONAL EVILS.

No more important meeting was held in the entire kingdom on Tuesday afternoon last than that which assembled at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate-street Without, to plead with God for the mitigation or entire removal of the sin of impurity from the British Empire. The meeting was the first of a series to be held in the same building, on successive Tuesdays, to awaken the Christian conscience, and encourage prayer to God against great national sins. The movement is undenominational, and has the sympathy of many prominent workers in London and elsewhere.

Mr. R. C. Morgan presided over the meeting, which was characterised by much earnestness. The spirit of prayer was manifest, and the burden of petition was definite. Mr. B. Broomhall, in a brief address, read an outspoken article from The Echo, showing the great need for purer living and nobler thinking among high and low throughout the land. Other friends also spoke of various evils. On the one hand, parents were urged to be increasingly jealous in the bringing up of their children, boys as well as girls; and, on the other hand, the Church was enjoined to rise to her high calling, and show herself holy, so as to constitute a standing rebuke to impurity and other open sins. The season was one of blessing to those present. Important and far-reaching results are confidently expected from this united waiting upon God.

STREET BOYS' GRATITUDE.—A few days ago a draft for £108 15s. was sent to Mr. Egan, of the Boys' Home, 95, Southwark-street, S.E., by boys rescued from the streets and sent out to Canada by that institution. This money was given voluntarily by them out of their own earnings as a "surprise gift," to help towards the expenses of a party of 100 which will start in a few weeks to fill carefully selected openings across the Atlantic. The cost of outfit, passage, &c., is £10 in each case.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—It is proposed to open the new Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, on Thursday, March 28, when meetings will be held, afternoon and evening. A number of gentlemen who have at heart the extension of evangelistic effort have promised to attend. On preceding evenings in the same week prayer-meetings will be held, and it is sincerely hoped that the opening will be in the highest sense auspicious, and that many will be born from above in the new hall. The director of the mission is Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, 164, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

MR. RICHARD WEAVER, the well-known evangelist, is, we regret to hear, passing through the furnace of affliction. For nearly a month he has been unable to leave his house, where his daughter and niece have also been lying ill. In a recent letter to a friend, he says:—"I need the prayers of God's people, for things seem very dark at times. But my hope is in the Lord, whose promises never fail. I feel as if my labours of preaching the Gospel have come to an end. I suffer both with my heart and head, and the doctor says I am not fit to be alone; but I tell him I cannot be alone, for Christ has promised never to leave me." We understand that practical sympathy with Mr. Weaver would be very opportune at the present time. His address is: Fallibroome, Macclesfield.

SWANAGE, DORSET.—On Monday, Feb. 25, an audience, filling the Congregational Schoolroom, listened with rapt and eager attention to accounts given by Miss Mary H. Steer and one of her helpers, Miss A. Smedmore, of the Rescue and Preventive work carried on in the East of London at the Bridge of Hope Mission. The rector of Swanage, Rev. T. A. Gurney, presided; the Wesleyan and Congregational ministers were also present. We learn that good and earnest work is being done in this retired, but exceedingly pretty, seaside resort, in the directions both of temperance and social purity, by united effort. The clergy and ministers are at one on these questions of social reform, and it is to this accord and co-operation that the encouraging character of the meetings held this winter is chiefly due.

Evangelistic Notes.

Dulverton, Somerset. — Mr. John Elliott and Mr. James Scroggie have been preaching in the Gospel Hall during the past month. It is believed that true and lasting blessing will be the result.

Messrs. Hyde and Stevenson, who have for some time been conducting Gospel meetings in various parts of Ireland, purpose to hold a mission in the Metropolitan Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, from March 17 to 24.

Paisley Lodging-House Mission.—A fruitful series of special meetings has been held in connection with the common lodging-houses here. Every night souls have professed to be born again, and backsliders have been restored.

Great Haseley, Oxon.—Mission services have been conducted in the Congregational Chapel here for eight days by Rev. E. Lee, Congregational minister, of Billinghurst, Sussex. As a result of his visit thirty members have been added to the church.

Darlington.—An eight days' mission has been conducted by Rev. T. C. Tatham, vicar of Willington, and Mr. H. Cook, of Stockton, in St. Paul's Mission-room, Darlington. We thank God for souls saved and Christians strengthened. S. L.

Dr. W. L. Munhall, after his mission at Dr. Talmage's Tabernacle, went to La Crosse, Wisconsin, a town of 30,000 inhabitants, for three weeks' services. Dr. Munhall has arranged to conduct a Bible Conference at Ocean Grove, N.J., July 25—30, and Drs. Brooke, Pierson, Moorehead, Erdman, and others will give addresses.

Hollingworth, near Manchester. — Mr. Thomas Price, of the Borough Mission, Newcastle, held a twenty-one days' mission here, with blessed results. Mr. Price is a converted collier; his method of preaching is not unlike that of Mr. Richard Weaver, through whom he was converted. The result of the three weeks' effort is that 125 persons, of both sexes and all ages, have openly professed to accept Christ as their Saviour. J. C.

Mr. Wm. Hobbs has been conducting the services for some weeks at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, and the blessing of God has been given to this earnest testimony. Many have been awakened from the sleep of indifference, and some have professed to be new creatures in Christ Jesus. The addresses to believers have also been seasons of refreshing. God is raising up not a few of those converted at the Assembly Hall to become earnest workers in other places.

Christchurch, N.Z.—A corespondent here, writing with respect to aggressive evangelistic work, says:—"During the summer season, we take advantage of the lovely fine evenings, more especially Sunday, for open-air work. We have the advantage of being able to conduct services in the centre of the city, in the Cathedral-square, which, being in the heart of the traffic, makes it very suitable for collecting a congregation when the services in the churches are finished. Some of our friends address the meetings and give testimonies which have been owned of the Lord, and we rarely close one without being allowed to see souls for our hire. After the open-air service we invite the people to our hall across the street. We also meet during the week at the mission hall."

Mission at Ramsgate.—A general Church of England mission, of ten days' duration, has been held in the various churches of Ramsgate and St. Lawrence. The mission opened on Saturday, February 16, with special services for the workers, in most of the churches of the district. At St. Luke's Church (Vicar, Rev. J. B. Whiting), more than forty services were held during the week before last. As in the other districts, both clergy and laymen laboured literally from morning till night amongst that more lowly class of people in whose interests the mission was more particularly undertaken. At Christ Church (Vicar, Rev. J. E. Brennan), morning services were held for the deepening of the spiritual life, and a series of thoughtful addresses were delivered; but the evangelistic service in the evening, with the after-meeting, was by far the most striking feature of the mission. On each occasion from 900 to 1000 assembled, and as the week progressed the number steadily increased. On the Thursday night the whole assembly remained for the after-meeting. During the singing of successive hymns the missioner and the clergy moved about the church, giving spiritual help and comfort to those who appeared to need it; and a large number have expressed deep thankfulness for spiritual benefits received.

Mr. Herbert Yeasey, of Torquay, recently conducted six weeks' Gospel services in Barnstaple and its neighbourhood. Several have professed conversion, and Christians have been greatly blessed.

Evangelistic meetings are being held every night during the week in the Congregational Church, Cambuslang. The attendance hitherto has been very encouraging, and blessing has been received.

Gospel services have just been brought to a close at the Baptist Chapel, Poulner, near Ringwood, by Mr. Lloyd, of Broadstone, colporteur. The meetings were well attended, and the power of the Holy Ghost was manifest.

Leaf Hall, Eastbourne. — An interesting eight days' mission, accompanied with very much blessing, has been closed in this place. The mission was conducted by Mr. John M. McAuliffe, accompanied by Mr. Thomas R. Fothergill and other friends.

Mr. J. M. Scroggie has held a week's evangelistic services at Rutherglen, N.B., which have been attended by much blessing. Many professed to be "born again." Mr. Scroggie commenced a series of meetings in the St. Mary's Free Church, Govan, on Sabbath last.

Nelson, Lancashire.—During the last fortnight evangelistic meetings have been conducted in the Manchester-road Congregational Church, by Mr. George Green. The attendance has been good, and the evangelist's work has been greatly blessed, many having professed to decide for Christ.

Dromore, co. Down, has been stirred by evangelistic services which Rev. R. Crawford Johnson has been conducting in the Methodist church for the past fortnight. There have been immense congregations; hnndreds have waited to be conversed with in the after-meetings, and many have decided for the Lord.

Altrincham.—Mr. Henry Lakin has held a very successful fortnight's mission in the Baptist Church. The services have been largely attended, and a considerable number of persons have professed to decide for Christ. Believers have been much refreshed. Mr. Lakin labours during the next three weeks at Doncaster.

Mr. John W. Bennett, of Southampton, has conducted a mission (Wesleyan) at Nulborne Port, Somerset, which resulted in many professed conversions; others testified to having received a deepening of their Christian experience. A united mission followed at Shaftesbury in connection with two societies of Primitives; this also was crowned with blessing.

Grosmont, Mon.—The Lord has been pleased to visit this secluded village with wonderful blessing. The revival commenced with a visit from Mr. Frank Sloggett, of Dowlais, and has continued for the past six weeks. Each night has seen some decided for Christ; amongst those who are rejoicing in a new-found Christ are some of the most unlooked-for of the neighbourhood.

Longhope.—A work of grace has been going on lately in this Gloucestershire village, Mr. Opie Rodway having been instrumental in awakening interest in eternal things by meetings held in January last. Pastor C. L. Gordon writes:—"Both young and adults are exercised about their state before God. Some, we have reason to believe, are truly changed, and others are nigh nnto the kingdom."

Mr. Charles Inglis has been holding special evangelistic services at Auckland Hall, West Norwood, which have been attended with great blessing. Believers have been refreshed, and nearly each night some professed to decide for Christ. Mr. Inglis has also conducted a series of Gospel meetings at Hythe, that have been owned of God in the conversion of sinners and the spiritual revival of believers.

Mr. J. Crofton Rainey has held a month's special services in Wellington, Som., and neighbourhood, including West Buckland and Rockwell Green. Much prayer had been offered on behalf of the mission for several weeks previously, and great blessing has resulted. Scores have professed faith in Christ, particularly amongst young men and young women, and the children of believing parents. It is generally felt that such a work of revival has not been experienced in this locality for years. H. A. T.

Rev. Jas. Kirkwood has held during the past month successful evangelistic services in Rathkeale, Boirisokane, and Bandon, Ireland. In each place much interest was awakened by the meetings.

The united mission at Loughborough has been one of unusual fruitfulness and refreshing to the churches. The two Baptist and the Congregational churches worked heartily together. During the fourteen days of the mission services were held by Rev. R. Balgarnie at Woodgate Chapel (Rev. C. Vick, pastor); Baxter Gate Chapel (Rev. R. M. Julian, pastor); Ashley-place Chapel (Rev. H. T. Walker, pastor). These services were largely attended. Meetings of mothers and working men were also held. A Bible-reading was given in the afternoon. At the closing service for testimony Mr. Julian reported that 250 persons had professed decision for Christ, most of them being young men and women belonging to various Bible-classes. In one case the teacher had had the joy of seeing the whole class in the inquiry-room. About 100 letters were sent in for special prayer, or thanksgiving for prayers answered. It was also stated that the blessing had not been confined to one or two denominations, but the Church of England, Wesleyan, Methodist Free Church, Unitarian, and Roman Catholic had also representatives whose names had been handed in.

Rev. W. Haslam, M.A., will conduct a ten days mission, from March 23 to April 2, in St. John's Church New North-road, Hoxton, London.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following Missions have been arranged for the month of March. It is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer by our readers:—Rev. W. Hay Aitken: Mar. 9 to 22, St. George's, Bolton, Lancashire; Mar. 24 to April 9, St. Mary Magdalene, Peckham Rye. Rev. C. I. Atherton: Mar. 10, 17, 24, and 31, St. George's, Clyst, Devon, and Exmouth; Mar. 12, 19, and 26, St. Luke's, Torquay, and St. George's, Stonehouse; Mar. 13, 20, and 22, Stoke Damerel, Devonport, East Teignmouth, and Totnes; Mar. 14 and 28, Heavitree, Exeter. Rev. R. Catterall: to Mar. 12, Parish Church, Eccles, Manchester; Mar. 16 to 26, St. Thomas', Pendleton; Mar. 30 to April 9, St. Thomas', Leefield. Rev. J. Cullin: Mar. 23 to April 2, Herne Bay, Kent. Rev. A. R. D'Arcy: to Mar. 13, St. Andrew's, Eccles; Mar. 16 to 24, Lyng, Norwich; Mar. 30 to April 14, Ripley, Derby. Rev. W. Haslam: to Mar. 12, Consett, Durham; Mar. 23 to 31, St. John's, Hoxton. Rev. J. H. Haslam: Mar. 10, St. Mary's, Chatham; Mar. 13, St. Mark's, Reigate; Mar. 10 to 27, St. John's, Angell Town, Brixton. Rev. G. Howell: Mar. 27 to 31: Hope, Mold. Rev. W. Hayton: Mar. 9 to 18, Farlam, Carlisle. Rev. R. D. Monro: Mar. 12, 19, 26, Yeovil; Mar. 13, 20, 27, Parish Church, Taunton; Mar. 14, 21, 28, Long Ashton; Mar. 8, 15, 22, 29, St. Andrew's, Walcot, Bath. Dr. Morris: Mar. 10 to 25, Holy Trinity, Newport, Mon.; Mar. 31 to April 15, Birkdale, Southport. Canon Pennefather: Mar. 12, 19, 26, and April 2 and 9, Whitley, Northumberland; Mar. 13, 20, 27, and April 3 and 10, St. George's, Newcastle; Mar. 14, 21, 28, and April 4 and 11, St. Paul's, Alnwick; Mar. 8, 15, Holy Saviour's, Tynemouth; Mar. 22, Walker, Newcastle; Mar. 29, Simonburn, Humshaugh. Rev. C. Pilkington: to Mar. 12, St. Frideswide's, Oxford. Rev. J. Stephens: Mar. 9 to 18. Lyddington, Swindon.

SCENES IN PALESTINE.

On Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings last week three eminently interesting and instructive lectures on Egypt and the Holy Land were delivered in the Gospel Hall, Southgate-road, Wood Green, by Mr. G. H. Lord, who has recently returned from a tour in the Bible Lands. The platform was so arranged as to present quite an Oriental appearance, and several friends robed in characteristic Eastern habiliments, besides a large number of photographic views, paintings of scenery and numerous curios which were on exhibition, greatly helped to illustrate the lectures. Mr. Lord has a pleasing manner of dealing with his subject, and of blending Gospel truth with his descriptions of Eastern life and customs, and as an aid to the fuller understanding of the Scriptures, his lectures are extremely useful. They are as entertaining to children as they are instructive to adults. Mr. G. H. Lord's address is Florence Villa, Buckhurst Hill, Essex.

THE SEAMEN OF THE ROYAL NAVY.—Miss Agnes Weston's important work among the seamen of the Royal Navy will in future be described in a quarterly magazine, entitled, Jottings from my Log. The first issue of this paper, just published, contains much that cannot but interest seamen and those who are concerned in their welfare. The illustrations are as excellent as the references to past endeavour are full of promise. This new venture will be forwarded post free to any address for 2s. 6d. a year, sent to Publishing Office, Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth.

Northern Light.

One of the attractive features of the forenoon service of White Memorial Church is the repeating of Scripture texts by the boys and girls of the congregation. Thirty-one children recently gained book prizes for proficiency. Spiritual child-life is eagerly nutured in this congregation. In 1885, the first year of the church, the Sunday-school had only 120 names on the roll; now there are upwards of 800.

The Missionary Society of Aberdeen University gives a good account of both home and foreign mission work. Glasgow can honestly report happily on all matters save a very important one, the financial. St. Andrews and Edinburgh are also satisfactory.

Southern friends will be sorry to learn that the Scottish Missions in Nyassaland are in a critical condition. Dr. Alexander Hetherwick, from the Church of Scotland Mission at Domasi, considers that, if Portugal is allowed to take possession of Nyassaland, she will hinder the preaching of the Gospel, nullify missionary effort, and introduce the drink traffic, which, in the doctor's opinion, would be even worse for Africa than the infamous slave trade. At a recent meeting in Edinburgh it was resolved to lay before her Majesty's Government the necessity for missionary effort having undisturbed freedom in Nyassaland.

There has just been issued in Glasgow, the city of the Brigade's birth, a capital little paper called The Boys' Brigade Gazette. It is published for the use of the officers by the authority of the executive committee. Its opening number contains a full report of the addresses delivered at the recent first public meeting, where the favourable opinions of men whose judgments are weighty, and who viewed the movement from different standpoints of life, were heard concerning this mighty lever for the upraising of boyhood to a healthy, happy, Christian platform. "The boy," said one speaker, "is a modern discovery." That is too true, but the Boys' Brigade committee mean to keep hold of their prize, and are endeavouring to lead boys to Christ by boyish methods.

There is a Mission to Italians in Glasgow. Miss Scott, a minister's daughter, and some other ladies, do much towards brightening the lives of these picturesque aliens from Italy. Sunny hearts do abound in Glasgow, perhaps to make up for the prevalence of leaden skies. To celebrate the "Festa," given annually towards the close of the winter evening-school session, an entertainment has just been given to these Italian folk. By the aid of lime light views they were taken back to sunny Italy in spirit, while the bright Italian flags which decorated the hall made them forget it was but a dream.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh commenced a three weeks' mission in the Free Church, Pathhead, Kirkcaldy, on Sunday, March 3.

Addresses to Christians are to be given in the Glasgow Christian Institute on Sunday afternoons. "Complete Deliverance" is the title of the first lecture.

THE "CHRISTIAN" BLIND RELIEF SOCIETY is now granting relief to persons residing in twenty different counties in England. Fresh applications are constantly being made, so that they need all the help they can possibly secure.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

During the month of January Rev. Professor Cassel, missionary of the London Jews' Society in Berlin, baptized in Christ Church two Jews on their profession of faith in Jesus Christ.

Rev. W. T. McCormick, vicar of St. Matthew's, Brighton, baptized an old Jew, eighty years of age, on Sunday week. He has been under instruction, and quite broke down at the time of his baptism; he said afterwards, "I felt quite overcome when I thought of my having been in darkness for nearly eighty years."

Rev. Gilbert S. Karney, of Hampstead, has been appointed vicar of Melton Mowbray, in the room of the late Rev. Dr. Colles. Mr. Karney is a well-known and widely esteemed evangelical clergyman. He has rendered signal service to the cause of foreign missions in his capacity of secretary to the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society, and as one of the missioners of the recent C.M.S. "Winter Mission" to India.

St. Mary's Church, Whitechapel, has five Scripture readers, a mission woman, a parish nurse, six volunteer lay readers, and two hundred and eighty-six other unpaid workers, male and female, "assisting in various ways in spreading a knowledge of the Lord Jesus amongst the people." The whole staff, with three exceptions, are "genuine Whitechapel men and women." The same church maintains a missionary in Equatorial Africa, a lodging-house mission, and a large number of other good works.

Rev. James Weller, curate of St. Nicholas Church, Brighton, has lately commenced giving Sunday afternoon addresses on Christian evidences to young men in the Oddfellows' Hall. The subject of his first discourse, on January 20, was, "The causes of unbelief"; on this occasion the hall was crowded, and the attendance has been well maintained on each succeeding Sunday. In this effort Mr. Weller has the hearty sympathy of many Christians, and he has been encouraged by seeing definite results from the services.

PRESBYTERIAN.

At the annual meeting of Grange-road Church, Birkenhead, it was reported that fifty-two had been added to the communion during the past year. At the two mission stations connected with the congregation there is much earnest work being done, with many gratifying tokens of success.

Mr. Robert Stark has held a profitable series of evangelistic services in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Canterbury. The attendance throughout the week was good, and Mr. Stark's earnest and attractive presentations of Gospel truth were listened to night after night with an ever-increasing interest.

METHODIST.

Rev. W. N. Barleycorn, native missionary from West Africa, is addressing meetings in the Primitive Methodist churches, and arousing interest in the cause of missions to the heathen.

Rev. Thomas Champness's Joyful News movement for employing lay evangelists (says The Methodist Times) is winning the adhesion of the influential laity, as well as of the great mass of the Methodist people, more and more every day.

Rev. Dr. Moulton, of the Leys School, Cambridge, has launched a proposal for the establishment of a Methodist "Toynbee Hall" in London, to be more distinctly associated with definite Christian work, however, than is the case at Toynbee Hall.

A gracious revival has broken out in the Wesleyan Sunday-school at Stoneyholme, Burnley. Special prayer-meetings were held on consecutive evenings during two weeks, with the result that over twenty, all young people in the school, professed conversion.

BAPTIST.

Dr. Clifford's proposal for a "forward movement" in London has not, says The Baptist, been ignored by the Baptist Union, but will probably be dealt with at the forthcoming spring meetings.

The pastor of the church at Newport-road, Middlesbrough (Rev. J. Fleming Shearer), has held a series of evangelistic services, which have been fruitful in their results. Over fifty persons have professed conversion, a large proportion of these being elder scholars in the Sunday-schools.

Rev. Thomas Rutland was ordained to the work of foreign missions on Sunday week, at Westbourne-park Chapel. Mr. Rutland will be the third representative of Westbourne-park Chapel in the foreign mission field. Dr. Clifford conducted the service, giving an address on "The Religions of India and the Christianity of Christ."

On Monday, February 25, Pastor A. G. Brown's "Thankoffering Day," he was in attendance at his vestry from 7 a.m. During the day £431 1s. 4d. was deposited with him by persons who had received some spiritual blessing in connection with the Tabernacle. Four prayer-meetings were held at intervals during the day.

Rev. T. W. Medhurst has just left Portsmouth for Cardiff, after a pastorate of nearly twenty years at Lake-road Baptist Church. Mr. Medhurst's ministerial work has been very largely blessed to the winning of souls. During his pastorate 1199 have been added to the church, and he has baptized at Portsmouth 948 persons on a profession of their faith in the Lord Jesus.

CONGREGATIONAL.

During Rev. Arthur Hall's two years' ministry at Craven Chapel, Regent-street, W., 140 members have been added to the Church. The pastor, at the recent annual meeting, said that, should some other sphere be opened to him, it might now be for the interests of the church that a younger man should take his place.

Gosport Church has now 265 members, 108 of whom have been admitted during the three and a half years' pastorate of Rev. G. S. Smith. A mutual improvement society, an evangelistic association, a Christian band, Band of Hope and "Leisure Hour" working party for providing garments for the poor, are in active operation. Lodging-house services are conducted every Sunday evening.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The Friend of Missions gives an exceedingly interesting account of work done, and in prospect in the revived meeting of Oxford. Adult school, mission band, Band of Hope, and other agencies are actively employed in combating evil and doing good.

English Friends, in addition to home mission labours, are doing Christian work in India, where the mission is extending; in Madagascar and Syria blessing is resting on the workers; in China and South Africa, in spite of heathen opposition in the former, and Romish in the latter, God is helping and blessing greatly. Reports from all the fields of service are full of encouragement and open up vistas of hope, at once animating to workers abroad and helpers at home.

American Friends are constantly widening their sphere of missions. At present they are successfully working among North American Indians, where they have twelve meetings, six Bible-schools, and fifteen white and seven coloured teachers. In Alaska they are teaching and preaching Christ. In Mexico and in Jamaica the same course is successfully pursued; and in Japan and Palestine American and English Friends are united in Christian enterprise. A Japanese Quaker has been sent sixty miles in response to an appeal for a teacher, and there, as in Tokio and environs, spiritual truth is being promoted. More workers are urgently needed.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. George Bryan, who was for nearly fifty-five years vicar of Huttoft, Lincolnshire.—Rev. William Armstrong, minister of the East Free Church, Rutherglen, N.B.—Rev. G. G. Daugars, pastor-moderator of the French Protestant Church, London.—Rev. J. H. Godwin, an honorary professor in New (Congregational) College, London.—Rev. Canon A. G. Ryder, D.D., rector of St. Mary's, Donnybrook, Dublin.—Rev. John Barker, Baptist minister, of Lockwood, Yorks.—Mr. James Everitt, of Atherstone, the leader of mission work there amongst the poor, and an acceptable preacher of the Gospel. — Rev. J. Gilmour, Presbyterian minister, Omagh.—Mr. John Conn, a devoted Christian, at Castlewellan.—Miss Jane Caspari, C.M.S. missionary in Japan. —Rev. J. G. Wood, the eminent lecturer and writer on natural history.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

FRANCE.—Pastor Bersier has called a conference on the "Position and Prospects of the Reformed Church," in the American Church, 21, Rue de Berri, Champs Elysées, for Sunday afternoon, March 17. M. Bersier is Moderator of the church, and will make official statements on the work that is being accomplished.

RUSSIA continues to persecute and oppress Lutheran and other evangelical believers. A St. Petersburg pastor of high character is now awaiting his doom for having admitted a young Russian to Church fellowship. Banishment to Siberia is all but a foregone conclusion, as the pastor not only administered the Lord's Supper to the pervert from the "orthodox" faith, but was previously instrumental in his instruction in Gospel truth.

TAHITI.—A letter from Papéété, in the Journal des Missions Evangéliques, states that Ah-fat, a converted Chinaman, has determined to return to his native country, and do the work of an evangelist there. While engaged as cook in the household of Pasteur Viénst, Ah-fat found peace in Christ, and stands high in the esteem of all who know him in Tahiti. Though he can ill be spared from the South Seas, Ah-fat goes back to China with the loving benediction of those among whom he has hitherto been quietly and devotedly labouring in the Gospel, and it is hoped that much blessing will attend his message of what God has done for his soul.

A NEW MEDICAL MISSION.—Ten months ago, Mr. J. T. Morton, of London, offered to the Free Church of Scotland the salaries of a medical missionary and two native assistants for three years, to start a mission where no medical missionary had hitherto been. Dr. William Walker and his wife sailed for Bombay in the end of December to found this mission in Conjevaram, a city of forty thousand inhabitants, forty-five miles to the south-west of Madras. Conjevaram contains a thousand idol temples, and every May its shrines are visited by one hundred and fifty thousand pilgrims. The district around contains about a million of inhabitants, and is just the field for a new mission.

Pastor Th. Marzials is now so feeble that Mme. Marzials cannot leave him any length of time. The whole burden of the Orphanage and evangelistic work rests upon her. A lady of private means would find there a large field of usefulness, and relieve an overburdened worker. Mme. Marzials' address is Barnave, Drôme, France.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the Union, and take its Monthly Notes, which are different from these.

THE BOOK OF EXODUS.

THE word means "going out." The main subject is the going out of Israel from Egypt. The opening word, "Now," closely connects it with the previous book of Genesis. The two books were evidently produced by the same pen. And if any further argument were required to prove that Moses was the author, it might easily be gained from the contents of this book, which could only have been written by one who had a thorough knowledge of Egypt and Sinai, and of the internal history of that mighty struggle which preceded the Exodus. In addition to this, Luke xx. 37 is conclusive proof of Mosaic authorship.

Exodus differs from Genesis. Genesis is a book of universal history, and full of minute personal biographies, which gradually taper down to the story of Israel and Joseph. Exodus, on the contrary, is wholly taken up with the history of Israel, and the only biographical sketch is the life of Moses.

There are three great divisions of this book.

ISRAEL IN EGYPT.—Chh. i.—xii.

ISRAEL ON THE MARCH TO SINAI.—Chh. xiii.—xix.

ISRAEL AT SINAI.—Chh. xx.—xlii.

These stages correspond closely with the history of every saved soul; as well as with the history of redemption.

The great burden of this book is the object-lesson given in the Passover of redemption by blood. There was a clear division made throughout between Egypt and Israel. Upon the former fell the strokes of judgment, whilst for the other there was light, and deliverance, and salvation. And the only reason that is adduced for the distinction is that the one was sheltered from evil by the blood, whilst the other was left unprotected to bear the result of its sins. We, too, enjoy all our freedom from the curse and darkness of sin, and our emancipation into the liberty of God's children by reason of the blood (Eph. i. 7, ii. 13; Rom. iii. 25).

After redemption, there is the giving of law. We stand beneath Sinai, and learn the inability of the flesh to obey the holy law of God—an experience which drives us more earnestly to the efficacy of the precious blood as our only plea. And thus we pass into worship and fellowship, like that which Moses had with God, face to face, or which Aaron had in the Holy Place.

The imagery of this book supplies many of the metaphors in the Book of Revelation. The conflict between Israel and Egypt is that in which the saints of all ages are engaged. And God is ever calling us out of Egypt (Hos. xi. 1); the Egypt of worldly alliance; the Egypt of the fleshpots of sensual indulgence; the Egypt of mighty forms of human power. But the struggle is ever unto blood; until on the sea of glass the victors stand, having the harps of God, and sing the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb (Rev. xv. 3).

SUNDAY, MARCH 10.—Exodus III.

God's servants must spend much time alone with Him. All the learning of Egypt was not enough to equip Moses for his life-work; but he is taken to the back side of the desert. That is God's college. And all who have done anything great in the world have graduated there. Elijah at Horeb, Ezekiel at Chebar, Paul in Arabia, John in Patmos. Whenever we see a man taken by himself into such seclusion, we may be sure that a great future is in store. God's workers may take their Arts course in the world's universities, but they must take their Divinity course alone with Him.

The fire which was its own fuel (2).—Often in doing daily duty, we come on the grandest revelations of God, and it is always well to be on the outlook for them, and to turn aside to see. This burning bush has generally been taken as an emblem of the Church, existing amid persecution. But there is a deeper meaning. That fire was the evidence of the presence of God. God was there. And the lesson evidently was, that God was in the midst of Israel; and was willing to come into the life of Moses, though it might seem no worthier than the acacia shrub of the desert. And where God is, there is holiness (5). We are holy in proportion as God dwells in our hearts. The fire is an emblem of the purity and eternity of God. He is the I AM, needing no sustenance. The 6th verse was quoted by Christ as proving that men who had died were living yet (Matt. xxii. 32).

The promise of Divine deliverance (8).—Note the successive steps. "I have seen," "I have heard." "I know," "I am come down," "I will send thee." There were no merits in Israel, but urgent need. It was enough that they were his people. All else was secured to them by his own all-sufficient nature. It had seemed long to wait, but God came at length. So will it be always. The sighs and groans of chap. ii. are answered by the coming down of chap. iii. (Luke xviii. 7).

The hesitance of the human instrument (11).—How unlike the man who, forty years before, had acted with such impulsive haste (Acts vii. 23). He had learnt much since then, and most about himself, so that he was diffident of himself, nervous and timid. But there ought to be no such shrinking, when God says, "I will send thee," "I will be with thee"; and when He further describes Himself as the I AM, Jehovah. Demand whatever gift or grace you need, and God will honour the cheque which you may fill in, but which He signs.

MONDAY, MARCH 11.—Exodus IV.

This marvellous chapter describes the manner in which God dealt with the misgivings of his servant.

To his first misgiving God answers by giving him two signs. Here first we meet with that rod which was so often to be stretched out over the land of Egypt, to make a way through the deep, to bring water from the rock. Moses was but a rod, but what cannot a rod do when handled by the Almighty. When returning from preaching, Dupanloup would cast himself on the ground, and lick it with his tongue, to remind himself of his utter nothingness. Leprosy is the type of sin, and the cleansed hand indicates the marvellous power of God to cleanse and sanctify all who will yield themselves to Him, thus qualifying them for service.

To his second misgiving (10) there was a promise of exceeding beauty, which all who speak for God do well to ponder (12). It reminds us of Jer. i. 7, 8, 9; and of 1 Cor. ii. 4. Strange that we rely so much more on any natural gifts than on the Giver. If we truly understood our position, we should glory in our want of eloquence, as affording a better platform on which God should work (2 Cor. xii. 9, 10). God is willing to teach us what to say (12), and what to do (15).

To his third misgiving (13).—God gave Him his brother as an assistant. But, ah! how great the loss! On the one hand Moses lost half the honour which might have been his; on the other, he was associated with one who was often a great hindrance to him (Exod. xxxii. 35; Num. xii. 1). Humility is a lovely grace, but it is not humility when we refuse to take up work which God assigns us.

There is a mysterious incident at the close of the chapter which shows that we must be willing to put away every act of disobedience to God's law, before we can be used in his service.

TUESDAY, MARCH 12.—Exodus V.

The bondage of Israel in Egypt is an apt type of our bondage to sin. How emphatic are the allusions of Scripture in this sense (John viii. 34—36; Rom. vii. 23—25). The weary tyranny of besetting sin; the demands of Satan that we should obey him; the absence of all return for our toils; these are striking points of analogy. And, though we weep and struggle, there is no help for us unless it come from without. But this is the glad announcement of the Gospel (Luke iv. 18).

At first, the proposals of deliverance make the burden of captivity even heavier.—No straw! No minishing of the tale of bricks! The charge of idleness! Cruel beatings! Deliverance further off than ever! The darkest hour precedes the dawn. Satan raises the hue and cry over a man who is escaping, whilst he is still enough with regard to those who are safe in his power. Conviction of our need necessarily precedes deliverance.

The conflict with Pharaoh.—He was not an irreligious man, but he would not admit that Jehovah was supreme over the gods of Egypt. One design of the plagues was to convince him that He was so. And when this had been clearly proved, it became a question of his proud self-will, which would not yield to God. The plagues left him without excuse. He was conquered, but not converted.

The true way of meeting complaints and difficulties (22).—The disciples did something of the same sort (Matt. xiv. 12; Mark vi. 30). It is a great mistake to carry the anxieties and cares consequent on our doing God's will in the world. As soon might the clerk in Rothschild's bank worry about the payment by his employers of a prodigious loan. Submit thy will to the will of God. Commit thy burdens to the care of God.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 13.—Exodus VI.

This chapter should be connected with the close of the former one. Instead of reproving the petulant impatience of his servant, God bade him wait in patience for what He would do (1).

The statement of ver. 3 is, at first sight, startling, because we remember many passages in Genesis where the name occurs. But this arises from the fact that much of Genesis was composed by Moses after the Exodus, and it was natural for him to apply to God the name which was in daily use among the people at the period of writing. Some affirm that as a name Jehovah was known to the patriarchs, but that the full development of its meaning had not been exhibited. The glorious attribute of immutability especially had yet to be displayed. To the patriarchs God was the mighty El, providing for them. To the Israelites, the unchanging Jehovah, fulfilling promises after the lapse of five centuries (Mal. iii. 6). Jesus loves to the end those on whom He once sets his affection (John xiii. 1).

Notice the "I wills" of God's covenant (4). There are seven of them, besides the two "I AMs" with which the list opens and closes. This is like the new covenant of Heb. viii. We are never secure so long as aught is left to us; but when God alone is concerned, who can stay Him? How often our faith in God is hindered by physical or temporal circumstances (9).

God's inventory of his people.—Here is the making up of jewels (Mal. iii. 17). As if God were numbering his own, that not one might be left behind. Yet the principal names in this list are of men who still shrink from their work (30). What a marvel it is that God bears with us as we repeat the same mistakes, and fall so constantly into the same murmuring complaints! Is your name in his book?

THURSDAY, MARCH 14.—Exodus VII.

The plagues fell on objects that the Egyptians worshipped, and were intended to answer Pharaoh's question, Who is Jehovah? also to show God's infinite superiority. It would not have been just to punish Pharaoh with immediate overthrow in the Red Sea. There must first be given evidence enough of the glory and majesty of Him who demanded that his people should go free. The plagues occupied probably a few months, one following on the other. There is a beautiful description of them in Ps. cv. 26—36. The conflict with Pharaoh, probably the great Rameses Sesostris, whose form and face are familiar to us in those colossal representations which stand in our museums, is the emblem of a yet greater conflict, with which the Bible closes (Rev. xvii. 8, xx. 10).

The magicians.—The Apostle Paul gives us their names, and tells us that they shall have their representatives in the last days (2 Tim. iii. 1—9). This mimicry of Moses was probably the result of legerdemain, in which Orientals excel, and they were permitted to succeed (11, 22, viii. 7); but they could not go beyond a certain point (viii. 18), that the contrast might become more strikingly manifest. Is not this imitation what we see around us to-day? Satan's most successful resistance to the Gospel is in imitating the form, without the divine power.

The First Plague.—It was probably towards the end of June, when the Nile was rising. Its waters were peculiarly sweet, gave fertility to the land, and were worshipped; the blow was therefore the more crushing to sustain. Had the magicians possessed real power, they had better have removed the plague. This they could not do. It therefore suited their policy to produce something which looked like the real miracle, and probably on a very small scale. What a contrast between Egypt's river which failed, and Jehovah Himself (Isa. xxxiii. 21).

FRIDAY, MARCH 15.—Exodus VIII.

Pharaoh made four efforts at compromise. The first (25); the second (28); the third (x. 8—11); the fourth (x. 24). Every inch was thus disputed. Satan is willing for us to be religious, so long as we do not separate ourselves from the world. The one thing he dreads most of all is separation. But nothing can please God which is not clearly separate from evil. There must be three days' journey, through the waters of death, on to resurrection ground (2 Cor. vi. 17, 18).

The Second Plague.—The frog was held in honour by the Egyptians. There was a frog-headed god and goddess. Frogs were embalmed and buried in the tombs of Thebes. They now came everywhere, to the consternation of all. One frog could not do much, but when they came in myriads they were irresistible. We may accomplish by numbers and unity what would be impossible to individuals. How remarkable is man's inability to trust God. Pharaoh fixed to-morrow (10), but it would have been quite as easy for the plague to be removed on that very day. God's time is always to-day; man's to-morrow (2 Cor. vi. 2). Under the pressure of sorrow, Pharaoh was willing to yield (8), but when there was respite, he repented; and in doing so, he hardened his heart. No ice is so hard as that which freezes after a thaw.

The Third Plague.—If these were lice, it would be a serious judgment on a nation which made so much of cleanliness; if gnats, or sandflies (R.V.), the torture would be intolerable. With what small weapons can God humble the pride of man. What a remarkable confession (19).

The Fourth Plague.—It is thought by some that this word stands for the sacred beetle, the emblem of the sun. That these venerated vermin should become their tormentors, to be trodden under foot, or swept from their houses, must have been a severe infliction on the Egyptians. How beautifully Moses used his intimacy with God as an intercessor for his people (12, 29).

SATURDAY, MARCH 16.—Exodus IX.

This awful conflict between the proud will of Pharaoh and the will of God has its counterpart in the inner history of very many. Even in the case of professing Christians, there is often a terrific struggle in respect to some demand to which they refuse to assent; and many of the sorrows which befall us are sent in order to wean us from our idols, to vindicate the power of God, and to lead us to repentance. So long as we stand out, we bring nothing but anguish and disaster upon ourselves, and all connected with us. Up to this chapter we are told that Pharaoh hardened his heart; here we learn that God hardened Pharaoh's heart (12). Here there is attributed to God's agency a state of heart which was, in fact, the outcome of the conditions which God set on foot. If only Pharaoh had yielded, God would have shown his power in bringing about his repentance and penitent acknowledgment, as in the case of Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. iv. 34); but, alas! since the king resisted, he became rather the means of making conspicuous the Divine power in destruction. God always means to bless and save; but, by resistance, we may transform that which He intends for blessing into a curse and bane.

Fifth Plague.—"All the cattle of Egypt died" probably means (see 19) that there was death among all the cattle of Egypt—no kind was spared. Probably the mortality was specially among the sacred oxen, which were objects of peculiar veneration. Notice the care of God for his own (6).

Sixth Plague.—This touched the persons of the Egyptians, and even of the magicians, in the form of ulcerous eruptions. So the ulcer of sin must disqualify for standing in the presence of God (11). But men think less of their souls than of their skins.

Seventh Plague.—In the middle of February or beginning of March there befell this fearful storm, a phenomenon almost unknown in Egypt, and this extorted the first confession of sin from that proud heart. How different the tones of confession (Numb. xxii. 34; Joshua vii. 20; 1 Sam. xv. 24; 2 Sam. xii. 13; Matt. xxvii. 4; Luke xv. 18). But it was not a godly sorrow (2 Cor. vii. 10). Compare Rev. xvi. 21 and Isa. xxvi. 20. And how beautiful it is to remark God's care over his own people (22). A severance often repeated afterwards. They were hidden in a pavilion, and in the secret place of his presence from the pride and wrath of man. Is not this an anticipation of the protecting care which shall be exercised over God's people in those perilous times which are coming on the world? (Isa. xxvi. 20; Matt. xxiv. 22).

THEATRICAL TEA MEETING.—At the schoolroom, Whitfield Presbyterian Church, Wilson-street, Long-acre, a company of theatrical employées, to the number of about 120, partook of tea on Wednesday evening, last week. Addresses were given by Mr. Forbes and Mr. Thomas Bennett (an elder of the church), and on leaving each guest received a sachet bearing a Scriptural motto, the gift of the Bible Flower Mission.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, March 17.

CHRIST'S LOVE TO THE YOUNG.

MARK x. 13—22. GOLDEN TEXT: x. 14.

DURING our Lord's last journey to Jerusalem, while in the district of Perea, in the south of Palestine, and east of Jordan, the incidents of this lesson took place.

Jesus and the children (13—16).—Note the added details given in Matt. xix. and Luke xviii. The people of Perea recognised the dignity of Jesus, and resolved that their children, even infants (Luke), should receive his benediction. To "put his hands on them and pray" (Matt.) would be to Hebrew mothers a familiar form of blessing. They had seen the presidents of their synagogues do the same.

It is a mistake to argue from this incident that children do not need conversion, that they are already in the kingdom, and only need to be trained in it. Whatever Jesus means by saying, "Of such is the kingdom of God" (14), He does not intend to contradict the statement of John iii. 6. The first birth—even from the best earthly parentage—is only of the flesh; a second birth is needed in every case. True, many young people may not be able to tell the time of their conversion; their trust may have passed almost imperceptibly beyond their parents to the Saviour, but the definite act of coming to Jesus, and of putting the life in his hands, must take place in all. By prayer, and instruction, and example, we may now bring our children to Jesus.

"The disciples rebuked" them (13).—They did not think that children could be proper subjects for his ministry. Hinderers now are: (1) Those who deny the necessity of child conversion, for how should they seek the Saviour if they do not consciously need Him? (2) those who deny the possibility of their conversion; (3) those who expect a man's experience in a little child; and, of course (4), those who, by evil example or pernicious teaching, train the young to sin. It is a grievous sin to be a cause of stumbling to the young (Mark ix. 42). Our Lord's indignation with his disciples proved it (14).

"Of such is the kingdom of God" (14).—Does not the following verse partly explain this? "Whosoever shall not receive...as a little child," &c. (15). This is a direct inversion of what has been too long believed. The child need not wait to become a man before he trusts the Saviour; but the man needs to become a child. The advantage is all on the side of the young; and the older they grow, the less likely are they to be saved at all. At a meeting in Calcutta Lord Radstock stated that he had the pleasure of seeing all his children converted before they were eight years of age. The freedom from scepticism, distrust, hypocrisy, pride which marks children is the reason why, "Of such is the kingdom," and makes them much more susceptible to spiritual instruction. Let parents, teachers, and churches recognise this.

The rich young man (17—22).—By comparing Matt. and Luke with Mark, we learn that this man was a ruler—was young, rich, and outwardly moral and religious. To all young men he is an example and a warning.

His hopeful approach to Jesus (17).—His concern was about "eternal life." Though he was wealthy, and attached to his possessions, he did not allow them to crowd out eternal things. He brought his inquiry to Jesus, and came both earnestly ("running") and humbly ("kneeled to Him"). He seized an opportunity that might not occur again, and he made his application publicly—not as Nicodemus (John iii.) Is he not in all these particulars a worthy example? A reproof to the carelessness and the timidity, and the spirit of delay which so commonly prevails?

Our Lord's treatment of him (18—21).—It was an unusual method of treatment, but one eminently suited to his case. "Why callest thou Me good?" (18).—He had used the word without recognising all it meant in its application to Jesus. Merely human excellence of character was not all that Jesus possessed. "Absolute goodness and God are one."—Morison. This was more than the young man had recognised. "Thou knowest the commandments," &c. (19).—According to Matt. the man's question was, "What good thing shall I do?" Our Lord's answer takes him on his own ground in order: (1) To correct his mistake in expecting life by doing; and (2) to show that he had not, as he supposed, kept the whole law. He who is not prepared to obey (21) has not fully obeyed the command, "Love thy neighbour as thyself" (Matt. xix. 19). Yet, while dealing with him thus faithfully, our Lord recognised the natural beauty of his character—"He loved him" (21). May we not learn the following important lessons? (1) A man may be amiable and lovable and moral, yet lack the one thing needful. (2) Even great riches do not prevent him feeling the lack.

The young man's departure from Jesus (22).—Two alternatives had been put before him—the Saviour, eternal life, treasure in heaven, or his great possessions. And so far as this narrative tells us he made a wrong choice. "Went away grieved." Did he never repent? If not, how bitter would be the memory of that day, in which he had been so near to the kingdom, yet had so deliberately refused to enter! But the narrative is left unfinished. He may have sorrowed unto repentance—we know not. Every young man to whom a similar alternative is presented should choose the good part, which cannot be taken away.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Mr. Spurgeon says that he has never had to exclude a single member from the church who was received as a child.

A girl who had read through the "Pilgrim's Progress" was asked which character in the book she liked best. "Christiana," she replied; "for she not only went to the celestial city herself, but she took the children with her."

George Whitefield once stayed with a general, whose whole family were unconverted. He had never been able to speak to them personally about their souls; but, on the last day, he wrote with his diamond ring upon the window: "One thing thou lackest." When the good man had gone, the general saw the message, and God blessed it to his conversion.

During the progress of a revival, a lady of wealth who saw the poor crowding to the Saviour, cried aloud: "O my God, is there no mercy for the rich?"

NO SECRETS.

HAVE no secrets, brother, nothing thou need'st hide.
Let thy surcharged bosom pour its flooded tide;
Only let its fulness at the fountain flow,
Mingled with the river of thy Saviour's woe.

Secrets sever friendship—cankers on the tree,
Blighting all the roses we had hoped to see.
Love can never linger where a secret lies;
Fellowship is broken, and affection dies.

Jesus, Friend of sinners; Jesus, knowing all,
Is there any secret, any little fall;
Any little action, any little bliss,
Any little secret, anything amiss?

Jesus, if my friendship with a fellow-heart
Suffers when a secret bids my trust depart,
What must be thy sorrow when I think or do
Aught I wish were secret, hidden from thy view?

Jesus, Friend of sinners, may I tell Thee all,
Hiding nothing from Thee, nothing great or small;
Living in the sunlight, knowing Jesus knows
All my faults and failings, all my joys and woes.

WILLIAM LUFF.

MRS. HILL, widow of Rev. G. T. Hill, founder of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society, entered into the heavenly rest on March 1, in the 77th year of her age. Her mind was clear, her faith unwavering, and her hope bright to the end. She testified with joy to the presence and preciousness of the Saviour.

KILBURN HOUSE OF REST.—The House has been very full during the winter. Many a worker has to "rest awhile," not only from the ever-increasing pressure of the work, but also because of "retrenchments" being necessitated in many centres of work from lack of funds. The all-day meeting was on Friday last. In the morning Miss Mason spoke on the responsibility of being "brought nigh to God," and the privileges that are attached to this responsibility. There was a continuous flow of earnest prayer for the various subjects brought before the meeting; and three answers to prayers of the previous month were recorded. In the afternoon Lord Radstock gave a most earnest address on living near to God. In the evening Rev. F. D. Sanford gave a most helpful and impressive address on the analogy between the Temple and the believer.

CHILDREN'S MISSION AT FINSBURY PARK.

—A very encouraging series of meetings for young people has just been concluded in the Finsbury-park Hall, the missioner being Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, of the Children's Special Service Mission, assisted by other workers. Despite the very unfavourable weather which prevailed during some part of the mission, the attendance increased nightly. The meetings for conversation at the close of each service were very impressive, and every night there were clear and blessed decisions for Christ, especially among the older children. Mr. H. Leigh Holme, who originated the work among the young in this Hall, contributed much to the success of the effort.

Miss Green, 95, Ledbury-road, Bayswater, W. (of the Female Mission of the Reformatory and Refuge Union), appeals for tracts suitable for distribution in hospitals and infirmaries. She is also greatly in need of left-off clothing for girls.

Artillery-lane Mission.—The workers of this Mission have been giving shelter and free meals to the destitute, to whom also the Gospel is preached. These efforts will have to be stayed unless funds are provided by the generous public. The superintendent is Mrs. Finn, 14 Talbot-place, St. Ann's-row, Stamford Hill, N.

"SWARMING OFF!"

220 Trained Lads (the First Party this year) will (D.V.) "Swarm Off" from our various "Homes" for Canada on March 28. Of this number about 70 will be bound for our New Industrial Farm, Manitoba, the remainder for Ontario.

Dear Friends,

After the trials and struggles of another Winter's toil amid the Slums of London, we are now ready to commend to GOD'S care our first party of Young Emigrants for this year, consisting of about 220 dear Young Lads, trained and tested in our Workshops and Homes, and many of whom have manifestly yielded their hearts to Christ, and have for some time been actively engaged in His service.

The prospect before these Boys is indeed a bright and hopeful one, for already I have received more demands for them from Farmers in excellent positions in Canada than would suffice to engage this whole party twice over!

Although the OUTFIT given to each Young Emigrant is ample in quantity and of the best quality (experience having taught us the prime importance of this), yet by the exercise of rigid economy in all the arrangements, it is found that £9 per Boy entirely covers the whole cost incurred in settling him in a God-fearing family in Ontario, after which no further expenditure will be needed on his behalf.

£54 will therefore give Six Boys a start in life, or £108 will do the same for Twelve Boys.

To send Youths (of 17 to 21 years of age) to Manitoba is more expensive, a railway journey of 2,000 miles further West having to be paid for, which involves a further cost of £2, or in all £11 per head; but the greater advantages of placing these big fellows from our Labour House there, rather than in Ontario, are well worth paying the higher rate to secure.

£66, therefore, will give a start in life to Six Lads sent to Manitoba; £132 will do the same for Twelve Lads; or £220 for Twenty Lads.

No truer, wiser method has ever been devised for effecting three desirable objects, than this scheme of well-organised Christian Emigration of trained and tested Young People, for 1st.—It saves the Child, delivering it for ever from the perils of its former lot.

2nd.—It relieves our over-crowded cities, the labour markets of which are hopelessly congested, and where the struggle for existence is getting fiercer every day.

3rd.—It supplies Canada with her greatest need: additions to her population of the choicest materials—honest, industrious, and piously-trained Children, who, by God's blessing, will grow into the successful Citizens of the near future.

It will greatly strengthen my hands to do this work for GOD and humanity, if Readers of The Christian are led to manifest prayerful and practical sympathy with the present undertaking, and so to give a real start in life to these Young Fellows who have been rescued from utter destitution and evil surroundings, and carefully trained for years or months past in our "Homes." Our need is pressingly urgent, for the time is short. Next week I shall hope to announce the dates of our Farewell Meetings.

I hope during the present year to be permitted to place out at least 600 trained children in the Dominion, far from the squalor and wretchedness of the East End of London.

Gifts of £9 or £11, or indeed of any sums, however small, in aid of our EMIGRATION FUND, will be gratefully received and acknowledged by

Your faithful Servant for Christ's sake,

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

ADVANCED CONSUMPTION.

CASE of T. FRANKLIN, LEICESTER.

This patient corresponded with me for twelve months. His case has been brought under my notice by Mr. THOMAS FRITH, of OADBY-ROAD, GREAT WIGSTON, LEICESTER, who can testify to the wonderful benefit he derived.

At the time he first wrote me he was pronounced by the doctors to be in the "last stage of consumption." Medical aid of the best had been obtained. All said the case was hopeless, and that he could not live many hours longer. "My friends watched me anxiously (he says), expecting every night that I should not see the morning, but while there is life there is hope, as the result by means of your treatment will show."

After a few days of anxious waiting, signs of improvement were manifest. The patient regularly continued under my treatment. I heard from him fortnightly at first, and afterwards monthly (about fourteen letters altogether). He steadily progressed, gaining strength. Writing me on the 15th of January of this year, he says:—

"I feel I ought to have testified before this to the wonderful cure your medicine has accomplished in my case. To-day, I am thankful to say, I never felt better in my life.—THOMAS FRANKLIN, GREAT WIGSTON."

And Mr. T. FRITH, also writing me, says: "I shall always have a great pleasure in recommending your treatment, since I know that such beneficial results have attended it. A worse case I never knew."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

"MANY INFALLIBLE PROOFS."

The Evidences of Christianity;

Or, The Written and Living Word of God.

By ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D.

"A handbook of Evidences of Christianity by which the author found his way out of the deep darkness of doubt into the full light of day, and found that the Bible was the Book of God and Christ the Son of God. May it help many out of Doubting Castle!"—Methodist Times.

"A book like this deserves a place beside Cooper's 'Bridge of History over the Gulf of Time,' as a forcible and interesting evidence of the truths of Christianity. Dr. Pierson tells us in his preface that, having himself been in the dense thicket of doubt, he is desirous of leading others out by the pathway by which he emerged into the light of faith. This volume reiterates the unshaken proofs of the Bible as a Divine Revelation, and also shows how Jesus Christ was none other than the Son of God. It is neatly bound, and has a portrait of the writer."—The Bookseller.

"This book will plant in many hearts the formative thought by which alone it is possible to build up a worthy reproduction on earth of the noblest life it ever saw."
Christian Leader, Dec. 20, 1888.

"A beautiful and deeply spiritual little book."
The British Weekly, Dec. 21, 1888.

"A series of more than usually helpful meditations on passages of Scripture which the Author cites, as showing the phases of Eternal Life, which is even now begun in all who have named the name of Christ."—The Quiver, Feb. 1889.

"A truly helpful little book for all earnest souls who are pressing on in the ways of holiness."
Footsteps of Truth, Jan. 1889.

"The Author has learnt the secret of living in the will of God, and he is doing his best to teach this secret to others. It is the very book to put into the hands of a humble Christian, seeking a higher, calmer, and steadier life."
Irish Congregational Magazine, Jan., 1889.

"A delightful little volume from Mr. Meyer's pen, full of stimulus and encouragement."
The British Messenger, March, 1889.

THE CATACOMBS AT ROME:

THEIR CONTENTS AND TEACHINGS.

A Vindication of Pure and Primitive CHRISTIANITY; and an Exposure of the Corruptions of ROMANISM: Derived from the Sepulchral Remains of the EARLY CHRISTIANS at ROME.

By BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S., Chamberlain of the City of London.

WITH MANY ILLUSTRATIONS.

Tinted Covers, 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

From DR. ABBOTT, Head Master of the City of London School:—
"I heartily agree with you that the tendency toward Romanism and Sacerdotalism denotes a misappreciation of the fundamental truths of Christianity; and any one who can do anything to lead people back to those simple spiritual truths is doing a good work for mankind."

From the DEAN OF ACHONRY:—
"'THE CATACOMBS AT ROME' is one of the most useful books I know, as showing the purity and simplicity of the early Church at Rome, and exposing the spurious Christianity of the modern Church of Rome, and the corruptions and incrustations by which she has hidden or destroyed the pure faith of the New Testament."

"The excellent Chamberlain of the City of London has given in these pages a clear and accurate account of the interesting remains of early Christianity in the Catacombs of Rome. Many of the pictures depict harrowing scenes of idolatrous cruelty, and others show the inscriptions on the walls of these underground sepulchres. All through the book is a desire manifested to vindicate the purity of the Christianity of those times, compared with the corruptions of Rome."—The Bookseller.

Ninth Thousand.

"A more suggestive and helpful volume it would not be easy to name: and it is so tenderly persuasive in its tone that few will be able to read it without deriving spiritual benefit from the perusal."
Christian Leader.

"Every page is full of stimulating thought for Christians; and we can heartily commend its earnest admonitions and stirring appeals for a HIGHER LIFE. From beginning to end it is a live book, and is worthy of a place in every Christian's library."—Christian Commonwealth.

"Like all Mr. MEYER'S writings it is delightfully practical and experimental. His teaching gives no uncertain sound, and the way in which he corroborates every statement by appropriate passages of Holy Scripture is truly admirable."
Christian Treasury.

"This is a valuable little book. Those who know by experience something of the life of a Christian—but who long for further progress, and a fuller, happier, service—may find in it much helpful counsel."—The Times.

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Ald. Sir R. N. Fowler, Bart., M.P.
J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman.
Clarence Smith, Esq., J.P., Hon. Secretary.

For 103 years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 240 Christian men and women.

Funds are urgently needed.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.

Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

EAST END DISTRESS. — Rev. THOMAS JACKSON, 41, Powerscroft-road, Clapton, London, E., appeals for assistance for destitute families. Children's Free Dinners, and Soup Kitchen Fund in urgent need of funds. Gifts of money, food, or clothing promptly acknowledged, and exclusively appropriated to the relief of destitution.

BETHNAL GREEN GOSPEL AND TEMPERANCE MISSION.—The Committee urgently appeal for funds for the following objects:—(1) To provide special help for the starving poor, thousands of whom are always living on the verge of starvation, and are at this season of the year in a pitiable state of want. Money to provide food and firing and gifts of clothing will be gratefully accepted and wisely used. (2) To purchase Gospel and Temperance tracts. (3) To support missionaries and evangelical mission work. (4) To pay off a debt of £500 on a large mission hall and institute, in which a most important and cheering work is being done.—Contributions may be sent to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C., or to Rev. W. HARVEY SMITH, 203½, Bethnal Green-road, London, E.

NORTH BOW MISSION, London, East.—REACHING THE MASSES.—£2,700 will entirely liquidate our debt upon three splendid Freehold Churches, and one large School-room. The property accommodates 1,500 adults, and 1,000 children. The population are all working people, and mostly very poor. Nearly 1,000 persons have been admitted in Church fellowship upon profession of conversion since Aug. 1876. Contributions will be acknowledged through THE CHRISTIAN. The Lord's houses should not be mortgaged to money-lenders, whilst the Lord's stewards are rolling in wealth.—JOHN FLETCHER PORTER, Superintendent Missionary, 362, Old Ford-road, Bow, London, E.

AN APPEAL FROM JERUSALEM.—The Evangelical Mission to Israel is in great need of Christian help. Those of the Lord's children who would like to know it and afford their help, should correspond with Mrs. T. WALKER, The Hall, Glenn, Leicester; HENRY TASKER, Esq., Brook Side, Andover; and Mr. ROBERT MORGAN, 138, Clifden-road, Clapton, London. We are also known to the editors of this periodical for more than 20 years. We may mention the following branches of the work are carried on:—The Gospel to Jews in their houses, and every opportunity. Our meetings in the Mission-room are as follows:—Sunday morning, Worship; evening, Gospel. Tuesday evening, Lecture on Prophecy. Wednesday noon, Mothers' Meeting. Friday evening, Bible-class. Saturday, Lecture to Jews. The Reading-room open all day. Night School, Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday, from 6 to 9 p.m. Pray for all the branches.—D. CHRISTOPHER JOSEPH, Evangelical Mission to Israel, Jerusalem.

FUNDS URGENTLY needed to carry on Evangelistic Work amongst Poor at East End. Also are in great need of funds just now to carry on our SOUP KITCHEN AND CHILDREN'S HALFPENNY DINNERS. The work is strongly recommended. Donations gratefully acknowledged by GEORGE FULLER, Superintendent, Brunswick Hall, Brunswick-road, Poplar, E., or by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, THE CHRISTIAN Office. Left-off clothing, Tracts, &c., thankfully received. The "Widow's Mite" would be welcomed.

THE SUFFERING POOR.

THE LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY

Is in URGENT NEED of DONATIONS for AID to the POOR by Tickets for Coal, Bread, Lodgings, &c., which are available all over London and Suburbs; also for its Convalescent Homes at Bournemouth and Sandgate, with 185 beds.—Donations will be most thankfully received by JOHN JAMES JONES, 98, High-st., Homerton, London, E.

IRISH SOCIETY,

For the Scriptural Education of the Irish-speaking Population, chiefly through the medium of their own language.

ESTABLISHED 1818.

On the 1st of January this year the DEFICIT (including debt to bankers) WAS £1,500. As the Society's Work of Scriptural Education is carried on, mainly, by periodical examinations and payments, its progress generally is impaired, and partially imperilled, by the existing financial pressure.

An earnest appeal is now made to all Christians to give according to their ability. It may be, that some who have been largely blessed with means, will give generously in this crisis, so that the above special sum may be raised before the end of March, and thus a New Financial Year open for the Society without this great hindrance to the freer course of God's Most Holy Word.

Contributions will be received in England, by National Provincial Bank, 212, Piccadilly, London; Messrs. Nisbet & Co., Berners Street, London, W.; Rev. T. Keane, or Rev. R. Mease, Irish Society, 32, Sackville-street, London, W. In Ireland, by Rev. W. Fitzpatrick, 17, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin.

THE COW CROSS MISSION

To those who did not help us in 1888.

DEAR FRIENDS,—

Through the tender mercy of our God—with restoration to health—the last year has been one of encouragement and manifest blessing in connection with our Mission, both in London and at the Isle of Wight. A few weeks' change of air and scene (with a little Mission work among the villages) has refitted several of us for further service at home in Clerkenwell. But by reference to the balance sheet it will be seen that our income has fallen off considerably. We have spent less in printing, certainly more in the pressing necessities of the distressed people of God, so at the close of the year we reckon

£58 DUE TO THE TREASURER.

This is a serious matter with us, and a time of sore trial. We dare not go further into debt, and funds are urgently needed for nearly a year's Current expenses. We are giving up our "Home of Rest" at Ventnor, to remove at once to a more humble cottage within 30 miles of London, at St. John's, Woking, Surrey.

THE EXPENSES OF REMOVAL of the furniture will entail an additional outlay. May we not trust that some who have forgotten us during the past year will remember us now, and endeavour to influence others to help us over our present difficulties?

Annual Report on application.

Yours, in the Lord Jesus,

WILLIAM CATLIN.

17, CLAREMONT SQUARE, PENTONVILLE, LONDON, N.

Or must our little Mission be suffered to collapse, after a standing testimony of so many years in the centre of the great metropolis?

FOOD and SHELTER for POOR CHILDREN.

THE Committee of the LATYMER ROAD MISSION make an EARNEST APPEAL for HELP towards Free Dinners and Evening Shelters for the Children of the Streets, Soup Kitchen, Sick Relief, Infant Day Nursery, Night Schools, and other agencies.

10s. WILL PROVIDE 250 HUNGRY CHILDREN with a GOOD MEAL of Soup and Bread.

Contributions will be gratefully received by Miss GLADSTONE, Hon. Sec., Latymer Road Mission, Blechynden Street, Notting Hill, W.

CHAS. SMALLMAN Secretary.

THE MARY INSTITUTE, GRAYS.—Will any one kindly give piano, books, articles of furniture, or subscribe to fund, to enable members of Young Women's Christian Association to furnish a Home. Club, and Library. Very poor parish, more than 5,000 population, only a temporary iron church.—Rev. F. HASLOCK, The Mary Institute, William-street, Grays, Essex.

DESTITUTE CHILDREN'S DINNER SOCIETY—Funds are most urgently needed for the above old and deserving Society, to re-open and carry on through the winter months their Dining Rooms. Last season they gave away 343,301 dinners, and gave grants of £1,750, towards the same. Subscriptions may be sent to Lord Kinnaird, 1, Pall Mall East; W. Fuller, Esq., Stoughton Grange, Stoke, Guildford; to the Secretary, H. Morton Carr, Esq., 89, St. George's-square, S.W., or to the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan, Tritton, Ransome, Bouverie & Co., 1, Pall Mall East, S.W.

THERE ARE BYE-PATHS of human suffering from whence no cry is heard. Miss FAITHFULL, The Institute, 136, Regent-street, earnestly pleads for many needy, invalid, and distressing cases. The winter is so severe, want so great.

THE "VICTORIA HOME" WRITERS' ASSOCIATION, 39 & 41, Commercial-street, Whitechapel, E.—Under the patronage of the Committee of the Victoria Homes for Working Men: The Right Hon. Lord Radstock, T. A. Denny, Esq., E. Trotter, Esq., H. W. Maynard, Esq., W. H. Seagram, Esq., F. Deacon, Esq., The Hon. G. Waldegrave. The above Association has been formed for the express purpose of providing work for Clerks out of employment. Every kind of Writing, Folding, Stamping and Posting undertaken.—Terms, communications to the General Manager, Mr. A. WILKE.

DOCK LABOURERS' MISSION, 32, Chamber-street, London Docks. The distress among the unemployed and families have drawn us into a debt of £53, which have been spent in food and lodgings. A gentleman will give £20 if the remainder can be raised before April. Will the Lord's stewards kindly help us clear off this debt?

March 15, 1889.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. J. Jackson Wray, of Whitefield Tabernacle, Tottenham Court-road.

Owing to our lengthened notice of the late Mr. Denham Smith's life, funeral service, &c., we have been obliged to curtail some communications, and to hold others over. In our next issue we hope, as stated elsewhere, to furnish some interesting reminiscences of Mr. Denham Smith, mainly with reference to his testimony in the sick-room. We shall also give a second portrait of Mr. Smith, different in pose from that which appears in this number.

A new Convalescent Home for women and girls is about to be opened at Brighton. Mrs. Seaman has long been engaged in mission work in London, and it is hoped that, under her superintendence, Engedi House, Eastern-road, Brighton, will prove a blessing to many weak and poor women from our great cities.

Rev. Dr. Verner M. White's recent statements on church and chapel attendance in Liverpool and other large cities may well be termed alarming and almost incredible. The Northern Advance gives this summary of Dr. White's figures in relation to Liverpool:—

With an increase of 176,000 in the population, and also an increase of 57,000 sittings in the church and chapel accommodation, the attendances (morning, afternoon, and evening) in 1882 were 14,000 less than 1851. Those absent from any place of worship in 1851 who could have been present were 53 per cent., and in 1882 were 75 per cent. This deplorable and alarming state of things is found more or less in all denominations, and in all districts, town and country alike. The percentages, without exception, have largely fallen off.

This startling decrease occurred during the years when the evangelical revival was arrested. It is specially since 1851 that men in churches and chapels have brought to religion their selfish interests, and have infused into that which saves, their accommodating doctrines. Artificialities, spectacular rituals, musical performances, negative theologies, ornate buildings, have become the dependence. These substitutes for the religion of Jesus our Lord, and efforts to please the unconverted instead of saving them, have proved a portentous and tremendous mistake. The people have not been won by them; the fault has not been in our Christianity, but in the false representations of it.

An attempt is made to attribute this falling away of the people from public worship in part to the drain which has been made on congregations by Christian workers acting on their own independent judgment, and selecting spheres of Christian service under their own control. The explanation is insufficient. These independent spheres have come in to meet the needs of the people which were not met elsewhere. Where Christ's truth is fully manifested; where there is, on the part of the preacher, obvious confidence in it; where there is warmth, fidelity, and pressing entreaty—there devoted men and women will be found in cordial co-operation. Services of a converting nature win the workers as well as the people.

It were to be wished that Mr. Plimsoll were still in the House of Commons to protest there against "coffin-ship" inhumanities with that passion of sincerity which originated a reform so miserably carried forward. It is well that he urges his views in the March Nineteenth Century. Still, through an utterly false system, the owner of a ship is tempted to regard his own interests and the safety of a crew as not identical, and brave men go down, and insurance companies are defrauded, and wreck registers are not adequately inquired into. Twelve millions of money yearly wasted at sea is a heavy indictment against the present system; but the loss of life and the suffering of seamen's families, ought to weigh more heavily on the consciences of statesmen, who could do much to remedy the inhuman waste and wrong.

There has been some official rejoicing over the fact that the number of paupers in London in the third week of February was only 106,284, as compared with 110,458 in the corresponding week of 1888. Unfortunately, however, last year an addition of nearly 6000 to the numbers of 1887 took place, and we have, therefore, some distance to progress in the way of the desired improvement before we reach the average of 1886. The returns, too, do not include vagrants, of whom over 1200 received workhouse relief upon each day of the week in question.

At the beginning of his last illness Mr. J. Denham Smith wrote an introduction to a halfpenny booklet, entitled, "Keep to the Old Paths," published by Mr. J. E. Hawkins, 17, Paternoster-row. This little work presents, in the very words of Holy Scripture, what is revealed as to sound and unsound doctrine. Mr. Smith confidently commended this collation of Scripture teaching, and we are glad to do the same. Mr. Hawkins also publishes other works by Mr. Smith, including his last, "The Prophet of Glory; or, Zechariah's Visions of the Coming and Kingdom of Christ." The pages of this beautiful book are luminous with sound teaching as to the ways and workings of God in human redemption.

A statement has been made recently in regard to a certain public company that the girls they employ are required to work from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily for the sum of seven shillings per week, and that, if "through any cause" they are compelled to absent themselves for a day the company deduct 1s. 5½d. from the week's wages, i.e., the actual day's pay and a fine of 3½d. Perhaps there is little room for wonder if they get wearied of such a life of toil, and permit themselves to be tempted into a life of shame. It must require something heroic in a girl, possibly away from her home, to enable her to continue to starve upon the balance out of 7s. after she has paid the rent of a room.

Very much good may be done, at a comparatively little outlay, by the employment of a professional district nurse in small towns which are without a hospital. Those who are disposed to make the experiment will find full particulars as to the cost and method of procedure given in an interesting paper in The Hospital for March 2. What sickness means in the homes of the working classes and of the poor is known to only few, even of the charitable. The dissemination of some of the facts would result in the necessary funds being promptly furnished for the employment of a nurse in many small towns, and in populous districts of larger ones.

There is, perhaps, at the present day too strong a tendency to trust to legislation for the remedying of social evils. No doubt the State may properly and wisely interfere in certain directions, but the only permanent solution of many of the most pressing social questions rests with the people themselves. We may have beneficial legislation in regard to the housing of the poor; but, if the poor are vicious and drunken, the State cannot protect them from the results. And so with respect to many other matters. Those who are interested in the well-being of the working classes should never lose sight of the fact that the moral aspect of these questions is by far the most important, and that the value of legislation as a factor in the amelioration of the condition of the poor is but small, compared with that of the improved morality of the people themselves.

This improved morality, which is so desirable, cannot be permanently founded upon any other basis than that of the Christian religion, and it is, therefore, of the highest importance that, whatever may be done in the way of legislative interference, there should be no cessation of the efforts being made to bring men to the knowledge of Christ. The good Christian will necessarily be a good citizen, following the Divine injunction to render unto God the things that are God's and unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's.

A remarkable testimony was borne a few days ago to the great usefulness of the St. Giles' Christian Mission. A Lancashire lad named Smith, in December last, found himself in want and friendless in London. He went to the workhouse casual ward, but was refused admittance. However, at the door of that institution he met with an old criminal, who was ready to victimise, while pretending to help him. Subsequently the two were apprehended on a charge of stealing a roll of cloth. Last week, at the Middlesex Sessions, the prisoners took their trial, the poor lad being sentenced to three months' hard labour, and the wicked man acquitted. The painful antecedent facts coming to the knowledge of Mr. Wheatley, secretary to the Mission, representations were promptly made to the judge, who fully appreciated the nature of the circumstances. Accordingly the sentence was reduced to the few days the lad had already been in prison, and not only was he thereupon committed to the care of the Mission, but the compassionate jury handed Mr. Wheatley a sum of money towards the cost of measures of protection and help.

We have received a second pamphlet by Rev. C. A. Salmond, M.A., with special reference to the "Faith Mission," entitled "Pilgrims toward Plymouth." We think this title unfortunate and inaccurate. While some good counsel is given to the "Pilgrims," there is a sarcastic tone throughout, which is not calculated to win them, even if all the truth were on the other side. We earnestly deprecate personal or aggravating remarks in discussion, especially on so sacred a subject as holiness to the Lord. We all need to study very constantly Eph. iv. 15, 16.

In consequence of our article last week on "The Blood of Christ in relation to Sanctification," a Christian brother, professing to be entirely sanctified, writes to us:—

> There is fear that God the Holy Ghost will protect his own truth by punishing those who wilfully pervert his words to prove their limited ideas of his power according to the tradition of men.

Then, for our own welfare, presumably that we may escape the punishment feared, we are asked to read certain passages from Dr. Westcott and others with an unprejudiced mind. Now, we venture to suggest that the imputation of wilful misrepresentation, and the veiled imprecation of punishment, upon a writer of whom our correspondent knows nothing, is scarcely an illustration of the entire removal of an evil disposition of heart, which he claims to have experienced, so that at death "his body must be changed, but not his soul or his spirit." It is a cause of thankfulness to be assured by the Holy Spirit that, "as the sparrow in her wandering, as the swallow in her flying, so the curse that is causeless lighteth not" (Prov. xxvi. 2, R.V.). Nevertheless, the causeless curse should not be uttered.

Rev. H. C. G. Moule, M.A., entirely supports the view given in our above-named article. We heartily commend his booklet just published—"The Cleansing Blood: a Study of 1 John i. 7." (1d. Seeley.) All the New Testament passages in which the blood of Christ is spoken of are examined and shown to be in accord with 1 John i. 7, of which Mr. Moule says that:—

> Its "cleanseth" marks a continuous process, and therefore a continuous need. And that process is not "keeping clean," but "cleansing," a widely different matter. Whether the cleansing is propitiatory or internal, there is something to be cleansed away, or the cleansing would cease, of course.

We do not think the correspondent quoted in the previous note would charge Mr. Moule with wilfully perverting the truth; yet nothing could more thoroughly endorse our article than his pamphlet.

A YOUNG NORWEGIAN ENGINEER, named Christian Dahl, was killed recently in a railway accident near Maubeuge, Nord, while journeying to Paris, to represent this country at the Universal Exhibition. A New Testament which was found upon him served to indicate to the civil authorities that he was a Protestant. Before the transmission of the remains to Norway for interment, a funeral service was held at Maubeuge, the occasion being improved by earnest testimony for the living Christ.

Euodia and Syntyche.—1.

Some time ago the endeavour to heal a breach between two Christian sisters who were at variance naturally led me to Paul's entreaty to Euodia and Syntyche to be of one mind in the Lord. Continued study and meditation showed with increasing clearness that these two women are the key to the Epistle.*

If the contents of a letter can be relied upon as indicating the circumstances of those to whom it was written, we are led to three conclusions, with regard to the Epistle to the Philippians: (1) That there was discord at Philippi, of which (2) Euodia and Syntyche were the centre. And (3) that the subject of dissension was some phase of the question of perfection or holiness.

(1) That there was discord is evident from the repeated exhortation to unity: see, e.g., i. 27; ii. 3; iii. 15, 16; iv. 2; and especially the almost vehement appeal of ii. 1, 2:—"If then you can be entreated in Christ, if you can be persuaded by love, if you have any fellowship in the Spirit, if you have any tenderness or compassion, I pray you make my joy full, be of one accord, filled with the same love, of one soul, of one mind." This is the translation given in "Conybeare and Howson's Life and Epistles of St. Paul." These commentators remark on the above verses:—

> The extreme earnestness of this exhortation to unity shows that the Philippians were guilty of dissension; perhaps Euodia and Syntyche, whose opposition to each other is mentioned (iv. 2), had partisans who shared their quarrel.

With singular want of perception some have said that there was little or nothing to blame at Philippi.

Observe the Divine wisdom and tact with which the Spirit-taught Apostle deals with this unhappy state of things.

(i.) He will not recognise two parties. This is shown by the frequent and significant use of the comprehensive word "all." He addresses all the saints at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons; he makes request for them all with joy; he is confident that He who began a good work in them will perfect it, and it is meet to think this of them all, because all of them are partakers of his grace; and God is his record how greatly he longs after them all in the bowels of Jesus Christ. And though he desires to depart, and to be with Christ, he knows that he shall abide, and abide with them all, for their furtherance and joy of faith. In anticipation of his martyrdom he rejoices with them all. Epaphroditus longs after them all. The Apostle prays, in closing, that the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ may be with them all.† In acknowledging their care and kindness in ministering to his necessities, &c., he addresses them as "ye Philippians." Thus, all through his letter, he shows equal love to them all, and his absolute freedom from partisanship or partiality.

(ii.) He dwells on subjects of common interest to them all. They are agreed in loving him: then he will unite them in sympathy with his bonds and with his work, leading them to united prayer for his salvation, and the supply of all his needs, by the Spirit of Jesus Christ. His mention of Timothy and of Epaphroditus (ii. 19—30) similarly tended to unite their hearts in sympathy with those brethren for whom they had a common affection.

(iii.) The Apostle prays that their love may abound yet more and more in true knowledge, and in all understanding; that they may distinguish good from evil; that they may be pure, and walk without stumbling, until the day of Christ; being filled with the fruit of righteousness unto the glory and praise of God. He gives them credit for the love they have, but He would have it multiplied. For love is the source of wisdom. If love abounds, they will have wisdom to discern the things that are more excellent. If they love one another, they will not exaggerate their differences, but each will endeavour to see what is good in the conduct, and true in the argument, of those from whom he may at present differ in judgment. They will try to look at the matter from the others' point of view, as well as from their own. And the spirit of love will help their infirmities, and, wherein they are otherwise minded, God will reveal even this unto them. Paul himself intensely loves them, and exhorts them: "My brethren, dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and crown, so stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved."

There is now, perhaps there has always been, a tendency amongst those who follow after holiness to regard themselves as an eclectic body—a Church within the Church. This may have been the view of Euodia, or of Syntyche, and of the party which either of them represented; if so, the Apostle's evident determination to recognise no such eclecticism, but to regard all the saints at Philippi as equally dear to God and to himself, and all alike partakers with him of grace, is most instructive. It is, on the one hand, a quiet protest against dividing the Church into sections: against, e.g., distinguishing the bride from the body, or separating those who have obtained "the blessing" from those who have not; or railing off the sanctified from those who are supposed to be only justified; and, on the other hand, it is an example of how the Holy Spirit would have us deal between individuals or parties at variance with one another in the Church of God.

The Apostle first insists upon the fact of their equal oneness as believers in Christ. Then he draws them together by subjects of common interest. Then he prays that their love may abound. It is not so much that he expects them to love, as that he lays before them considerations calculated to evoke their love to himself, to one another, and to God.

Differences between brethren, whether personal or doctrinal, ought always to be dealt with after this Divine pattern. If they always had been, how different would have been the condition of the Church to-day. If this should be the way which shall henceforth be trodden in our discussions or our disagreements, how our children will bless us for such a heritage of peace.

* It has been said that the key to every book in the Bible may be found in a single word. It may be so in some cases, but I am convinced it is not so in all, and the attempt to confine the key to a single word may mislead as to the true object of the writing.

† Other Epistles are addressed to all the saints, and conclude with grace to all; but in none beside is there the same reiteration of the word.

THE "FORWARD MOVEMENT" is making itself felt in Ireland. Last week the Methodists of Cork opened a large central hall, which they have built at a cost of over £2,000, and in which it is intended to carry on social and evangelistic work for the city and neighbourhood.

II.—THE DOOR-MAT CHRISTIAN.

I WENT to a place to preach in rotation with others. The friend who invited me, in course of conversation, said, "By the way, what are you going to preach about to-night?"

I replied, "I do not usually tell, for somehow, if I do, I find that I invariably lose my message."

"Oh, very well," he answered, "if that be so, by all means keep your secret. But let me beg of you not to take the prodigal son for your subject."

"Why not?" I asked. "It is the subject of subjects, and one very much needed at the present time."

"Oh, pray do not," he repeated; "everybody has that theme, and they tell us what the prodigal said, and what his father did. The people here have heard that story at least a dozen times."

I said, "Have they ever heard about door-mat Christians?"

"No," he replied, "what may they be?"

I answered, "Let your curiosity rise to tip-toe in expectation, and I will tell you at the proper time."

"No," he said, "my curiosity is roused quite enough now; tell me at once."

"Suppose," I said, "a great man invited you to dinner, and suppose you are a very humble-minded individual; that is, one who thinks much of yourself and your humility. You have received the invitation, and wish to accept it; but you are really so unworthy! You imagine that the master of the house knows nothing about your unfitness. You walk up and down outside the house, saying, 'I am invited to this great mansion, but how can such as I go in?' At last, you go up trembling to the door, and give a timid single knock, like a beggar, or rather, such as beggars used to give. When the door is opened, you ask if you may enter, though you have been invited to the feast. You are bidden to come in, and assured again and again of your welcome; but still you remain standing on the door-mat, wondering whether you have any good reason for being there.

"Something keeps telling you that you are not accepted. All this time the door is open behind you, filling the house with cold air. Your worldly friends outside look on and wonder what you are doing there on the door-mat. You certainly do not look like a welcomed guest, nor do you recommend the invitation to dine at such a house. You have been bidden to come to the dining-hall and to the banquet, but you shrink back for fear and feel your unworthiness. You have some hope that you may get to the great banquet when you die! Think what a troublesome guest you would be, and how unwelcome too, if you are not to come to dinner till you are dead!"

"Oh," said my friend, "I begin to see what your drift is now. You mean to say that we bring the invited guests just inside the door of salvation and leave them there, instead of bringing them to the banqueting hall."

"Yes, indeed," I said, "and I mean even more than that. If you will look at the story of the prodigal, you will see that there are five things provided for him, and that they are all ready. There is the kiss of reconciliation or pardon, the robe, the ring, the shoes, and the fatted calf. No wonder that young converts are not satisfied or satisfactory, when five such things are provided, and they only take one.

"Supposing a legacy were left you in five figures, 12,345—twelve thousand three hundred and forty-five pounds. You go to prove the will, and, because of your humility, you only take five pounds. Would that satisfy you?"

"I expect," said my friend, "I am one of your door-mat Christians. I do not think I am further than that. Like the prodigal son, I was a long time making resolutions and wishing; but when I arose to go to my Father, He met me and forgave my sins. There I have stopped."

"St. Paul tells us," I said, "'that through this man, Christ Jesus, is preached forgiveness of sins, and by Him all that believe,' that is all like you, who have received forgiveness, 'are justified.' As surely as you have received your welcome, there is the best robe for you."

"What is that?" asked my friend.

"Our robe," I replied, "is our justification before God, our being accounted righteous for Christ's sake as if we had not sinned. Being justified by faith we have peace with God, we have access to our Father in heaven, and we rejoice in the hope of the glory of God.

"Next, there is a ring for our hand, a token of our oneness with Christ now, as we were one with Adam before. His God is our God, and his Father ours. We are united to Him, as a bride is united with her husband.

"Then there are the shoes for our feet, to protect us from the flints and thorns of this world. While we are in the body we come into contact with the world, just as our feet touch the ground upon which we stand. We need this protection, and it is provided for us by and in the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ.

"Lastly, we have the fatted calf, the feast of communion with the Father, in the gift of his beloved Son for us. He so loved us that He gave us his Son, and we love Him in consequence, and so feast and rejoice with Him in the banqueting house, where the banner over us is love!"

My friend was evidently thinking, and was silent. I therefore continued, "When you see a rejoicing Christian, one who is not afraid or ashamed to tell what the Lord has done for his soul, you see a man in the banquet. Such an one recommends it, and is not content to feast alone, but longs for others to come and partake with him of his Lord's bounty. It is as free for them as for him."

"I do not wonder now," said my friend, "at the doubts and misgivings I am subject to. I am nothing but a door-mat Christian! I have been trying my best to make myself happy by doing all the good I could to other people. How may I enter into all these privileges?"

I answered: "You may have them as freely as you received pardon. You received that by simple faith, by the same faith you may rejoice in your justification before God, and realise your oneness with Christ, the protection of his grace, and the fulness of his blessing. It is all provided and offered together, though you enter into the experience of these several blessings one by one, progressively. Why take five pounds, when you may have twelve thousand three hundred and forty-five?"

"Most speakers," said my friend, "offer but the one thing."

I replied: "Never mind us poor messengers. Look at your Bible; there you will find the full message of the King. Read of his royal bounties so richly and abundantly provided, and accept them with rejoicing.

"Notice, in the story of the prodigal, that, when he reached the banquet, then it was that they 'began to be merry.' And however great this joy is, yet it is only the beginning of still higher and greater things to be enjoyed even in this world, to say nothing of the eternal glory which awaits the believer hereafter."

AMONG KAFFIRS.—We find the work among the Kaffirs here very trying in many respects. The people are in a transition state, and are, therefore, specially liable to fall into mistakes of various kinds. Many of the young people on the station are better educated than their parents, and, I am sorry to say, show very little respect for them. Many have not the fear of God in their hearts, and are living careless and indifferent lives. We pray that the Lord may revive his work and bring many to the feet of Jesus. ALEXANDER WELSH.

Jacob and his Family.

Notes of an Address by Lord Radstock, at Aldersgate-street Noon Meeting.

GENESIS xxxii. 7, 8.—Jacob was a man of expedient. The foundation of true family weal is "in the Lord." Jacob looked to God, and at the same time leant somewhat heavily on the crutch of self. This double proceeding never works well. It lands its possessor in difficulties. It develops crises. So Jacob found. "Then Jacob was greatly afraid and distressed." He is now face to face with the consequences of his own crookedness. Mere fleshly contrivance cannot yield satisfactory results. It may gain its end for the time being. But the period of searching sooner or later comes; and then the big success is big folly—the great fortune, like a house of cards, tumbles down at a touch. Jacob feels the ground giving way beneath him. He saw his all at stake—self and family disastrously involved. From what cause? The energy of his own fleshly mind. He would by his own scheming couple the blessing with the birthright. And now he has cause in conscience to forebode evil at Esau's hands.

There is much of fleshly haste and fleshly building in the Church to-day. It is forgotten that "except the Lord build the house they labour in vain that build it." See the sad work Abraham made of it by carnal expedients. Not content to bide God's time with respect to the promised seed; wearied by delay; he listens to the voice of fleshly suggestion. The consequence is, Ishmael is born, to mar his home and to be a thorn in his side. There is instructive warning here. We cannot wait on God. We cannot await the Spirit's time to convince and to convert. We have not patience believingly to hold on to the promise. No. We must expedite matters. We must have our hours of pleasure for the people; our own fanciful and carnal ways of tickling sinners, and reaching the masses. And so Ishmaels are born, and confusion bred. The more haste the less speed. The wood, hay, stubble, must all be burnt. The Ishmaelites must all go out.

Verse 9.—"And Jacob said, O God of my father Abraham, and God of my father Isaac." He does not say, "My God." He is too abashed to do that. Yet has he refuge in the covenant relation. The child of God has ever refuge here. "I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed."

Verse 24.—"And Jacob was left alone." He has made an end of contriving, and now he stands apart, alone. How much does this term involve! It was on the Mount; apart, alone with God, that Moses got the secret of right building. The same is true to-day. When we come to the end of self we come to the beginning of God. Conversion is much, but let us note what comes after: "Except ye be converted, and become as little children." In that lies the secret of power with God and men.

"And there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day." A man! So it seemed to Jacob. Therefore he wrestled. Have we never felt it so? We have said, "It is only a man," and in that belief have closed with the difficulty. But as the conflict proceeded we have found that we were not wrestling with flesh and blood. Solemn moment if our eyes be opened to see that we are in controversy with the Lord.

Flesh and blood cannot prevail with God. But let the flesh die, and victory follows. Such is the significance of the disjointed thigh. We have to die to live. For "except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit."

MR. CHARLES GARNETT, of Runcorn, has recently conducted a very successful Gospel mission at the Wesleyan Chapel, Stoke-on-Trent.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Situation surveyed, Defects disclosed, and the Church recalled to her Lord's Instructions

XVI.—Christ's Instructions for his Missionaries:

THEIR PERPETUAL OBLIGATION—SHOWN FROM PRIMITIVE EXAMPLE.

AN unanswerable argument in favour of the unceasing obligation of the law for missionary operations is derived from THE EXAMPLE OF THE APOSTLES AND OTHERS IN PRIMITIVE TIMES. It was first given to the twelve; then, that it might not seem confined to them, it was repeated to the seventy; then, on the coming of the Holy Spirit, by his powerful inward impulse, the Pentecostal believers voluntarily came under the spirit and letter of those conditions, as far as they were applicable to the multitude of the disciples, surrendering lands and possessions and outward distinctions; and, afterwards, when they were scattered abroad by the persecution after Stephen's death, they were stripped of earthly things, and "took joyfully the spoiling of their goods."

Throughout the Acts, every glimpse we get of the first army of missionaries finds them exactly obeying their Lord's primal instructions. The wealth of the early Church had been poured out at the Apostles' feet; but yet they did not provide themselves with a purse. "Silver and gold have I none," was Peter's word a few days after, when human need appealed to him for alms. A little later we see Philip in Samaria, preaching and healing according to Christ's words, and going thence to the south in the manner the disciples were bidden to journey, on foot and unimpeded, until the Spirit directed him to one of the "worthy," the eunuch. We see Peter passing through all quarters, and going to the "worthy" at Lydda and Joppa, where he raised one that was dead. Where, we may well ask, did he receive the instructions under which he acted in performing this marvellous work of power, if not from this missionary document in which the Lord bids them to go forth and raise the dead? This was a word they had not fulfilled before. At Joppa he is received, and lodged, and fed by another of the "worthy." From there the "Son of Peace" directs his steps to still another of the same class, Cornelius, the devout centurion, which same invisible messenger precedes him and prepares for the reception of both him and his message. In this same house he abode until he left the place.

Through every vista the Holy Spirit opens to us in the thirty-two years' history of the Acts, we saw the typical Apostolic missionary, unfettered with the appliances of modern wisdom; without purse or scrip or human patronage; hurrying on from town to town; entering into the houses of the "worthy," and there abiding until he goes thence; preaching, healing, casting out devils, and raising the dead; fleeing when persecuted; shaking off the dust of his feet as a testimony against them; in extreme cases pronouncing a woe upon those who wilfully opposed; stoned, scourged, imprisoned; often brought before councils, kings, and governors, and speaking without anxious forethought the ready Spirit-given words that perplexed his judges and made royalty to tremble on its throne. They show the wisdom of the serpent, and the harmlessness of the dove; they are hated of all men, but they endure; they count it not a great hardship but a joy; for them it is enough for the disciple to be as his Master, and the servant as his Lord; they are beset by no fear; no thought of food or raiment intrudes; they have nothing, but are yet possessed of all things; hated and despised of men, but the earthly centre of heaven's interest and care. What clause of this missionary constitution did they not obey and embody? If here were not their instructions, where were they? If they were not under them, why did they thus obey them? As they thus obeyed them, why not we?

HERE THEN ARE THE METHODS BY WHICH THE EARLY CHURCH FULFILLED HER LORD'S COMMISSION. She gave the Gospel to the then known world. With such rapidity did it spread, that, eighteen years after the door of the kingdom of heaven had been opened to the Gentiles in the house of Cornelius, Paul could say in his Epistle to the Romans, "Have they not heard? Yes, verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words to the ends of the world." Eusebius, the historian, declared, in the fourth century, that the Pentecostal disciples had preached the Gospel "to the Romans, Persians, Armenians, Parthians, Indians, Scythians, and to those of what are called the British Isles." Theodoret bore a like testimony. Here, then, is wisdom for us if we will be instructed. Within two decades the Gospel had penetrated eastward to India, southward into Ethiopia, where it was planted in the palace, and westward to Mauritania and Spain, and even Britain itself.

But note well how those early reapers worked. Our plans are far different. So, also, is our success. If this were greater, or even equal, we might maintain our attitude of superior wisdom. What majestic strength marked them! What humiliating weakness accompanies us! What can be said to justify our adopting methods other than theirs which were so effective? Ours are easier to the flesh, and accord with the drift of human preference. They secure a base of temporal supplies and open communications, and so far dispense with faith. They also look well, and make a fair show in the flesh, and commend our agents to the worldly great among the heathen.

But, alas, all this that is appropriate to carnal warfare and to the proud embassies of earth is the death of success in the spiritual realm. Has it not yet been sufficiently proved by our experience? Why should we not abandon our self-chosen path and betake ourselves to the footsteps of our Lord and his Apostles? Are we better than they, that the work, for us, should be accommodated to sight and ease? In surrendering Christ's instructions, have we not also forgotten that clause in them—"The disciple is not above his Master, nor the servant above his Lord. It is enough for the disciple that he be as his Master, and the servant as his Lord." Were not their ships and nets as much to James and John, and his official position to Matthew, and his association with the religious élite of the day and many fleshly advantages to Paul, and lands and wealth to Barnabas, as corresponding things are to us? Yet they left them, and counted them but refuse. It would appear from Paul's allusion in 1 Cor. ix. that all the other Apostles were married men. But this did not hinder their work among the nations, a sharp contrast to the same question in modern times, as Dr. R. N. Cust has recently so incisively pointed out.

The Church has now been a full century at work, with great wealth and all her much-lauded facilities of printing, travel, and all modern appliances, and yet how great a proportion of the world's population have never yet seen a missionary. She has gained about three millions of adherents, nominal and real, while the heathen and Mohammedans have increased two hundred millions. The old-world superstitions reeled beneath the sturdy blows of the spiritual giants of that first century, and soon after many of them came to their overthrow. But in this last hundred years, "Christian Missions," we read in Mr. Johnston's startling statistical pamphlet, "have made almost no impression on the great systems of heathenism, while the heathen have converted many millions to the faith of Brahma, Buddha, and Mohammed," and some of these, he might have added, to Christendom's indelible shame, have been from her metropolitan centres. Well does the writer just quoted say: "It will appear obvious that if Christ's command is to be obeyed, 'Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all nations,' Christian missions must enter upon a new era as to their methods." Canon Farrar says of these instructions in Matt. x.: "Every missionary should write them in letters of gold. The sterility of missionary labour is a constant subject of regret and discouragement among us. Would it be so if all our missions were carried out in this wise and conciliatory, in this simple and self-abandoning, in this faithful and dauntless spirit? Was a missionary ever unsuccessful who, being enabled by the grace of God to live in the light of such precepts as these, worked as St. Paul worked?"

It is a remarkable fact that, from the great seat of Mohammedan learning and training at Cairo, thousands yearly go forth into Asia and Africa to propagate their false faith on lines much resembling those instituted by Christ, which we have abandoned. They are sent out with only a Koran in their hand, a turban on their head, sandals on their feet, and a strip of woollen cloth around them as a garment. No question of "ways and means" weighs with them or hinders their propaganda. The hospitality they everywhere find meets all their simple needs. Thus the false, using the methods of the true, prospers; while the true, abandoning her God-arranged programme of action, falls back discomfited. Simplicity of method and aim marks God's plan. Complication, weight, and multiplied aims mark man's. How single and definite the object of the first witnesses—to tell out the glad tidings and work the accompanying signs! But who can enumerate the diverse aims which foreign missions now include?

Paul, being the Apostle to the Gentiles, was the one specially chosen by the Holy Ghost, whose missionary journeys should be recorded in the fullest detail. His work was among many nations of different superstitions and greatly diversified characteristics. He was debtor to both Greeks and Barbarians. Therefore it is peculiarly suitable that its study should occupy, and its details instruct, those who would plant the Gospel among sundry peoples. What succeeded so admirably in his hands would certainly be blessed now. Were he on earth at this time, is it to be supposed he would adopt modern expediencies and weight himself with modern missionary appliances, and propose to himself their many aims? Impossible! But what were his methods? Exactly those of this missionary code. By what law was he brought beneath them that does not equally bind us? Search and see if there is a single clause in them that he did not act upon. See if there is a command he did not obey, or a promise or prediction he did not realise, or a consolation he did not appropriate. Wherein did he ever deviate? Time would fail us to run the exact parallel between this missionary constitution and the life-record of this chiefest of missionaries, who, more than any other, filled out the proportions it outlined, and therefore more than any other enlarged the confines of the kingdom of heaven.

Incidentally Paul confirms these instructions, when, in defending himself from his defamers to the Corinthians he says, "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the Gospel shall live of the Gospel" (1 Cor. ix. 14). Where did the Lord so ordain except it be in his enactments for whose dignity we contend? He there said, "The workman is worthy of his meat." Thus the Apostle quotes one of them as a standing law of the kingdom; and it is remarkable that this clause which he quotes is from that portion which is the most uncompromisingly opposed to present plans, for it is in the same sentence that bids them go forth purseless, scripless, without change of raiment or shoes, with nothing but the staff in their hands. It is the reason assigned why they were thus to go; and if the reason for a certain course of action is quoted as authoritative, with what emphasis does it insist on the obligation of the command out of which it grows!

However, there is a deviation on the part of the Apostle from this exact ritual (if it may even be called a deviation), in which, for special reasons, he exceeded their spirit, and so confirmed rather than weakened them. It is in the two instances in which we read of his labouring at his craft while preaching the Gospel. The chief occasion was at Corinth. This region had been traversed by false apostles, who accused him of making a gain of those among whom he wrought. His disinterestedness was questioned. The Gospel was thus obstructed. Therefore he wisely laid his plans so as to defeat this strategem of the adversary. He would, temporarily, earn his bread by manual labour. He would stop the mouth of this lie. His counterplot was successful.

But, lest it should be taken as a precedent, he is at great care in 1 Cor. ix. to explain that his course was exceptional; that he had waived the right which the Lord's ordinance above quoted gave him, with the special object of meeting an exceptional state of things. In 2 Cor. xi. he asks, "Have I committed an offence in abasing myself that ye might be exalted, because I have preached to you the Gospel of God freely? I robbed other churches, taking wages of them, to do you service. And when I was present with you, and wanted, I was chargeable to no man: for that which was lacking to me the brethren which came from Macedonia supplied: and in all things I have kept myself from being burdensome to you ... Wherefore? ... That I may cut off occasion from them which desire occasion."

If the context in both 1 and 2 Cor. be considered, several strong side-lights will be thrown upon our subject. It will be seen that it was the rule for Apostolic missionaries to go from place to place, dependent only upon the bounty of the "worthy"; that to work with their hands was exceptional, they keeping themselves wholly disentangled from the concerns of this life, that they might the more effectively follow their holy calling; that this deviation from Christ's rule required full explanation, and even an apology, although it is true that this last contained a touch of irony; that it was altogether unusual for workers to be ministered to by foreign churches, for what Paul thus received he thanks the Philippians for, telling them that no other church did likewise; and thus, too, he reveals what was the robbery of other churches, and the taking of "wages," of which he speaks to the Corinthians.

The very stumbling-block that Paul was at such pains to remove is one which exists to-day, and is, as those who know the mission field are well aware, a chief hindrance to success. In one section of which the writer knows something, the question is constantly asked by the natives, How are you supported? How much do you receive for preaching? Who pays you? They learn that these are salaried, fed and clothed, and wholly provided for from abroad. This is the death of any thoughts these natives might otherwise have had of disinterestedness. Moreover, their cupidity is at once aroused. A letter from Siam says of the people there: "They tell us, You can well afford to teach people to be good, because your living depends on it. You are paid for it. Thus respect for our teaching is damned." Therefore, as one has said, the use, if any, to be made of Paul's example in working with his hands is that "for as many years as we have fed and hired men, to require that they should go, as Paul did, into the other extreme of not even eating and drinking at anyone's expense, but that they should support themselves by the labour of their hands, and glory thereby over the false prejudice with which the cause, by our mismanagement has come to be circumvented." Self-supporting missions are not wholly Scriptural, if regard be had to the Lord's instructions; but they have this merit just alluded to, and tend to silence the lie with which the mission field rings, that the agents of missionary societies are well provided for, even better than those to whom they are sent, otherwise they would not have ventured forth.

We will next examine objections that may be made to the perpetuity of this charter.

A Missionary.

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XXI.—TEACHING BY CONTRAST.

HEBREWS ix. 6—14.

In this marvellous paragraph there are five striking and well-defined contrasts between the picture-symbols of Leviticus, and the realities revealed in the New Testament Scriptures. And to their consideration we will at once proceed, thanking God as we do so, that we live in the very midst of the heavenly things themselves, rather than in the shadows, which, though they doubtless helped and nourished the devout souls of an earlier age, were confessedly inadequate to supply the deeper demands of man's spiritual life.

I. THE FIRST TABERNACLE IS CONTRASTED WITH THE TRUE (6, 8, 11).—It must have been a fair and lovely sight to behold, when first, on the plains of Sinai, the Tabernacle was reared, with its golden furniture and sumptuous drapery. The very angels may have desired to look into it, and trace the outlines of thoughts, which perhaps were only beginning to unfold themselves to their intelligence. The sculptured forms that bent over the mercy-seat had their counterpart in real beings bending low from heaven. But fair though it was, it had in it all those traces of imperfection which necessarily attach to human workmanship, and make even a needle-point seem coarse beneath the microscope. "It was made with hands" (7). Besides which it was destined to grow old, and perish beneath the gnawing tooth or fret of time. Already it must have shown signs of decay, when it was carefully borne across the Jordan; and in David's days its venerable associations could not blind him to the necessity of replacing it as soon as possible.

How different to this is the real tabernacle, of which it was the type, which is so much "greater and more perfect." What is that tabernacle, and where; sometimes it seems to pious musing as if the whole universe were one great temple; the mountains its altars; the seas and oceans, with their vast depths, its lavers; the heavens its blue curtains; the loftier spaces, with their stars and mystery of colour, and fragrant incense-breath and angel worship, its holy place; whilst the very throne-room of God, where the seer's eye beheld the rainbow-circled throne, corresponds to the most holy place, in which the light of the Shechinah glistened over the blood-stained mercy-seat.

But such poetic flights are forbidden by the sober prose which tells us that the true tabernacle is not "of this creation" (11). It is no part of this created world, whether earth or heaven; it would exist, though all the material universe should resolve itself into primæval chaos; it is a spiritual fabric, whose aisles are trodden by saintly spirits in their loftiest experiences, when, forgetting that they are creatures of time, they rise into communion with God, and enjoy rapturous moments, which seem ages in their wealth of blessed meaning. Such is the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man (viii. 2).

II. THE HIGH PRIESTS ARE CONTRASTED WITH CHRIST (7, 11).—The outer court of the sanctuary might be trodden, under certain conditions, by ordinary Israelites, but for the most part they were excluded, and service was rendered by Levites and priests, at the head of whom stood the high priest, radiant in his garments for glory and beauty. The garment of fine white linen worn next his person. The linen girdle girt about his loins fitting him for ministry (John xiii. 4). The robe of the Ephod woven all of blue, and fringed with scarlet tassels in the form of pomegranates. The Ephod itself composed of the same materials as constituted the veil. And on his breast the twelve precious stones, engraven with the names of Israel. How fair a spectacle was there!

And yet there were two fatal flaws. He was not suffered to continue by reason of death (vii. 23); and he was a sinful man, who needed to offer sacrifice for Himself (7). On the great day of atonement it was expressly stated that he was not to go within the veil to plead for the people, until he had made an atonement for himself and his house by the blood of the young bullock, which he had previously killed (Lev. xvi. 11, 12, 13).

In these respects, how different is our High Priest after the order of Melchizedek. Death tried to master him, but He could not be holden of it, and by death destroyed him that hath the power of death. He continueth ever. He ever liveth. His priesthood is unchangeable. He is a priest for ever. All this was clearly proved in a previous chapter (vii. 23, &c.). But now it is asserted that He was "without spot" (14). He was well searched, but none could convince Him of sin. Judas tried to find some warrant for his treachery, but was compelled to confess that it was innocent blood. Caiaphas and Annas called in false witnesses in vain, and at last condemned Him on words uttered by his own lips, claiming Divine authority and power. Pilate repeatedly asseverated, even washing his hands in proof, that He could find in Him no fault at all. Nay, the Lord Himself bared his breast to the Father in conscious innocence, unlike the saintliest of men, who, in proportion to their goodness, assert their sinnership. "Such a High Priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners, who needeth not daily to offer up sacrifice for his own sins."

III. THE VAILED WAY INTO THE HOLIEST IS CONTRASTED WITH OUR FREEDOM TO ENTER THE PRESENCE OF GOD.—We have the positive assurance of these words that the Holy Spirit meant to signify direct spiritual truth in the construction of the Jewish Tabernacle (8). He who revealed Divine truth by inspired prophets, revealed it also in the structure of the material edifice. The methods of instruction might vary, the teacher was the same. Indeed, the whole ritual was a parable for the time then present (9).

Every well-taught child is aware of the distinction between the holy place, with its candlestick, incense table, and shew bread, and the holy of holies, with its ark, and cloud of glory. The first tabernacle was separated from the second by heavy curtains, which were never drawn aside except by the high priest, and by him only once a year, and then in connection with an unusually solemn ritual. Surely the dullest Israelite must have understood the meaning of that expressive figure; and have felt that, even though his race might claim to be nearer to God than all mankind beside, yet there was a depth of intimacy from which his foot was checked by the prohibition of God Himself. "The way into the holiest was not yet made manifest."

For us, however, the veil is rent. Jesus entered once into the holy place, and as He passed He tore the heavy folds in twain from the top to the bottom. Surely no priest that witnessed it could ever forget the moment, when, as the earth trembled beneath the Temple floor, the thickly woven veil split and fell back, and disclosed the solemnities on which no eyes but those of the high priest dared to gaze. Surely the most obtuse can read the meaning signified herein by the Holy Ghost. There need be no veil between us and God but that which we weave by our own sin and ignorance. We may go into the very secrets of his love. We may stand unabashed where angels worship with veiled faces. We may behold mysteries hidden from before the foundation of the world. The love of God has no secrets for us whom it calls friends.

Oh, why are we so content with the superficial and the transient, with the ephemeral gossip and literature of our times, with the outer courts in which the formalists and worldly Christians around us are contended to remain, when there are such heights and depths, such lengths and breadths, to be explored in the very nature of God? Why do men in our time bring back that veil, though they call it "a screen?" Alas, they are blind leaders of the blind.

IV. THE RITES OF JUDAISM ARE CONTRASTED WITH THE CONSCIENCE-CLEASING ORDINANCES OF THE GOSPEL.—They stood in meats, and drinks, and divers washings, which at the best were but carnal ordinances, imposed until a time of reformation; and though they rendered the worshipper ceremonially clean, they left his conscience unappeased.

A great many of the offences which required to be put away in those olden days arose from the breach of ceremonial laws. A man might touch the dead, or the unclean, and be ceremonially defiled. Or he might eat that which was not killed according to strict Levitical enactments, or might have failed in some small ablution. For any such thing he must undergo the rites of sacrifice and cleansing, ere he could enter the courts of the Lord's house. The sacrificial rites of Moses were quite competent to deal with delinquencies like these, but they failed in providing atonement, or in securing rest for voluntary acts of sin, in which some holy command or precept had been openly and notoriously violated. "They could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience."

The unsatisfactory nature of sacrifices was even patent on the great day of atonement, which is here evidently referred to. Laying aside the gorgeous robes in which he was usually arrayed, the high priest clothed himself in simple linen. The animals to be offered during the day were next presented at the door of the Tabernacle; and lots were cast as to which of the two bullocks was to be for himself, and which of the two goats was to be slain. Then for the first time he entered the most holy place amid the fumes of fragrant incense, and sprinkled the blood of the bullock to make an atonement for the sins of himself and his house. A second time he entered with the blood of the goat, to make an atonement for the sins of the people, who, meanwhile, stood without in penitential grief. And when all was over the nation's sins were confessed over the head of the living goat, which was sent into the land of forgetfulness. Still, no one could suppose that the slaying of the one goat or the sending of the other into the wilderness actually expiated the offence of the whole people. There was a remembrance of sins made once a year, but not necessarily entire remission for all who stood in that vast silent crowd. And many must have turned away in doubt and misgiving. David expressed their feeling when he sang Ps. li., beneath the impression of his own sinnership (see also Micah vi. 6).

But how different is all this now. Our consciences are purged (14). We have no more conscience of sins. We feel that the death of our Lord Jesus is an adequate expiation for them all, and that He has so fully taken them from us, and put them away, that they cannot be found; they are as though they had never been; they have ceased from the very memory of God. True, there are works which are constantly rendering our conscience unclean, as of old the flesh of the Israelite was rendered unclean by the touch of death. But the blood of Jesus does for our conscience what the ashes of the heifer did for the flesh of the ceremonially unclean. "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth from all sin." We have therefore no longer an evil conscience resulting from unexpiated sin.

V. THE BLOOD OF ANIMALS IS CONTRASTED WITH THE BLOOD OF CHRIST.—Hecatombs of victims are not of equal value with one man, how much less with the Son of God. Rivers of the blood of beasts are not equivalent to one drop of his. They offer no standard by which to apprise his precious blood. This is too obvious to need further comment here, and we shall need to defer to another paper our estimate, however inadequate, of the value of that blood.

But in the meanwhile, let us notice that it was through the Eternal Spirit that Christ offered Himself without spot to God. It was not, as some falsely affirm, that the Father forced an innocent man to suffer for sins He had never done, or that our Saviour suffered to appease the Father's wrath; but that the eternal nature of God came out in the sacrifice of Calvary. "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself." When God determined to save men, He did not delegate the work to angels, nor did He permit a sinless man to sink beneath the intolerable burden of a world's sin; but, in the person of his Son, He took home to Himself the agony and curse and cost of sin, and by bearing them, wiped them out for ever. It is, therefore, eternal redemption (12).

The death of the cross was a voluntary act; "He offered Himself"; Priest and victim both. And it was an act in which the Eternal Trinity participated; the manifestation in time of an eternal fact of the Divine nature.

And how can we ever show our gratitude, except by serving the living God (11)? Redeemed to serve. Bought to be slaves. Who can refuse a service so reasonable, fraught with blessedness so transcendent? Head! think for Him whose brow was thorn-girt. Hands! toil for Him whose hands were nailed to the cross. Feet! speed to do his behests whose feet were pierced. Body of mine! be his temple whose body was wrung with pains unspeakable. To serve Him, this is the only true attitude and behaviour, as those who are not their own, but his.

BELGIAN EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—SIR,—I read with much interest in your paper, from time to time, of the success attending the efforts of this Mission. But may I be permitted to ask through your columns what is being done for Bruges, notoriously the most priestridden town in Belgium? Circumstances lead me to go there every year, and, though I make inquiries, I have not been able to learn that there is any Gospel agency at work there. If there is, I should be glad to know of it, as it would be a pleasure to me, when I am there, to give it my co-operation.—Yours,

Mentone. T. R. T.

Dr. Saphir on the Old Testament.

ON Thursday, last week, in St. John's Presbyterian Church, Allen-street, Kensington, Dr. Saphir delivered the fifth of his second series of addresses on the Bible. During the preliminary proceedings, Ps. cxvii. was read. It is, said Dr. Saphir, the shortest of the Psalms, but yet it embraces the whole teaching of the Old Testament. It is based upon what is said in the song of Moses, "Rejoice, O ye nations, with his people." In the first place, it is a Psalm of Israel, for it is Israel that calls upon the other nations to "Praise the Lord." In the second place, it is cosmopolitan, because its language embraces all the inhabitants of the earth. In the third place, it is evangelical, telling of the grace and truth of the Lord—his faithfulness in fulfilling promises given to Israel in his merciful kindness, which affects all the nations of the earth. Lastly, it is joyful, "Praise ye the Lord." The prophetic description of the glory of Christ's kingdom—Israel and the nations walking in "the ways of the Lord"—was also read from Isa. ii. 1—5.

In some opening remarks, Dr. Saphir called attention to the Apostle Paul's distinct testimony as to the evangelical character of the Old Testament Scriptures, in the words to Timothy: "The Holy Scriptures...are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." Proceeding, he insisted that Old Testament history supplies us with the facts and principles upon which all true philosophical and universal history is based. As philosophy may be made up of ideas without facts, so history may be made up of facts without ideas. Scripture facts, however, are full of ideas; they are, so to speak, full of eyes from which light shines to us.

Scripture contains chiefly history. The Christian's faith is in facts, revealing God—God the Creator, whose name, Jehovah, would not be known apart from the Bible. That name implies, first, that He is Sovereign, self-existent, and eternal; second, that He has become the God of history; and, third, that He is the God that is coming, who is fulfilling his promises, and will consummate all his eternal counsel. The name contains all Scripture history, teaching, and prophecy, and the people who accept it live alike in the past, the present, and future; they remember the merciful deeds of God in the past, they live in communion with Him in the present, and they look forward to the glorious consummation of God's purpose at Christ's second coming.

Going into detail as to the character of Bible history, Dr. Saphir said: The history is theological; the selection of events, and the way in which they are narrated, show that the writers were men of the prophetic spirit. The books exhibit God's dealings with men, and tell us how the salvation in Jesus Christ was prepared. And yet light is thrown upon history in general It is shown that humanity is a unity, and not only do events succeed each other, but there is a purpose in them. In fact, history leads up to some goal, to some end. As scientists cannot fathom the beginning and end of things, so man of himself knows nothing of the beginning and end of history. Before geography had made any great progress, the Bible anticipated that the earth would be inhabited to its utmost bounds, and one day acknowledge God in righteousness and prosperity. Moses wrote that the Most High "divided to the nations their inheritance, and separated the sons of Adam"; and Paul said that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men, and hath determined the bounds of their inheritance."

Having spoken at length on the beginning of history, Dr. Saphir referred to Scripture light as to its end. Without entering into the details of events regarding different nations, the Bible presents to us the programme, the Divine idea, the real aim and purpose of history. From the fall of Adam there is a downward line of judgment after judgment; also, from the promise of redemption, there is an upward line of deliverance and grace rescuing a remnant, as the basis of a new period. Tracing the dispensational judgments of God, the speaker pointed out that the combination at Babel was founded on the thought that out of his own resources of strength, wisdom, and culture, man can form an independent and united organism without God. From that day Babel has been a type of the world power in its opposition to God, until, at last, we read of its end in the Book of Revelation—"Babylon is fallen." Further illustrating this point, Dr. Saphir referred to Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, and the parallel vision in the seventh chapter of Daniel, calling special attention to the fact that human history is not towards improvement; but, on the contrary, there will be deterioration until the reign of humanity, when Christ comes in glory and restores all things, as the prophets have foretold.

The actual reality of Jewish history was next dwelt upon. In all its parts the Bible professes to be history, and discoveries in the East during the present generation have remarkably attested its minute accuracy. The objection that many of the Old Testament statements are simply myths was met by showing that the Biblical facts are quite different in character from the heroic and other legends of ancient Greece and Rome. On the comparison, Dr. Saphir founded a strong argument. The fact, he said, that there is base coin in circulation, is no proof that the genuine coin, bearing the superscription of God, the Lord Himself, does not exist. As the idols of the nations were only nothings, or heroes, or demons, so the mythology concerning them does not belong to the realm of fact, but of fiction. But as the God of Israel is the true God, the living God, who created the heavens and the earth, the history which tells of Him does not belong to the realm of fiction but to the realm of truth. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are no mythological characters, and they are not described as different from other men. Moreover, the tone of the historical books is throughout sober, and severely unadorned. The myths of the ancients, because they were not facts, required the embellishment of poetry and rhetoric; but the history of creation, paradise, the patriarchs, of Moses and the children of Israel, of David and Christ, and his apostles, required no such ornamentation. Again, the patriotic self-exaltation and bias are not found in the Bible. Israel's history shows what a wicked and ungrateful nation they were, and they acknowledged that God punished them by making other nations come and subdue them. An intense veracity not found in other ancient writings is apparent throughout, as well as a high purpose in setting forth God's way and will.

Having illustrated the accuracy of the Old Testament, by testimonies of history and recent discoveries, the speaker maintained that, well-attested as is the truth of Bible history, the facts, of which Christ's life on earth is the culmination, demand not merely credence, but faith at the hands of the reader.

SALVATION ARMY RESCUE WORK.—In a letter on this branch of the work, Mrs. Bramwell Booth says:—I have decided to open a small Training House for preparing and instructing those who now offer themselves for this work. The growing friendliness of the particular class we are seeking giving access for our officers to houses to which even the police are never admitted enables us often to bring help to those whose friends have lost all trace of them for years. This branch of the work is costly; but it is marvellously fruitful, both in spiritual result and in human happiness. Very few of us can estimate the joy of a mother whose lost daughter is restored to the old home after years of dark wandering.

The Drink Curse in India.

IN a farewell speech at Bombay (reported in The Guardian of that city), Mr. W. S. Caine made some startling and painful statements as to the increase of the drink curse in India and the complicity of the Government. After remarking on the suggestive fact that the native drink is taxed while beer for consumption by Europeans is subject to no duty, he said:—

The one great, but false, argument in support of the Abkari system had been, that the increase in revenue was caused by the suppression of illicit distillation. That argument was entirely knocked on the head now. The system had been in force fifty years, and in the places where it had been most strenuously worked, the officials admitted that there had been no illicit distillation for years, and yet in those very places the consumption had enormously increased. All the officials that he had met, from the Viceroy downwards, had admitted that the increasing drink revenue was caused by increased drunkenness. Some had said that the increase of drink had caused a decrease in the use of drugs, such as opium, and ganga, and bhang. This was not so. Reference to the reports showed that the increase in the consumption of other drugs was in precisely the same ratio as the increase in the use of alcohol. The taste for one drug increased the taste for the others. The enormous increase was not only in country spirits, but in imported foreign liquors. He had seen in one of the drink-shops in Darjeeling, "African" spirits. This "African" brandy was a vile burning poison, full of fusil oil made from decayed potatoes in Scotland and on the Continent of Europe, especially for sale amongst the natives of Africa. Upon this shop was the notice: "No liquor allowed to be sold to soldiers here, by order of the Government." They might poison the natives, but not the English soldier. Sixteen collectors in the Bengal district had been warmly applauded by the Government for the large increase in the sale of drink in their districts. The largest of these was at Patna, where the duty had increased 97,000 rupees in the twelve months. Mr. Caine drew a graphic picture of the misery, and want, and destitution in Patna caused by this increase. The Government complimented the collector for the increase in revenue arising out of the destruction of its subjects!

Terrible cases of oppression and injustice happened under this system. At an annual mela at Backergunge a shop for the sale of wines, opium, and ganga, was set up some years ago. The owner of the land seeing the fearful harm that was being done by it, refused to let the shop any longer for the purpose. The collector of the district sent a notice to the keeper, commanding him to remain where he was and take no notice of his landlord, and in addition sent a threatening letter to the landlord for daring to deal with his own property in this manner. Drink-shops were set up just outside the cotton mills to tempt the operatives. The system was for the Government to distil the spirits, and let out districts to the men who engaged to buy the largest amount. These men, called "liquor farmers," in their anxiety to obtain the contract, bid for much higher quantities than they could possibly sell in the ordinary way. The consequence was that at the end of their contract they had large quantities left, which they sold at exceedingly low rates, and flooded the district with abominable drunkenness, increasing the craving for it in thousands of cases, and thus laying the foundation for an increased consumption in the future.

The moral to be deduced from his revelations is that prohibition and nothing less should be demanded from the Government. The native conscience and opinion are entirely in favour of such a course. As Mr. Caine himself pointed out, at Muttra, before the Abkari system was instituted, there was only one drink-shop, and that outside the town, the native authorities not allowing it within the walls. To-day there are forty Government drink-shops inside the town.

EAST FINCHLEY CONFERENCE.

THE promoters of the conference on The Christian Life, held last year at East Finchley, were so encouraged by its success that they decided upon a similar conference this year. The meetings were held on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of last week. The subject discussed during the three days was "The Work of the Holy Spirit," this being subdivided into the "Promise of the Spirit," "The Fruit of the Spirit," and "The Power of the Spirit," with one day devoted to each of these three aspects. At three and seven each day public meetings were held in the Congregational Church, addressed, amongst others, by Revs. Dr. Cave, R. F. Horton, E. White, A. Rowland, J. B. Figgis, F. Hastings, and W. R. Skerry. Sir Arthur Blackwood presided at the Tuesday evening meeting; Mr. Tinling presided at all the others, by special request.

Deep interest was manifest throughout all the meetings, and on the very first occasion the Holy Spirit honoured the deliberation on his own work by a striking sense of his presence. Larger attendances marked these meetings than those of last year, and they were thoroughly sustained in interest and power. Manifest appreciation of the words spoken was demonstrated by the audience, and testimonies as to the usefulness and helpfulness were most emphatic. The following note sent in on the third day is an instance in point:—"The mother who asked prayer for her two sons last evening desires with them to praise the Lord for answering that prayer, and to ask that the Holy Ghost imparted to them may cleanse and fill them entirely, and keep them in the sunshine of the Lord's presence. Praise is also desired on behalf of three servants in that family, who each received a blessing at the meetings yesterday."

The practical aspects of the work of the Holy Ghost are more and more pressing themselves upon the mind and heart of the Church in the presence of great problems that now face her; and very welcome and very useful were the clear statements made as to the real need, the full supply of that need in the Holy Ghost, and the way that supply was to be secured. Very definitely was it pointed out that, beyond the first reception of the Holy Ghost creating the soul anew at conversion, there was necessary an additional inflowing of the Spirit in larger measure to fit for service and Christian living, and that without this additional baptism Christian life must remain far below the purpose of Christ and the demands of the age. To secure this additional and indispensable baptism, it was made equally clear that strict adherence to Gospel truth, entire self-humiliation, full consecration, and prayer were all essential, and that if these conditions were provided and permanently cherished, certain and permanent power must be the result. Many will date a clearer view of their need and a fuller supply to that need from these most successful and helpful meetings.

Apart from the words spoken, the spiritual atmosphere which pervaded all the gatherings was stimulating and health-giving to the spiritual faculties. There were meetings also held each day at noon for ministers only, and the frank confession of personal experience, the practical hints as to discharge of ministerial duty, the happy harmony of spirit, and the sense of God's presence in prayer and confession were greatly helpful and enjoyable to all who embraced the privilege of being present. On the second and third days public prayer-meetings were held in the Lecture Hall, where tea was provided for all remaining from afternoon to evening meetings.

A word should be said in praise of the good offices of the pastor of the church, Rev. J. F. B. Tinling, and his people, whose excellent arrangements and extreme courtesy and kindness added so much to the smooth working and complete enjoyment of the various gatherings. One outcome of the conference of last year was the holding of succeeding monthly meetings of a similar character at various North London churches in order, both Congregational and Baptist. So satisfactory was this arrangement, that it has been decided to repeat these meetings this year also. The promoters of the two conferences at East Finchley have been so much encouraged by the decided and developing success of both, that it is probable the meetings may become annual, held possibly in various churches in turn.

THIRTY YEARS IN TURKEY.

DEAR SIR,—Your reference in your first issue for this year to having completed thirty years of service reminds us of our thirty years here in this city and province, and of the marked change by the Gospel. The church of five members organised in this city twenty-five years ago now numbers one hundred and eighty. There are seventy-five boys in our high school, twenty of whom are in the boarding department, with the view, on the part of a few, of becoming teachers and preachers; from which department four have entered either the college or theological seminary at Harpoot. Work is encouraging among the fourteen out-stations, in one of which is a church of fifty members. The girls' boarding school in this city, for twenty years under the successful management of the Misses Ely, numbers forty pupils, with as many day scholars. There is this winter an unusual religious interest in this school.

Since 1884 we have been greatly aided by the efficient labours of Rev. R. M. Cole. Amid the increasing hindrances we are thankful for what the Lord has accomplished.—Your co-labourer in Christ, GEORGE C. KNAPP.

EAST LONDON DISTRESS.—During the past two months, the Clapton Park Tabernacle Benevolent Society has helped weekly an average of 300 families, many of which have been in the greatest destitution. To the families of unemployed working men there have been supplied 3000 quarts of soup and 25 sacks of broken bread. We find many families eager to obtain broken provisions left from the dinner-table that previously were given to the pigs. With this, good dinners are obtained by those who would otherwise not have any dinner at all. We have had so much distress to deal with of late, that, owing to the lack of sufficient funds, we have had to discontinue our free dinners to poor children that are sent to the Board school without food. This is a great grief to us.

THOMAS JACKSON.

MRS. AITCHISON, in a recent letter from Ikwezi Lamaci, Harding, Natal, reports favourably upon all branches of the work in which, with her husband, she is engaged among the heathen population. The good seed is certainly taking root, and the bonds of superstition are as evidently being broken. The school has been greatly used for the enlightenment of the people, and among recent victories is mentioned the fact that a "witch-doctoress," who has long withstood all Christian efforts, has begun to send her children to school. This has been talked of in every kraal; and the prejudice of other natives will, it is hoped, speedily be overcome. The utter indifference to Christian truth, which was formerly observable, has disappeared, and "the old, old story" is now listened to with intelligence and eagerness. Mrs. Aitchison adds that the toys and useful articles which, by the kindness of friends, she was enabled to distribute on the last "breaking-up" day, were highly prized by children and parents alike.

For the Young.

A BOY'S ANSWER.

Two years ago, some gentlemen were invited to speak at a large gathering of Jewish children in Whitechapel. One of these, a well-known and much-loved worker among children as well as adults, told the writer that when the conductor of the meeting asked the boys and girls why the good gentlemen had come so far to talk to them, one of the boys answered boldly and earnestly: "Because they have found a good thing, and they likes it, and they wants others to taste."

Suppose, for a moment or two, we look at this boy's reasons, to see if they are good, and if what he so positively stated can be proved to be true.

(1) "They have found a good thing."—What had they found? Just what one brother, many years ago, told another he had found—Salvation, the Christ of God (John i.); Him of whom one friend spoke to another as "Jesus of Nazareth" (John i.); that gracious One whose voice and speech were so divine and beautiful that those who heard Him give an invitation were constrained to abide with and follow Him (John i.). That holy One who called the little children unto Him, and took them upon his knee, and drew them to his bosom (Mark x.).

A little girl saw a picture of this scene, and she asked what one mother in the foreground was doing to her baby girl. "Oh," answered her mother, "she is pushing her to Jesus." "Mother," said little Carrie, "I should not want you to push me, I would run without pushing." This child thought it a "good thing" to come to Jesus. Many boys and girls who have found out the state of their own hearts, and have come to Christ to have them cleansed, have also found that "no good thing will He withhold" (Ps. lxxxiv.) from his own dear, faithful children.

You remember, Nathanael asked the question: "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" (John i.). Would you be able to answer out of a full heart: "This is my Beloved, and this is my Friend" (Song v.)?

(2) "They like it." Why do they like it? Ah, "We love Him, because He first loved us" (1. John iv.). The Saviour set his seal to it (John xv.) that this was the highest possible love in the heart of man, to lay down his life for his friends. One of the Divine Master's honoured servants records it as a reason for his living faith that the Son of God had given it him by his death—"Who loved me, and gave Himself for me" (Gal. ii.). No wonder that some of us love Him! Have you heard his voice asking you, "Lovest thou Me?" What a blessed and "good thing" for you if you can answer: "Lord, Thou knowest all things; Thou knowest that I love Thee" (John xxi.).

(3) "They want others to taste."—That is the first feeling of those who have experienced the joy of salvation. They long to bring others to the feet of Jesus; they are like that one, who, when he had found the Saviour, brought him (his brother) to Jesus (John i.). If you know what it is to have a clean heart and a right spirit (Ps. li.), I am sure you will not rest satisfied until, like Andrew, you have brought some to that Saviour who died that all might live unto Him (1 Cor. v.). God wants you for his little missionary, and He will show you how you may serve Him in this. A girl whom I know well has a prayer-meeting in her own room once a week, by consent of her mother; and here she gathers those of her friends who know not Jesus, and tells them about Him, and then she asks Him that they may be blessed by his Spirit to the yielding of themselves to God. If we love Him, it is a sign of that love that we bring others to Him.

In this first chapter of St. John's Gospel, there are said to be four steps which fit in very beautifully with the three reasons given by the Jewish lad beforenamed. They are:—

Looking upon Jesus (ver.).
Following Jesus (ver.).
Abiding with Jesus (ver.).
Bringing others to Jesus (ver.).

Fill in all the blank spaces I have left for the numbers of the verses. If you have not already given yourself to this loving Saviour, surely you will resolve to do so now.

Come to the Saviour, make no delay,
Here, in his Word, He has shown us the way
Here, in our midst, He is standing to-day,
Tenderly saying—"Come."

M. Butler Gerds.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., March 17, Luke xii. 49—59; Mon., March 18, Luke xiii. 1—17; Tues., March 19, Luke xiii. 18—35; Wed., March 20, Luke xiv. 1—14; Thurs., March 21, Luke xiv. 15—24; Fri., March 22, Luke xiv. 25—35; Sat., March 23, Luke xv. 1—10.

"HAVE YOU ANY STARS IN YOUR CROWN?"

"Are you going to the ball, to-night, Sissy?
You've stars all over your gown,
And diamonds on your arms and neck;
Have you any stars in your crown?"

"My darling, I don't understand you;
I have no crown, dear May."
"Oh, but, Sissy, if you love Jesus,
He'll give you a crown some day.

You know how I came to Jesus,
Not very long ago?
Well, ever since then I've been trying
To get others to come, you know.

And there's one little girl called Nellie,
Who at school I often see,
So I told her all about Jesus,
And what He has done for me.

And I told her that at my Saviour's feet
She might lay her sins all down;
That He would forgive her—and so He has.
So Nellie 's one star in my crown.

But I've only one star yet, Sissy,
To wear in my crown in heaven—
I can't get many stars yet, Sissy,
You see, I'm only eleven.

But you are grown up, and pretty;
And you know so many folks, too;
Won't there be lots of stars, Sissy,
In the crown Jesus gives to you!"

. . . . .

That night in the crowded ball-room,
Mid the glitter and glare around,
"Have you any stars in your crown, Sissy?
Rang out with a warning sound.

Rang louder than merriest music,
Amid the giddiest whirl;
Rang higher than happiest voices,
In the ear of a startled girl.

"Have you any stars in your crown, Sissy?"
"But I have no crown to wear!
If I went to-night to the unseen world,
No crown awaiteth me there."

In the light of a conscience awakened,
She looked back on the days and hours
On the opportunities thrown away,
On the misused talents and powers.

And she fled from the crowded ball-room,
With its 'wildering music and glare,
To the side of a little sleeping child,
And lowly she bowed her there;

And all the sins of a lifetime,
She laid at the Saviour's feet;
And received to her weary spirit,
His pardon, gracious and sweet.

Then took she the hand of the sleeper,
On the fair little face looked down,
Softly whispering, "May, my darling,
I am one more star in your crown."

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. Josiah Spiers, Bishop's Stortford, March 8—20; Gospel Hall, Southgate-road, Wood Green, N., March 22—24, 8 p.m., for teachers and workers; and March 25 to April 5 (Sat. and Sun. excepted), for children, 7 p.m. Mr. H. Hutchinson, St. Andrew's Schools, New Kent-road, March 10—17; St. Silas, Birmingham, March 26. Mr. Macro, Hamond-square, Hoxton, March 11—16. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Romford, March 31 to April 12; Doveridge, Uttoxeter, April 17—23. Mr. Martin J. Hall, St. James's Schools, Plumstead, March 16—20; St. Jude's Iron Room, Mildmay, March 30 to April 5; Southampton, April 5—7.

CHRIST CHURCH, NORTH BRIXTON.—Five days' mission services for young people were lately held in this parish, under the auspices of the Special Service Mission, and conducted by Mr. H. Hutchinson. The evening meetings were attended by 500 or 600 young people, and great earnestness was apparent throughout. The hearts of the workers were greatly encouraged by the evident tokens of God's presence and blessing. One remarkable feature in this mission has been the increased earnestness of the Sunday-school teachers. In some cases the same teachers might have been seen surrounded by their classes night after night, and great blessing has been the result.

FRIEDENHEIM.—Miss Davidson still carries on her gracious work at 133, Mildmay-road, N. The report for last year shows that fifteen sufferers experienced the blessing of a quiet place in which to die. Most of the deaths in this "Home of Peace" were calm and beautiful, strong hope being inspired by the confidence that the Lord "will never forsake" those who trust in Him.

SAILORS' REST, DUBLIN.—A deeply interesting work has been started, at 63, North Wall, for the benefit of seamen by the Missionary of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, London. The North Wall is the great highway to Liverpool, Glasgow, and many other ports in England, Scotland, and Wales; about forty steamers leave every week; thousands of sailors of all nations start from this port on their way home, with from one to twelve months' pay on them. Since the Rest has been opened seamen have entered it homeless, penniless, and friendless. In June last the Rest was opened, and since then over 4400 seamen have visited the place. Sixty have had board and lodging free of charge. Those in distress, besides some shipwrecked men, have had a free pass to their homes. Some have been dealt with personally, and directed to the Saviour. The workers have been the means of saving money and clothes to the amount of £200. Encouraging letters of thanks come from these poor fellows. Tracts, books, and good reading, may be sent to the missionary, J. Tierney.

THE LATE MR. DENHAM SMITH.

"I shall walk through the valley of the shadow of death;
I shall walk through the valley in peace.
For Jesus Himself will be my Leader,
I shall walk through the valley in peace."

SUCH was the song with which the saintly Joseph Denham Smith passed away from this scene of sin and death, to be for ever with the Lord. Thousands will recognise how perfectly it accords with the unique life and ministry, familiar to them through a lengthened course of years.

In the calling home of this beloved Christian, the Church of God on earth loses one of its brightest ornaments, and one of its most faithful servants, who unswervingly followed his Lord, and counted it, throughout his ministry of fifty years, his highest joy to spend and be spent in his Master's service. That ministry, so redolent with the savour of Christ, has endeared him to many thousands in this and other lands, who have never had the privilege of his personal acquaintance or of his vivâ voce exposition of the Word.

Whilst widely known by reason of the eloquence, simplicity, power of imagery, choice of language, and force by which in pulpit and platform he preached the Gospel or expounded Scripture doctrine, Mr. Denham Smith is still more extensively known by the activity of his pen, not only in prose but in sacred verse. His literary attainment was of a high order, which in early life exhibited itself in works of no mean merit, such as "The Rhine and the Reformation," "A Voice from the Alps," "Cromwell," and other publications, but in later years confined itself to the writing of largely circulating volumes, such as "Life Truths," "The Brides of Scripture," "The Prophet of Glory," "Hosea," besides Merrion Hall and Freemasons' Hall addresses, and numerous other well-known religious works. As a writer of sacred hymns Mr. Denham Smith will be long known by the sweet combination of poetry and doctrinal truth, as shown in such hymns as "Just as thou art," "Jesus, thy dying love I own," "Communion with the Lord," and others.

Mr. DENHAM SMITH was born in July, 1817. He had a happy childhood, and possessed a buoyancy of spirit which never forsook him. His widowed mother, a devoted Christian, longed for his early conversion, and abundantly were her prayers answered.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, London, W.)

At the age of sixteen he first preached the Gospel, and many were thrilled by his lifting up of Christ. Hearing of Ireland's need, he determined to settle in that land, and there for many years spent a happy and blessed life in pointing sinners to Christ. In 1841 he commenced his more recognised public ministerial career at Newry, where his memory is still held in affection and gratitude. Thence he removed to Kingstown in 1848, and devoted himself to the pastorate of the church that he was instrumental in planting in Northumberland-avenue, and which was destined to prove so remarkable a centre of spiritual life and blessing to multitudes.

In 1859 a wave of blessing rolled over the north of Ireland, whence the work spread to other parts. In August, 1859, Mr. and Mrs. John Morley, of Clapton, visited Ireland, to see the beauties of Wicklow and other places of interest. Mr. Denham Smith remarked, "But you will not return, will you, without seeing something of the remarkable revival?" "We had not thought of seeing it," said Mr. Morley, "but we will consider it." Accordingly, accompanied by him, they visited Belfast, Ballymena, and other places which formed the centre of this blessed work. Mr. Denham Smith rejoiced in the wondrous movement, and received a fresh baptism of power from on high as the result of the visit. This was evidenced by a remarkable outburst of spiritual blessing on Sept. 9 in his church at Kingstown, which continued for many months with notable blessing to literally thousands of souls. Services were commenced on board the four express boats then running between Kingstown and Holyhead, which were remarkably owned of God.

Thousands were brought under the saving power of the Holy Spirit. These were by no means drawn from the poorer classes only, but included people from all sections of society, many of whom are now prominent servants of God.

Mr. Shuldham Henry, since then a well-known preacher of the Gospel, was converted to God through the instrumentality of Mr. Smith, whom he was induced to hear in January, 1860. Awakened to a sense of sin, Mr. Henry went to the Northumberland-avenue Church, Kingstown, and was brought to realise his lost condition by Mr. Denham Smith looking him in the face and saying, "I see there are some singing 'Jesus is mine' who have no right." Shortly afterwards Mr. Henry found peace.

From Kingstown Mr. Smith now went forth with a yearning heart for souls, to commence services in the Irish Metropolis, the Metropolitan Hall being taken, where meetings that will be borne in everlasting remembrance by many who shared in the blessing vouchsafed therein were held, the abiding fruit of which may be found in many parts of the world to-day. Thousands flocked together in the morning, and remained hour after hour, many without refreshments until ten and eleven at night. Careless ones were awakened, anxious ones led into peace, and persons of all classes rejoiced in a newly found Saviour.

Amongst those from England who visited this work in Dublin was Mr. Benjamin Scott, Chamberlain of the City of London, who wrote to The Revival as follows:—

...The work may be said to have commenced at Kingstown, on Sept. 5, 1859, and the conversion of almost the whole crews of the Cambria, Telegraph, Scotia, and Eblana [steamers crossing the Irish Channel] followed. Meetings for praise and prayer were held by the crews of the several vessels, whenever they were in harbour. The cabins were soon found to be too strait for the numbers attending, and preaching from the deck of one or other of the boats moored alongside the quay was commenced on Sunday afternoons; and the scenes witnessed on the shore of Lake Galilee in the days of our Lord's earthly sojourn were reproduced in the harbour of Kingstown.

"Conversion invariably attends these services; as few as one and as many as sixty-nine have been reported as the result of a single meeting; and on the anniversary of the outbreak of the work, it was announced that some three thousand known conversions had resulted in the space of twelve months. Many of the conversions have been of a remarkable kind. Roman Catholics of all classes, including the highest ladies and gentlemen moving in the best circles in Dublin, young men and women from the shops and warehouses, sailors, soldiers, and children of tender age, have alike professed change of heart, and have manifested that change in the life.

As might be expected amidst such scenes and services as these, Mr. Denham Smith soon felt that he could no longer be bound by denominational bonds. Accordingly, he retired from the pastorate of his church at Kingstown, in order to take his stand as a servant of the Church at large. Like Whitefield and the Wesleys, counting the world his parish, he resolved thenceforth to devote his life to the proclamation of the Gospel apart from all sectarian lines. It was, however, the deep desire of his friends, on his leaving Kingstown, to secure the continuance of his labours amongst them, and, in accordance with this, it was decided to erect for him a suitable building for religious services, so that Dublin might be "a centre of evangelising effort," in which building Mr. Denham Smith might have "the privilege and joy of the co-operation and fellowship of various devoted ministers and servants of Christ." In this way was built Merrion Memorial Hall, Dublin.

Mr. William Fry, who had taken so prominent a part in initiating the Metropolitan Hall services, induced the late Mr. Henry Bewley to take the lead in the erection of Merrion Hall, which, in due time, was opened by Mr. Denham Smith, Dr. Octavius Winslow, Rev. Frederick Trench, Rev. Marcus Rainsford, and many other prominent men.

Shortly afterwards Mr. Denham Smith, accompanied by Dr. Kidd, the late Mr. Henry Bewley, and Mr. William Fry, visited Paris and Geneva, where crowded meetings were held. The hymns that had proved so useful in Dublin were translated into French by Hon. Elizabeth Waldegrave and others.

About this time Mr. John Morley invited Mr. Denham Smith to visit London, to preach the Word, and to give an account of the work of God in the sister island. Freemasons' Hall was taken, and a series of meetings held which are still fresh in the memory of many readers of these lines.

Mr. Denham Smith frequently re-visited London at Mr. Morley's invitation. Drawing-room and other meetings were held at Upper Clapton, the Manor Rooms, Hackney, St. James's Hall, Hanover-square Rooms, Bedford-row Chapel (Hon. Baptist Noel's), Sadler's Wells Theatre, and other places, with remarkable results, and an iron building was subsequently erected at Upper Clapton, in which he was the first to conduct a series of services. This became a permanent centre of spiritual life and activity, and the iron building subsequently gave place to the commodious Clapton Hall, in which Mr. Denham Smith continued to minister the Gospel during the months of May and November each year, until the beginning of the illness which terminated his earthly course. This large building was invariably filled whenever he preached there, and his loss will be deeply felt by a large circle in that district, who loved him well, and to whom he used to send brief messages from time to time throughout his illness.

During the next few years he visited several provincial towns in England, amongst others, Liverpool, Leamington, Brighton, Hastings, and Chichester, also various counties in Ireland, preaching the Gospel with the same wonderful blessing that had followed his labours elsewhere.

St. George's Hall in Langham-place, London, had been secured for Sunday evening services by Mr. C. R. Hurditch, at which Mr. Denham Smith frequently preached. On his removal for permanent residence to London, he undertook the responsibility of the double service on the Lord's Day at this hall in conjunction with Dr. Habershon and Mr. Shuldham Henry. Since that time he continued to preach in St. George's Hall on Sundays for the greater part of each year, and never without large audiences and manifest fruit in the conversion of souls. Believers were greatly edified and built up in their holy faith, and a considerable church was gathered. These services are still continued.

In the spring of 1886 Mr. Denham Smith's health gave way. Persistent attacks of indigestion weakened his hitherto active constitution, and caused much anxiety to his friends. His visit to Ireland, with its attendant engagements, was undertaken with difficulty. A short stay in Switzerland failed to benefit him. Returning home, his health underwent decided improvement, yet his former vigour was not regained. During the winter of 1886-87 he appeared at many meetings, but platform exertions were followed by complete prostration. The month of July, 1887, found him suddenly compelled, by serious and alarming illness, to relinquish work altogether. It was after four weeks of happy service in Merrion Memorial Hall, Dublin, that on Tuesday, July 26, he closed his long and eventful public ministration. During a short stay at Shanklin he enjoyed an interlude of strength enabling him to take walks in front of his house, but another attack of illness speedily brought him nigh to death. However, he recovered so as to be conveyed to London, where he continued throughout to be nursed by loved ones, tended by his son Dr. Gilbart Smith, watched over by Dr. Habershon, and seen from time to time by numerous friends, including his old and attached friend Dr. Kidd.

The intense affection of the father for all the members of his family was fully reciprocated by them; each seemed to vie with the other in showing the most devoted attention to his every want in his long sickness. It fell, however, to the willing lot of his eldest son as physician, and to his two eldest daughters, to bear the chief burden of the care through the eighteen months of his lingering illness; and a lovelier instance of family affection and unwearied devotion we have never seen or known. Often during these months of prostration have we heard the beloved invalid speak of this with pardonable parental pride and gratitude to God.

Many choice testimonies to the preciousness of Christ were given by Mr. Smith during the eighteen months of his illness. Some of these will appear in our next issue.

The expressions of disease varied with the passing months, so that last summer Mr. Denham Smith was so far convalescent as to be able to enjoy occasional drives. Since September, however, strength had been slowly departing, and at the beginning of the present year a recurrence of the more serious symptoms took place. On Thursday, February 29, in much prostration, he roused to ask the doctor, "Can you give me the shadow of an idea how long it will be?" "Not long, dear one, only a little while now." "Oh, how sweet—how sweet!" On another occasion, when in great pain, he said, "God is good—and if the furnace were ten times hotter, I should still say God is love." Again, he remarked, "Don't you think that if you and I were inside those gates together, and had the welcomes, and saw the joy, it would compensate for all these sorrows and sadnesses?"

Specially, during the last few weeks, he loved to hear his second daughter softly singing some of the old hymns. He would say, "They cheer the way down through the valley," and would join in with the chorus or words, here and there, in his own old way, up to almost the very last. Even when the voice was gone, it was touching to find him still keeping time with his hand. His favourite hymns for such times were, "Jesus, Lover of my soul," "Come, sing to me of heaven," "There are angels hovering round," "I shall walk through the valley," "Beulah Land." Usually he was soothed to sleep by them. One day the doctor said, "You feel as if you wanted to go to sleep, don't you?" "I feel, dear friend, as if I wanted to go to heaven," and soon this longing was granted.

All day on Monday, March 4, he lay as if asleep. Early on Tuesday morning those around him noticed the rapidly failing pulse, and calling the absent ones, they silently watched for the closing of that life so precious to them. His wish had long been expressed that he might pass away in his sleep, and this wish was granted. In perfect stillness his wife and children, with only one exception, stood around till he quietly, peacefully, and without a sigh or struggle, "passed through the gates" into the presence of his Lord and Master. The last hymns in which he joined on Friday and Saturday night were, "I shall walk through the valley," and "Beulah Land." The last text to which he responded was, "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." With his weak and trembling voice he echoed "rest." Early on Monday morning the last prayer he breathed was, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit."

Thus we bid farewell to a beautiful life that has gone from us, which for purity, peace, and power, was as perfect as we may expect to find on earth, till the Lord Himself shall return.

In adding a stanza of the hymn written by the beloved departed one, nearly thirty years ago, it will probably awaken in the memory of thousands an echo of the intense feeling with which it was so often sung, then and since, in the memorable meetings in England and Ireland, in many of which it was led by the clear, silvery voice of our departed brother:—

Thus we part, but not for ever,
Joyful hopes our bosoms swell;
They who love the Saviour, never Know a last, a long farewell;
Blissful unions
Lie beyond this parting vale.

"Therefore, my beloved,...be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord."

The Funeral.

In the presence of a large and representative gathering of Christian friends, some of whom had come from Ireland and other distant places, the mortal remains of Mr. Smith were consigned to their resting-place in Hampstead Cemetery on Saturday afternoon. After two days of continuous rain the clouds had cleared away, and the bright spring sunshine that bathed the scene was a fitting reminder of the sunny, gracious, and fruitful life that had been lived by our departed friend. The plain coffin, with its simple inscription, having been borne from the gate of the cemetery to the grave on the shoulders of various friends, followed by the mourning relatives and others, a short and interesting service was held. Mr. Shuldham Henry prefaced it by saying that Mr. Smith had himself indicated Saturday afternoon as the time of his interment, in order that many of his friends might conveniently be present. By his wish also there were no wreaths or flowers displayed on the coffin. Mr. Henry added that the service would not be an open one; but, in accordance with the desire of the deceased, it would be conducted by Dr. McKilliam, Mr. C. R. Hurditch, and himself.

After having led in earnest prayer, Dr. McKillam said that thirty years ago at one of the great gatherings convened by the late Duchess of Gordon at Huntly, he first looked in the face of Mr. Denham Smith. He had not been long a Christian, and Mr. Smith's bright sunlit countenance preached a sermon to him that he had never forgotten. He had known him intimately since, and had come to know that the sunniness that shone out of his face was but the reflection of the Christ-life dwelling in his heart. We may be certain that one reason why the Lord kept him so long in the sick-chamber was that the hundreds of people who passed through it during those many months might see how one who had so devotedly served his Master could meet the last enemy, Death; and show that that enemy had been overcome through the One whom he loved and served. Mr. Smith's very dying might be said to have been as impressive as his life. His one thought in life and death was Jesus, Jesus, Jesus; he was constantly bearing testimony to the gladsomeness of the Christian life even down here, and to the joy of looking for the Lord's return. As we commit the remains of our friend to the dust, we may know for ourselves the one great thing that will lift us above present circumstances, the thought that even now the Lord may come to receive us to Himself, and to bring back with Him those dear friends who have fallen asleep.

Mr. Shuldham Henry prayed that consolation might be granted to the sorrowing relatives, and that the solemn occasion might carry its message to any unsaved ones present. Addressing the bystanders, Mr. Henry went on to say that, as he was interring a relative of his own twenty-nine years ago, God spoke in power to his soul. He had been up to that time a careless, pleasure-loving man of the world, but that was the turning point in his life. He was afterwards induced to attend Mr. Denham Smith's church in Kingstown. At an evening service in the schoolroom Mr. Smith was singing the hymn—

There is a fountain filled with blood.

Laying his hand on Mr. Henry's shoulder, he said—

There may you ——
Wash all your sins away.

He was able to sing—

I will believe, I do believe,
That Jesus died for me.

The whole current of his life—his feelings and prospects were changed, and since then he had been a follower and servant of the Lord Jesus Christ. Mr. Henry followed up his statement of personal experience by a very urgent entreaty that any unconverted ones present might over the open grave of this beloved servant of God, accept the offer of God's grace, who is now ready to forgive, but who will one day be ready to judge those who have spurned his salvation.

Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, in the course of his address, said we were surrounding the grave of no ordinary Christian. We were not there to applaud his memory, but to magnify the grace of God that shone in him. For fifty years Mr. Smith had served his Master in the ministry of the Gospel. About thirty years ago his Christian life became more decided and emphatic in connection with the memorable Irish revival of the time. Thousands have been led through his ministry to know and to love the Saviour, while many of God's servants have been led into a fuller and more abundant life by receiving the truth from his lips. After quoting from a warm tribute to Mr. Smith's memory and saintly life, from Mrs. Grattan Guinness (which we hope to give in our next issue), Mr. Hurditch addressed some words of Gospel appeal to the listeners, and closed his remarks with prayer.

The coffin was lowered into its place, and Mr. Shuldham Henry, amid solemn silence, broken only by the utterances of heavy grief from mourning ones, repeated the words—"Ashes to ashes, dust to dust; in sure and certain hope of a resurrection to eternal life and coming glory." Then was sung the hymn chosen by the deceased, of which we give the first and last verses:—

Sleep on beloved, sleep and take thy rest,
Lay down thy head upon thy Saviour's breast;
We love thee well, but Jesus loves thee best.—
Good night.

. . . .

Until we meet again before his throne,
Clothed in the spotless robes He gives his own,
Until we know, even as we are known.—
Good night.

In a concluding petition, Mr. Hurditch prayed for those who had come from the sister isle, and for a blessing on the future labours of all the brethren present. The benediction closed the service. The last lingering looks were taken at the oaken casket that enclosed the precious remains, and the mourners slowly departed. A gentle hand from among the crowd scattered a posy of beautiful snowdrops on the coffin. Gradually the silent and chastened company turned away from the tomb to face once more their duties to the living, and to ponder, doubtless, on the pregnant lessons of the occasion. The West Hampstead Cemetery is pleasantly situated, high up in the north-western suburb. The air is sweet and nimble, and in the coming summer days we should think there will be many a pilgrimage to the spot where lies the dissolving earthly tabernacle of one of the most useful and most loveable disciples of Jesus Christ that this generation has known.

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.—The friends of Israel will be sorry to learn that, owing to ill-health, Rev. P. I. Warschawski will be compelled to relinquish the above Mission, in which he has laboured for several years with much acceptance. He hopes to proceed to Hastings with his family at the end of March.

MISS FLAVIN, a young Liverpool lady, is on her way to Father Damien's leper colony in Molokai. She has gone through a special course of hospital training, and has studied the horrible malady for the last two years.

THE CHINESE PRESS is stirring up missionaries to undertake medical work. The China Medical Mission Journal contains articles by Dr. J. G. Kerr, of Canton, and Rev. A. W. Douthwaite, M.D., of Chefoo, on the value of medical work as an aid to evangelisation. Commenting upon them, The China Overland Mail says: "We think it is becoming more and more apparent to religious workers in this part of the world that the masses of China cannot be reached by merely preaching to them; that their best chance of success is in imitating the example of the Master they serve, who inculcated his teaching while going about doing good. Of course one does not wish to see all the missionaries turned into sick nurses pure and simple, but only that they should realise that by discriminatingly helping the natives in their sufferings they can best reach their hearts."

A PROSPEROUS DUBLIN CHURCH.

The most rapid progress in pure and simple evangelical Christianity I have observed in Ireland is in connection with the Harcourt-street Baptist Chapel, of Dublin. During the past 250 years the Baptists have had a foothold in the Irish capital, but for the last half-century, like the conies, they were indeed "a feeble folk." The church, being dependent for support on the English Baptist Union, was practically a mission. In spite of difficulties, there continued a faithful remnant, upon whom the dew has descended, greatly refreshing the weary heritage.

Within the past few years a surprising change has taken place; new life has throbbed in the veins of the church: a commodious and attractive chapel has sprung into existence in a central location, with every facility for the various branches of Christian philanthropy set in motion. Crowds attend the services, and conversions are numerous. God has provided them with a pastor, Mr. Hugh D. Brown, a young barrister-at-law, who has withdrawn from every temporal advantage, that he may be free to devote his years to the work of the ministry. His vigorous evangelical preaching has been signally owned of God.

Soon, greater accommodation became a necessity, while earnest prayer was made for Divine guidance. And prayer was promptly answered. Without appeal to any a building was presented, completely furnished and free of debt. This noble gift is already bearing fruit beyond the most sanguine expectations. Generally, the sittings are well occupied; last evening (February 24) 900 persons were accommodated. It was, indeed, a thrilling sight, in the midst of this needy city; an eager, attentive, profoundly serious company rallying around the Gospel of Christ.

Pastor Brown's sermons are issued monthly, one of them dealing with the question of scriptural baptism having had a circulation of 10,000 copies. He is a bold champion of orthodox evangelicalism. Holding with no relaxing grip, he preaches with energetic directness, the doctrines of grace. He strongly advocates the priesthood of all believers, the free exercise of ministry, and the official recognition of elders and deacons. He thus guards the assembly on the one hand from priestly rule and clerical assumption, while warning against socialistic license and the impulsive intrusions of loose irresponsible ministry.

Mr. Brown and his people have made financial provision for two evangelists who are now in the field. The old chapel is also retained as a mission station, where an increasing congregation appreciates the faithful ministry of the word. I hail this grand effort in my native land with exceeding joy. Dublin is the geographical centre from which north and south will radiate whatever light visits the Metropolis.

There are many agencies at work in Dublin among soldiers, constables, city police, and civilians. The seed is sown with liberal hand; surely there will be a ripening harvest.

THE BUNDULKUND MISSION.

Bundulkund is the lake country of India, amongst whose woodland scenes you constantly expect to meet a baronial residence or village church. "It is a good land, a land of brooks, of water, of fountains and depths that spring out of valleys and hills. A land of wheat and barley...a land whose stones are iron." The only wonder is how British Christians allowed it to fall into the hands of foreigners. The late Dr. Kimp, of the Bengal Army, who was one of those that established the Church Mission in Peshawur in 1853, being stationed soon afterwards at Jhansi, soon awakened a spirit of inquiry after the truth there also, but the outbreak of the Mutiny soon afterwards stopped the work, and in escaping from the massacre Dr. Kimp did not survive to reach Bombay.

The country has been held for more than a century by us. I have seen European soldiers' names in old temples dating even further back, but until the last few months I did not know that anything had been done towards giving the Gospel to its teeming millions. A letter received from an American Presbyterian missionary at Jhansi reveals a tale of marvellous progress. In the first place these Central Provinces, through which we used to tramp like gipsies, unassisted by roads, bridges, or any other appliances of civilisation, are now intersected throughout by railways, which are bringing throngs of every tribe, nation, and religion to settle there, and transforming the face of the country; next missionaries, hitherto there as swallows at Christmas, have occupied the land in all directions; five distinct societies are at work in it, embracing sixteen to twenty stations, and doors are open in all directions.

Every missionary operation is in full activity. This marvellous success, however, threatens a collapse. Such is the inroad of railway officials, Government employés, and European soldiers, with their camp followers, &c., all pitched pell-mell into this centre of heathenism, that with all the kindly encouragement the missionaries receive from chaplains and residents, there is danger of the native work being swamped through the ungodliness prevalent amongst European communities, their energies being monopolised for saving "Christians." They thus appeal to us in the crisis—assured as they are of triumph—to come and divide the spoil: "It seems fitting English money should largely help in such an undertaking, since it is to benefit British sons and subjects. A plain, commodious, but substantial building is necessary, and cannot be built under £1200. You know India and its needs, and you know how sorely the class we hope to reach needs the uplifting influence of the Gospel"... I do know it, and it seems to me that in this first invasion of his territories, Satan is casting out of his mouth water as a river after "the woman," that he may cause her to be carried away by the flood. I shall be thankful to communicate any assistance which friends of India would like to give.

CAPTAIN BROTCHE, of Greenock, who has for a generation held a high position as a Christian worker and temperance reformer on the Clyde, recently died, at the age of eighty-two years.

VICTORIA HOME FOR WORKING MEN (41, Commercial-street, E.).—Much attention has of late been drawn to the East-end, but many may be unaware of the existence of this large lodging-house for men, which has now been in full work for several years. Each night the 470 beds are full, and lodgers who once get in are very loath to leave. The committee are much encouraged in the Christian work carried on. Coming across such a large number of men, it may be easily imagined that many cases really deserving of help are met with, and the committee earnestly appeal for a supply of old clothes, boots, &c., to aid them. Parcels addressed to Mr. Wilké, 41, Commercial-street, E., will be thankfully acknowledged.

Mr. Moody and his Work.

The evangelist has been meeting with his usual large success on the Pacific Coast. A recent issue of The Pacific reports the last service in San Francisco, on February 8, in which Mr. Moody opened his famous question drawer. We will give some of his answers in our next. Meanwhile, we quote from the same paper the following report of Mr. Moody interviewed as to

A NEW DEPARTURE IN CHICAGO.

Question.—We see that you are to be in Chicago April 1st, to engage in a special work there for sixty days. What is the society that you are there organising?

Answer.—The Chicago Evangelisation Society. I shall also conduct a Bible Institute.

Q.—What do you thus aim to accomplish?

A.—To raise up a class of men and women who will help pastors in their work; who will visit from house to house and reach the non-churchgoers. In other words, we must have a class of men and women between the laity and ministry to do the work that must be done.

Q.—Will not such an organisation antagonise with theological seminaries?

A.—I think it will help the seminaries. Many who go into the work will see the need of more training and study, and after a year or two, will go into some theological seminary and take the regular course.

Q.—What do you intend to teach at Chicago?

A.—The great fundamental doctrines of the Bible, such as repentance, regeneration by the Holy Spirit, atonement, conversion, justification, redemption, faith and assurance, law and grace, sanctification and consecration, resurrection. Of course, a great deal of the instruction will be in methods of practical work; as, "How to interest non-churchgoers," &c. Such matters will be discussed at many of the sessions.

Q.—Do you intend to work independent of the churches?

A.—No; but in full sympathy with all evangelical churches.

Q.—What class of men and women do you want?

A.—I want consecrated men and women from all classes, graduates of ladies' seminaries, and it would be a good thing for theological students to take a year or two in this way before becoming pastors of churches.

Q.—How will you select from those who apply?

A.—I expect to open a training class in Chicago during April and May. The sessions will be open to all, and I expect that trial in the work will develop those who are fitted for it. I don't know any better way to find out who have gifts.

Q.—Will your society be undenominational?

A.—Yes. All my work has been and will be undenominational.

Q.—Will persons have to bind themselves to continue in special Christian work?

A.—No; Christian wives and mothers and fathers are just as important as any other workers.

Q.—What will be the length of the course?

A.—The first course will be for two months.

Q.—What will be the cost?

A.—Instruction will be free; the workers will board and lodge themselves.

Q.—Do you know of any scheme like this in this country?

A.—I do not, nor in any other country, but I think it is the crying need of our churches to-day. Three-fourths of the working men in all our large cities are entirely neglected, and we must train men and women to reach them.

Q.—What will you say to those who appear, on trial, to have no gifts for the work?

A.—Advise them to take some other calling. Sixty days' experience will test their fitness.

Q.—Do you intend to fit workers for the foreign field?

A.—Any field on earth that God calls to. I think the training will be good for foreign work. Persons who cannot lead souls to Christ in America, can't do it in Africa or China.

Q.—Will you take persons of any nationality?

A.—Yes; anyone who can understand the English language.

Q.—Can you find work for labourers thus fitted?

A.—Yes; I could put a thousand in the field to-day. There are hundreds of Christians out of employment to-day who could do grand service. Many can't take a full student's course in college and seminary, to whom this will be a short cut to fields of usefulness. I want to raise up workers to help the pulpit. Many ministers have too much to do. They can't visit the non-churchgoers. Our churches want such assistance. I want to get hold of a large number of consecrated men and women who are willing to give all to God. There are many persons of wealth in this country, as in Great Britain, who could and would give their time and money to such work if they once had the joy of winning souls to Christ.

Q.—What will be the order of exercises in this preparation of workers?

A.—The mornings will be for drill in the Bible, where I find my system of doctrine, also for reports of the previous day's work. The afternoons will be spent in visits from house to house. In the evenings meetings will be held in cottages, halls, and churches—small meetings in order to get nearer the people than in large mass-meetings.

MISS CHARLOTTE TUCKER, "A.L.O.E.," is busily and happily engaged in her mission work at Batála, in the Punjaub, India. Batála is a little city of 26,000 inhabitants, half Hindus and half Mohammedans. The Mohammedans are very bitter, and are trying to spoil her work, but around Batála there are numbers of villages—at least fifty within a circuit of five miles—and a most encouraging work is carried on amongst their many inhabitants.

"DOWN IN WATER-STREET" is the title of a pamphlet containing the sixteenth annual report of the Old Jerry McAuley Mission, New York. The meetings are, it seems, still attended by many hardened sinners, who are affectionately pointed to Him whom the notorious Jerry McAuley learned to love and serve. Water-street is truly in a dreadful district, but it is the scene of real missionary effort, and nearly every night men from several countries hear the Gospel. The report gives some remarkable testimonies from men who have found Christ at No. 316, Water-street.

"STREAMS IN THE DESERT" is the title of the record of a year's general mission work in the East of London, under the direction of Rev. J. W. Atkinson. The destitute as well as the respectable poor were befriended in many ways, while devoted workers take the Gospel into the common lodging-houses and the humblest homes of the people. Special efforts are made to help the poor to help themselves. Very successful work has been carried on in local mission-halls, and out-door services have been attended by many tokens of Divine blessing. Communications as to the work and its pressing needs may be addressed to Mr. Atkinson at 308, Old Ford-road, E.

A CLERGYMAN CENSURED.—Rev. F. A. Grace, vicar of Great Barling, Essex, who recently published a catechism, in which he denounced it as a sin, equal to lying and theft, to attend a dissenting place of worship, has been censured by the Bishop of St. Albans for his publication. The bishop says that the vicar's assertions are most unrighteous. In South Wales the offensive words had been printed on election placards, and done a great deal of mischief. His lordship adds that he fears he can do nothing to restrain Mr. Grace. He hoped that such publications, which he had to notice twenty years ago, had now gone out of date. Their revival had caused great scandal.

ST. MARK'S HOSPITAL.—This noble institution in City-road, E.C., which deals specially with that painful disease fistula, is unable to meet the many demands upon it. The last report states that at the close of the year there were over two hundred patients on the books of the hospital waiting for their turn to be admitted as in-patients, a state of things which the committee are totally unable to remedy from want of larger accommodation. Were the number of beds double what they are they could easily be filled, and the committee therefore earnestly appeal to the charitable public to assist them in raising the necessary funds to enable them to utilise the freehold property, which was acquired a few years ago, adjoining the present building, for the purpose of enlarging the hospital. It was mentioned at the recent annual meeting of the hospital that the committee desire to secure some institution in the nature of a convalescent home—were it only a cottage of three or four rooms—to which they could send delicate patients under the charge of one of their own nurses. As it is, patients who are drafted to general convalescent homes often suffer for want of proper treatment. To prevent this they frequently have to keep them at the hospital longer than is desirable, as they are too weak to be sent home. The secretary is Mr. Arthur Leared.

"TAKE NO THOUGHT."

Matt. vi. 25.

We are not sparrows, Lord,
But we are men;
In nature's garments clad,
Palace or den
Affords them equal home:
While loss or gain
Moves not their senseless minds
To joy or pain.

We are not lilies, Lord,
But we are men;
They care not where they grow,
On hill or fen;
Their robes, of matchless leaf
And colour wrought,
Cause them no thrill of pride
Or evil thought.

We are not field-grass, Lord,
But we are men;
With souls that crave to learn
Each why and when;
With hands decreed to toil
For needful meat;
While hearts keep painful beat
To weary feet.

We are thy creatures, Lord,
For we are men,
In sin and sorrow born;
How can we then
Be thoughtless and serene,
Like simple bird,
To which the "cares of life"
Are things unheard?

MARYLEBONE MEDICAL MISSION.

This Mission has so grown that the premises in Carlisle-street, where the work was for so many years carried on, were quite inadequate to accommodate the large numbers of the poor who attend our meetings. We have now entered large and most suitable premises, right in the centre of our work. In addition to several rooms for classes, &c., we have a large, well-ventilated hall. Last year 12,227 patients attended at the dispensary, and 3506 visits were paid to the sick poor at their own homes, by the medical superintendent. In addition to our mid-day services for the patients there are Gospel services held on Sunday and Wednesday evenings, and a Bible-class with an average attendance of 100 poor women; tract distribution, and daily district visiting by several ladies.

A lady has joined the work who is a thoroughly trained hospital nurse. Since the starting of the Mission vast numbers of the sick poor have been cured, others relieved; drunkards have been reclaimed, and many who when they came to the Mission were living without God, are now consistent Christians. The increase in the work means, of course, a considerable increase in the expenditure. Visitors are invited to call at the Mission any Monday, Wednesday, or Friday, at a quarter before one o'clock. All communications should be addressed to me at 12, Bell-street, Edgware-road, W. Robert Chambers.

IRISH EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—A series of lectures for the times have been arranged by the Council of the Irish branch of the Evangelical Alliance, to be delivered in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, on successive Monday evenings, commencing March 18. The subjects embrace "The True Catholic Church," "The Christian Priesthood," "The Holy Scriptures," "The Way of Salvation." The speakers will be Canon Neligan, Dr. Hamilton Magee, Rev. W. E. Burroughs, Dr. Nicholas, Rev. E. F. Rambaut, Professor Watts, Rev. R. McCheyne Edgar, and Rev. Henry Fishe.

Northern Light.

A desire has been expressed that the mid-day meeting for merchants, now being held by Dr. Pentecost, should be perpetuated. More than one of them has offered support to any scheme which would establish such a resting spot for harassed minds. Dr. Pentecost threw out a hint in Cowcaddens Free Church which Christians should bear in mind. He said that down in the Christian Institute the sinners had hardly a chance to get in, they were crowded out by the Christians night after night attending the meetings. There are, verily, many ways of being stumbling-blocks.

Scotland is warm at heart, though undemonstrative. Her citizens are ready and willing to assist England in relieving China's famine-stricken millions. Arrangements are being made by which the towns may have an opportunity of contributing to the relief fund. It is sad to think that, while the magnitude of the present calamity is not yet fully realised, it is certain that several millions of people are starving.

Of 5996 persons apprehended in Edinburgh during 1888 for crimes and offences, 3932 were drunk when arrested. During the year 2190 persons were found in the streets utterly incapable. A sad record!

MISSIONARY PRAYER UNION.—The monthly meeting of this Union was held last week at 186, Aldersgate-street, Mr. Alexander Grant, missionary from Singapore, presiding. A spirit of fervent prayer was manifest. The number enrolled in the Union up to date is 112. The committee are arranging to send a copy of the Prayer Union Circular to all missionaries abroad. The Missionary Bureau has received an urgent plea for workers to enter open doors in Spain. The committee would be glad to hear of any Christian congregations that would send out their missionary representative and support him in the field. They are still looking for Christian journeymen tailors willing to settle at the Cape of Good Hope. The committee also repeat their request for information from foreign missionaries concerning needy places in the field. All correspondence should be addressed to Mr. John Pamment, secretary, Missionary Bureau, 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

THE NATIONAL VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION recently brought under the notice of the Government the subject of the guardianship of neglected and ill-treated children. A memorial on the same subject has been presented to the Home Secretary, urging the importance of parental control being limited, or entirely taken away, in the case of parents who have either been convicted of cruelty or vicious criminality towards their children, or who are otherwise judicially ascertained to have grossly neglected or abused their parental powers and duties. The memorialists pray for legislation, providing that the jurisdiction in case of infants, now exercised by the High Court of Justice, may be extended to the County Courts, and, in special cases, to the magistrates; also, that boards of guardians, and, if necessary, the managers of reformatories and industrial schools may be empowered to undertake the guardianship of children, if entrusted to them by the courts. The office of the National Vigilance Association is 267, Strand, W.C.

THE SOLDIERS' HOME, BELFAST.

On Saturday afternoon a drawing-room meeting was held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Greer, Regent's Park, in aid of the effort now being made to establish a Soldiers' Home in Belfast. Sir Robert Phayre presided, and spoke cordially of the need of providing a safe place of resort for soldiers. The Homes already in existence in England, in Dublin, the Curragh, Cork, and Limerick, had, in many instances, proved refuges from temptation, and had worked most beneficently.

Colonel Clarke having given some instances of the ignorance of Divine things amongst the recruits, and of the necessity of earnest work amongst them, Miss Sandes, of the Soldiers' Home, Cork, gave an interesting account of the work there, which commenced twenty years ago. She narrated several affecting stories of soldiers who had come under her notice. In our next issue we hope to give a detailed sketch of the work from her own pen.

AN ECHO FROM THE WEST.

Dear Sir,—How strange it seems that we, living here in Ohio, in the interior of this new Republic of the West, should find our innermost thoughts voiced so exactly in a London newspaper—The Methodist Times—as quoted by you in your issue of December 28. We find ourselves in true and earnest sympathy with the new movement in thought and life, so characteristic of the present time, so intensely Christian, and so well represented by your admirable paper. We, too, yearn for the pure primitive Christianity of brotherly love, for the ethical Christianity of Christ, for an applied Christianity—a Christianity which will exhibit itself in business and in politics, as much as in sacraments and prayer-meetings; a Christianity, "not of the letter, but of the Spirit," not of form and ceremony, but of the Holy Ghost.

In this country there is as with you a new pity for the poor, a new sense of social wrong, a new demand for social purity, a growing abhorrence of war, a yearning for ecclesiastical peace, a longing for a closer, truer brotherhood among the redeemed—all marking, as we trust, the birth of a great era. The spirit of the time, if we judge it aright, is intensely orthodox, evangelical, positive, and aggressive, yet emancipated from the traditions of conventional and ecclesiastical Christianity. We are here in the midst of hundreds of students of both sexes—earnest and thoughtful youth—and, with the writer in The Methodist Times, we would hail the appearance in either country of a divinely-sent poet, who would give articulate expression to the unselfish and tender-hearted sentiments which are fermenting in the souls of these young men and young women, and who would at the same time separate these beautiful human social aspirations from all atheistic and violent associations.—Yours sincerely,

Wooster, O., U.S.A. T. K. Davis.

DEACONESSES IN LIVERPOOL.—The North of England Deaconess and Foreign Missionary Training Institute, Liverpool, is designed as a centre for home and foreign missionaries, very much on the lines of the well-known Mildmay Park Deaconesses Institution. Candidates accepted by any foreign missionary society can here gain experience in the various branches of mission work, and also medical training in one of the largest Liverpool hospitals. Ladies with private means are expected to contribute according to their ability; those who have no such resources are received free. All information may be obtained from Mrs. Stephen Menzies, Princes Park, Liverpool, or from Rev. W. J. Madden, incumbent of St. Luke's, Liverpool, who is taking a warm interest in this movement.

THE OPIUM INIQUITY.

WHAT CAN THE CHURCH DO TO STOP IT?

By ALFRED S. DYER.

THERE is no country which at the present time occupies a larger share of the attention of the Christian Church than China. Every few weeks some new party of missionary re-inforcements embarks for that land. It is probable that the accessions to the missionary ranks will increase at a still more rapid rate. Ten thousand missionaries could be easily absorbed among the nearly four hundred millions of China.

But let not the Christian Church rejoice with unqualified joy at the fields white to the harvest, the grain ready to be reaped, and in the numerous labourers who are pressing forward into the service of the Lord of the harvest. An enemy has been at work. There is a deadly blight spreading amongst the grain. Ah! this is no figure of speech. The opium which has been forced by the British Government on the Chinese at the point of the bayonet is spreading destruction and death upon all hands.

It will be true missionary zeal and economy for the Churches of Great Britain to turn some earnest and determined attention to the deeds of their own Government through its representatives in India, and insist upon such action as shall not indeed stop the blight, for that is now beyond its power; but stop the British opium traffic which produced it, and which is at this hour adding momentum to its deadly course. To stop the traffic which feeds that blight would be worth more than a thousand additional missionaries to the cause of Christ in China.

In Great Britain, opium is declared by Act of Parliament to be a poison. There is no question as to the baneful nature of this drug. The Chinese authorities desired to save their people from it. It was not until Great Britian had twice gone to war with China, that the Chinese Government consented to the opium trade being made legal. The first war (1839-42) sprang directly out of the opium traffic, the Chinese having destroyed 20,000 chests of the poison, for which they were afterwards made to pay. It must be confessed with shame that the history of Britain's commercial dealings with China has justified the Chinese, in view of their experience, in referring to the English people as "foreign devils." If the English people had been similarly treated, their description of their oppressors would not have been less severe and emphatic. If the Churches of Great Britain will realise what the opium habit really means to its victims, apathy on this tremendous subject of the temporal and eternal welfare of 400 millions of the human race will immediately disappear, and be replaced by a deep solicitude to make whatever amends are possible for the deep wrong which has been committed.

Let one fact regarding the personal effect of opium-smoking stand as a specimen. Mr. Masters, Wesleyan missionary at Canton, says:—"One day a young man came into my preaching hall. His name was Tong. He had been a slave to opium-smoking for five or six years, but he had been impressed at our preaching services, and he joined our inquiry class. He at once determined to give up the opium. I watched his struggles day after day while he was in the fierce grip of the opium demon. One day he would smash his pipe to pieces, and the next day he would buy another. I have seen him come to our preaching-hall crying bitterly, as he has confessed to me his sin and weakness. He would go, perhaps, for a week, or a few days, without touching his pipe; but he has told me how he has felt himself carried almost involuntarily in a half-dream to the fatal den. The intolerable craving and gnawing hunger for opium, added to the remorse which he felt, caused him great bodily and mental suffering. Finally, however, the power came, as we hoped, to drag him free from the drug. He went two weeks without a taste of the pipe. Altogether he seemed to be a changed person, and in two months I had hoped to admit him to Christian baptism. Every evening he would come into the preaching hall, and attend the services, and he would spend his spare time in reading the Scriptures, and in conversation about good things.

"But, alas! he was seen to grow weaker and weaker every day. His eyes were sunken, his face had a deathly pallor, his gait was unsteady, and his appetite for food was gone. He told me one day how his friends and fellow-workpeople had been beseeching him to return to the opium pipe for relief, and how nearly he had yielded. Remember that these are the usual effects in China of a confirmed opium sot breaking free from this noxious drug. He went for two or three weeks, I say, without any taste of the drug; but he was getting weaker and weaker and completely emaciated. After a short conversation with him, in which I exhorted him to courage and patience, he said, 'Well, sinshang, I am determined what to do. I know that to return to the pipe would prolong my life for perhaps a month or two, but the end must come. Sooner or later it must be death, and I am resolved what to do.' He stood up, and said, 'I am resolved what to do. Come what may, I will never smoke again; and if I die—well, better die than sin against God.'

"But one Sunday soon after, we missed him from his place. It was the first Sunday which he had missed attending our chapel for two months. I became anxious about him. We went to his home; he was not there. We went to his workshop; he was not there. His fellow-workpeople began to laugh and jeer, and one pointed the way to the den called 'Heavenly Joy.' We passed along a narrow back street, full of dark dens of vice, and at last we came to the opium den. We pushed aside the grimy curtain which concealed the room from passers-by, and entered the place, amidst dense fumes of stupefying smoke. There was nothing to be heard but the spluttering of the opium pipes; for, you know, there is that advantage which the opium-den possesses over the liquor shop—you hear no noise; you hear no brawls; everything is as quiet as death. There at the corner of the room was our lost sheep. His eyes fell as we entered. We approached him, and with gentle remonstrances besought him to return to us. But, alas! the fiend within him was too strong. He turned upon us with wild eyes and awful imprecations, cursing us and the very God that we hoped he had learned to love."

The principal official argument by which this ghastly trade is maintained, is that the Indian Government cannot do without the revenue which it brings. Where is the morality of that position? That is the argument of a robber who pleads that he needs his victim's money, and is determined to have it, even at the cost of his victim's life. Thus it has come to this, that in the matter of its revenue, the great empire of India is ruled by a "Christian" Government on the moral level of the thief and the assassin.

What, under these circumstances, can British Christians do? There is a gleam of light amidst the clouds. In 1885, the Chinese Government was successful in obtaining from Great Britain an Opium Agreement, which can be made to expire on January 18, 1891, by twelve months' previous notice being given by either party. Now that the opium habit has made such tremendous strides in China, and the poppy is so extensively grown there, the difficulties of the Chinese Government in dealing with the matter on the lines of prohibition have enormously increased. But does it not appear to be a present and plain duty of the churches of Great Britain to let the Chinese Government know that British Christians deeply lament the past opium policy of their rulers, and that the Christian opinion of this empire will support the Chinese authorities in closing the present Opium Agreement, and refusing to be a party to another? The day when Great Britain could force an opium treaty upon China by an appeal to arms is now past.

What the exact terms of the communication from the British Churches to the Government of China should be, it is unnecessary to discuss. It is, however, desirable to say that it should represent an overwhelming expression of opinion, and that the significance of this great and important document should be added to by its being carried to China by an influential deputation expressly appointed for that purpose.—The Banner of Asia.

THE CARDIFF REVIVAL.

WHEN I wrote last there was some hope that a central hall might possibly be secured for a grand, and perhaps concluding, united effort. This turned out to be impracticable, and so the work in several districts has again been circulating among the chapels as at the first. In Roath, where immense and incalculable blessing has been realized, this goes on. In Canton, where, next to Roath, the most good appears to result, no cessation yet appears, and there probably hundreds of children have given their hearts definitely to Christ.

Between these two extremes of the town, Cathays comes in, and there, too, the churches have been considerably enlarged, chiefly by their attendants and adherents, and especially by the young crossing the line. Many have joined the Baptist churches in these districts by baptism, and large numbers are "on trial" in the Methodist bodies, while doubtless the Congregational and other churches have shared the increase. In the Central and Docks districts all extra effort of a united character has ceased, except that a seven a.m. prayer has been held in the former.

At the last meeting of the Nonconformist Ministerial Union the matter of results was referred to, but it was thought to be too soon to tabulate them or attempt to record what had been done. It is, nevertheless, the universal feeling that a Divine visitation in answer to prayer has been graciously vouchsafed, and that greatly increased responsibilities rest on the churches. There has been a drawing together of ministers and members of the various bodies of Christians, never before known. Confidence and love seem established, and the "isms" have lost at least some of their meaning. Conferences, not only of the preachers but of the officers and leaders together with them, are likely to come out of the revival, and how to maintain a united and firm front against the common foe will be discussed and aimed at. Faith in a prayer-answering Father has been greatly strengthened, and great numbers of families previously disunited are now united and happy. We have therefore abundant reason to "thank God and take courage."

A conference on "Christian Life," for three days, to begin on the 26th inst., we trust will still further purify and bless us.

AGGRESSIVE CHRISTIAN WORK.—This was the title selected by the Rev. F. B. Meyer for an address to the members and friends of the West London Auxiliary of the Open-air Mission in Regent's Park Chapel last week. It proved, however, to be a series of "hints" to open-air preachers, arranged in the following order: (1) The personal character of the preacher should be above suspicion. (2) Never go out without the same preparation as a minister would make for his pulpit. (3) Use business tact in your meetings. (4) Have good singing. (5) Be short, and to the point. (6) Your thoughts should revolve round a text. (7) Introduce as many analogies, parables, and similitudes as possible. (8) Do not always be pleading with sinners to come to Christ. (9) Where at all possible have an after-meeting. (10) Rely more upon God's co-operation.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN EDINBURGH.

Last week's meetings commenced with the forenoon service on the Sabbath, in Free St. Andrew's Church, where the minister, Rev. R. J. Sandeman, took the opening exercises, and Major Whittle addressed an earnest word to Christians. At five o'clock the Free Assembly Hall was nearly full of women, and the power of God came down on the meeting, so that at the close over a hundred rose in expression of their desire to be saved. The Christian workers were gladdened by the many willing souls who remained to be conversed with. At seven o'clock the large circus was almost full of men, and an inspiring sight it was to see how they listened to the preaching of the simple Gospel. Again the message of salvation was delivered with great faithfulness, and God honoured his word.

The week's meetings in the Free Assembly Hall at noon, have been largely attended, and the Lord's people have been greatly strengthened and refreshed. The evening evangelistic meetings were held in the most fashionable quarter of the city. From the first the church has been well filled, the numbers have increased, and the work has deepened nightly, till the last evening when there was not room for the crowds that came pouring in.

In addition to the evening meetings, there have been three afternoon gatherings for young people, when the Major gave addresses with telling illustrations. On the last occasion the church was full, and scores of children and young ladies remained to be pointed to Jesus. Altogether the week has been the most fruitful of the series, and the number of thanksgivings for conversion have been most encouraging.

Last Sabbath has been the most memorable. In the forenoon the Major preached in Junction-road U.P. Church, Leith, where the week's evangelistic meetings are to be held. The church was full, and the Gospel was presented from the text, Acts xxii. 11, "the glory of that light." A deep impression was produced, and there was a feeling that God was already hearing the prayers of his children, who have been pleading for souls during the past weeks.

The meeting for women, at five o'clock, in the Free Assembly Hall was crowded, and over a hundred rose for prayer. Many remained to the after-meeting, and decided for Christ. The circus was crowded by men, and a grand work was done for eternity. It was computed that nearly two hundred rose for prayer, and the Christian workers had as much as they could overtake.

On Monday, March 4, the day of the inauguration of General Harrison as President of the United States, Major Whittle, in the noon prayer-meeting, asked those present to pray for the General, that he might be enabled to maintain an unfaltering testimony as a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, and that God would give him the Holy Spirit to guide him in the onerous duties of his new office. Rev. Dr. Andrew Thomson led in a fervent, earnest prayer, which found an echo in the hearts of all present.

WESTBOURNE GROVE Y.M.C.A.—The annual meeting of the above Association was lately held at the Paddington Baths Hall, Queen's-road. Mr. J. D. Allcroft presided. Brief extracts from the report for the past year were read, which showed that one of the members had gone out to Minnesota to preach the Gospel, and that another had for the past nine months been labouring as a colporteur at Singapore. Rev. H. Webb-Peploe addressed the gathering, and urged that even if there were no heaven a Christian life was preferable to any other. He pleaded also for thoroughness in Christian life and profession. Mr. Geo. Williams and the Chairman having spoken, Rev. F. B. Meyer urged that it was of no use to endeavour to induce men to give up old associations, amusements, and attractions, unless they provided them with something of a higher character. Mr. W. H. Mills also spoke.

MR. McNEILL'S SETTLEMENT.

The social meeting of welcome to Rev. J. McNeill at Regent-square Church on Thursday week was no ordinary affair. The large church was full, and the platform crowded with "fathers and brethren," not exclusively Presbyterians. Many well-known public teachers who could not be present, wrote expressing their gratification at Mr. McNeill's advent to London.

All the speeches were excellent. Specially so were those of the late pastor, Dr. Dykes, Rev. J. Moinet, of Kensington, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, Rev. J. Baillie, of Bloomsbury, and Mr. McNeill himself. He very happily remarked that if Dr. Dykes could still have retained the oversight of the church, he would have been content to be the Doctor's missionary.

On Sunday Mr. McNeill preached two powerful discourses to crowded congregations. In giving out the notices of congregational work, he made a strenuous plea for a large attendance at the Thursday evening service for the people which he proposes to hold. He wanted it to be a little Sunday in the middle of the week that would be helpful to all in the battle of life. "Shut your shop and come," he exclaimed; "the Lord will make it up to you."

MR. G. C. NEEDHAM IN LONDON.

While en route from Ireland to Paris and Rome, this evangelist tarried five days in London, in order that he might preach the Gospel to the young men of the City in the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. A goodly band of young men gathered night by night.

The subjects of discourse were varied and attractive, and were pointed and enforced by many graphic illustrations. Two of the most searching subjects were "The exceeding sinfulness of sin," contrasted with "the exceeding riches of his grace," and the pertinent inquiry of the four lepers in the Second Book of Kings, "Why sit we here until we die?"

Mr. Needham also addressed the central noon prayer-meeting on two occasions during the week. On Wednesday he spoke of "The Holy Spirit in relation to the person of Christ;" and on Thursday of "The Holy Spirit in relation to the written Word." These Bible-readings were much appreciated. In the course of the second address he faithfully warned his hearers against accepting any guidance as from the Holy Spirit apart from the confirmation and direct agency of the written Word.

SOLDIERS IN CAIRO.—We have been much blessed by a visit from Miss Herdman, of Melrose, who conducted a number of meetings in the different barracks, also at the American mission. She has now gone to Alexandria to carry on the good work there; then, perhaps, to Cyprus.

James Ewing, Army Scripture-reader.

ROMANISM.—Rev. Dr. Samuel Wainwright on Monday evening delivered the second of his course of lectures on False and True Religion, in Exeter Hall. The phase of the subject dealt with was "Romanism," and the audience included a goodly number of candidates for prizes under the examination schemes of the Protestant Educational Institute. Sir Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B., who occupied the chair, opened the proceedings with a few words on the great importance of the subject, and at the close urged the pressing need that to-day exists for Protestants to show their sincerity in contending for the faith of Christ. It need hardly be said that the lecture was replete with facts and arguments, marshalled with much ability, to explain and expose the Romish system. It was shown that Romanism is not only an idolatrous apostasy, but, in the words of Blanco White, a "monstrous heap of falsehood and imposture." The deluded votaries of the system were referred to with charity, but the system itself, with its pretensions and novelties, was denounced in terms consistent with a hearty love of the pure truth of God. We trust the four remaining lectures of the series will be listened to by equally enthusiastic audiences.

MOUNTAIN VIEW.*

O'er the wilds and lakes of Afric,
In the heart of that land of night,
At the parting of mighty waters,
There beameth a beacon light.

From the height whence streams of Congo
And Zambesi's feeders flow,
With a message of love to millions
Now living waters go!

What soldier hath raised a fortress
In the Garenganze land?
A soldier of Christ hath done it,
Unaided by warrior band.

It is but a hut, defended
By nought that meets mortal sight;
And yet is it kept and guarded
By host of surpassing might!

The angels of God camp round it,
Protecting the men of peace,
Who come with the sword of the Spirit
To bid earthly warfare cease.

Isette Teresa Mody.

* The small house built by Mr. Frederick S. Arnot in Southern Central Africa.

MISS MARY PETRIE is delivering lectures on the missionary history of the Church of England at Steinway Hall, Portman-square. The lectures take place on Tuesdays in March, at 3 p.m.

BOROUGH ROAD, SOUTHWARK.—A large company of policemen and their wives were entertained at tea on Friday evening, March 8, in the Lecture Hall, and a most solemn and interesting evangelistic service was then held. Several constables bore testimony to the power of the grace of God.

BACK TO AFRICA.—Meetings to commend to the care of God and bid farewell to Mr. Frederick Stanley Arnot and those accompanying him on his return to resume his missionary work in Central Africa, are to be held in Exeter Hall, Strand, on Tuesday next. In the afternoon, at 3.30, the gathering will be in the small hall; and in the evening, at 6.30, in the large hall. Various friends will take part in the proceedings.

PROFESSOR DELITZSCH, whose life and work we recently sketched, is not insensible to the joys and sorrows of family life. In his autobiography he tells us that he made the acquaintance of his wife at Scripture-reading meetings, which he held with some friends at Leipzig, from 1835 to 1842. Full of sympathy and amiability, Frau Delitzsch was the good genius of the professor's hearth, making his house a model of cheerful hospitality. Dr. Delitzsch had four sons. Three died in early manhood; the youngest, Friedrich, is the well-known Assyriologist.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a mission by Rev. W. Hay Aitken, in St. George's Church, Bolton-le-Moor, March 10 to 21.——For blessing on a Gospel mission at Huddersfield, March 9 to 25.——For blessing on a mission to be conducted by Messrs. Hyde and Stevenson (evangelists from Mr. D. L. Moody's College), in Metropolitan Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, from March 17 to 28.——For blessing on a united mission at Neath, Glam., Wales, during this and the next four weeks, in which the Wesleyan, Baptist, Congregational, and Bible Christian Churches are joining.——For blessing on a 22 days' mission by Mr. George Andrews (of the Evangelisation Society), at Hereford, March 24 to April 14.

A GOOD SIGN AT BRIGHTON.—A united prayer-meeting has been commenced on Tuesday afternoons, from three to four o'clock, in the institute connected with Clifton-road Congregational Church, Brighton. The first meetings, at which Rev. W. Crosbie has presided, have been very largely attended; the meeting last week was crowded, and a very earnest spirit prevailed. Christian people of different denominations take part. The object is to seek the enduement of power, and to organise new effort for the evangelisation of the neighbourhood as God shall direct. A devout member of the Society of Friends, getting up at the last meeting, made a deep impression on the minds of all present by the earnest words he spoke.

Evangelistic Notes.

Evangelistic meetings are being held this week at the Clutha Dining Hall, Plantation, Glasgow.

Danbury.—Special meetings have been held this winter at the chapel, Danbury Common, by Miss Parker and Miss Gillard, and recently by Mr. G. D. Shipley. Many have received blessing.

Mr. J. A. Smith, evangelist, has been conducting meetings in Grange and Rothiemay, Banffshire. Much interest was awakened. Mr. Smith is now conducting a mission at New Pitsligo.

Ilfracombe.—Pastor J. T. Mateer, of Vernon Chapel, London, held a ten days' mission at the Baptist Chapel here. The attendance was good. Saints were quickened, and unconverted ones brought into the kingdom.

Mr. J. Maxted, who, since he left Leigh-next-Tunbridge, last April, has been preaching at Liverpool, Guernsey, Rotherhithe, Aldershot, and Bristol, has completed a very successful week's mission at East Leach, Lechlade, Gloucestershire. The mission partook rather of the temperance aspect, and a great many "donned the blue."

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has been conducting meetings at Big Rapids, Michigan, U.S.A., with encouraging results. Adults were addressed on Christian doctrine and life; while children were spoken to on the Gospel and conversion to God. Referring to an afternoon meeting, a local newspaper says: "It filled the Methodist Church. The children minded nothing about the snowstorm, but flocked in, as to a feast. The grown-up people, of whom a large number were present, seemed as much interested as the children."

Mr. Henry Thorne has conducted a ten days' mission in Bath in connection with the Y.M.C.A., and his earnest labours have been crowned with much success. The noon prayer-meetings were so largely attended that on some occasions they had to be moved to the Assembly Rooms. The Bible-readings and the Gospel meetings have been times of spiritual refreshment and saving power. One special feature which Mr. Thorne has introduced to Bath is "the pleasant afternoons for men." These meetings, lasting only three quarters of an hour, are bright and Scriptural. Prizes are given for regular attendance. Absentees and sick members will be visited, whilst all are encouraged to promote mutual Christian sympathy. The various meetings connected with the mission have resulted in many cases of conversion.

The Southern States.—Mr. James Wharton has spent the winter again among the mission churches in the Southern United States—mainly those churches fostered by the American Missionary Association for the coloured people. Mr. Wharton held meetings at Louisville (Kentucky), Athens and Florence (Alabama), Sherwood, Nashville, and Memphis (Tenn). A good number of converts has been the aggregate result of these meetings; while the churches generally have been quickened and encouraged. At the end of ten days' work in Memphis more than 100 persons confessed Christ. The people learn to regard Mr. Wharton with confidence, because of his unaffected but genuine sympathy, and Christlike spirit among the lowly. Our love and prayers follow him to Jackson, Mississippi, and Montgomery, Alabama, whither he goes to labour before returning to England.

B. A. Imes (Pastor, Congregational Church).
Memphis, Tenn.

Mr. Herbert R. Francis writes:—Through the goodness of God we were led to take up work in Sterling, Colorado, a town of about 1500 inhabitants. The Lord has answered the prayers of God's children. I was weak in body, through a bad throat, nevertheless, we confidently believe the thirty-three who professed Christ are true cases of conversion, some of them leading business men of the town. We had no place large enough to hold the people. Mrs. Francis took an overflow at the Methodist Church, which was crowded, so that many went away who could not get in. The town became astir, and we left it so, to come on here to this town, Salida, 150 miles from Denver. Drink and sin prevail, but the Spirit moved amongst the people the first night, and we are seeing already "signs and wonders" wrought. To Him be all the glory. We go from this to Bradford, Ohio, for three weeks. Do pray for us. Whilst we see much blessing, we see also much bold opposition to the truth.

Mr. Jas. Thompson, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, has held a series of meetings in a tent at Dollingstown, near Lurgan, and much good has been done.

A great work of grace has been witnessed at Briton Ferry, Glam., Wales. Many of the vilest characters have been saved, and the whole town is said to be moved on religious matters.

Evangelistic meetings, conducted by Mr. George Grey, Lanarkshire Union evangelist, were held in the Mission-hall, Fauldhouse, last week. Many professed to have received blessing.

Gospel meetings, under the auspices of the Evangelistic Union, Kilbirnie, are being held. Mr. G. F. Sinclair, Glasgow, is the principal speaker. The attendance is large, and souls are being saved.

Hamilton, N.B.—Evangelistic meetings were held in Auchingramant United Presbyterian Church during the past week, addressed by various ministers. The addresses were pointed and powerful, and attended with much blessing.

Leeds.—Blessed success has attended a mission conducted by Rev. Thomas Cook, in Brunswick Wesleyan Chapel, Leeds. Many have decided to be henceforth servants of Christ, and the whole town is feeling the effect of this work.

Three weeks' Gospel meetings have been held in Castlewellan Presbyterian Church, by Mr. J. H. Crawford. The services were largely attended by intensely earnest congregations, and many professed to have received spiritual blessing.

Rev. F. C. Spurr, of Cardiff, visited Newport lately on a mission, and afterwards to assist in the United Mission, which sprang out of his former visit. The South Wales Telegram describes the services as being largely attended, and followed with happy results.

Mr. George Clarke's mission at Belfast continues to be attended with much interest and success. The noon prayer-meetings in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., the afternoon Bible-readings in the Carlisle Memorial Methodist Church, and the evening evangelistic services in St. Enoch's Presbyterian Church, have all been largely attended. Gospel truth has been presented with freshness and power, and large results are being prayed for.

Mr. G. H. Somerset Gardner has recently conducted a mission at the Baptist Chapel at Malton. The Christians were quickened by his searching appeals; the Gospel message was carried home, and resulted in professed conversions. One evening was devoted to personal reminiscences of Roman Catholicism, when also Mr. Gardner spoke on monks, nuns, converts, and the confessional, Roman Catholics attending. From Malton Mr. Gardner went to Snainton, and held a week of successful meetings.

Dr. Pentecost and Business Men.—These meetings in Glasgow have now entered on their third week. Last week the attendances were larger than ever. On several of the days questions were sent in, and Dr. Pentecost has answered them with great clearness and tact. The subjects of address have been "Christ died for our sins," "The new birth," "A vain faith and a true faith," "The Resurrection," "Benefits springing out of the Resurrection." The addresses have been searching, eloquent, and powerful, and the large gatherings of men have listened with great attention. There have been inquirers; one gentleman on going out last week told a friend that "he saw it quite clearly now; it was 'trusting,' not 'trying.'"

THE COW CROSS MISSION, CLERKENWELL.—For twenty-two years Mr. William Catlin has laboured for the Lord in Clerkenwell, and the high character of his work is known far and near. By day and by night, Mr. Catlin is at the call of the poor, and seeking their highest welfare. He is assisted by good friends, as also is Mrs. Catlin with her mothers' meeting. It is encouraging to know that among the poorest of the population there are many intelligent Christians, while earnest temperance endeavour has resulted in a goodly number of young and old taking the right side in regard to the drink evil. The hungry and destitute find in Mr. Catlin one who is ever ready to plead their cause and help them so far as he is enabled. The various agencies of the Mission are in vigorous operation, and we trust that the friends of the work will not be behind in according the sympathy and support which are constantly needed. Mr. Catlin's address is, 17, Claremont-square, Pentonville, London, N.

Letters to the Editor.

PROPHETIC (?) MEETINGS.

Dear Sir,—You have perhaps read the advertisement of the six "Prophetic Meetings" now being held in Kennington-park. I subjoin a rough copy of the placard, which attracts some attention in our City streets just now. Who are they who dare to make such statements as this placard contains? Do they set themselves up above their Maker, who, as the everlasting Father, alone "knoweth the day and the hour"?

Let them read the twenty-fourth chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel before they venture to make these "Prophetic" announcements, and quote texts from God's Word, which we are taught by our Church to "read, mark, and learn," and not to use as a vehicle for sensational outcry and presumptuous advertisement.

I could write at length on this subject, but fear to trespass too much on your valuable space.

Yours, Cameron W. H. Brock.

COMING PROPHETIC EVENTS.

According to Daniel and Revelation during next 12 years, before the end of this age in Passover week in April, 1890.

The greatest war ever known in Europe, in 1889 or 1890, caused by France, led by Boulanger, whose name contains 666, defeating Germany, changing 23 kingdoms into 10. Britain's loss of Ireland, India, &c., before 1892. Napoleon's rise in 1891—1892 as a Greek king before his 7 years' covenant, as Syrian king before the Jews in April 21, 1890, their sacrifices restored Nov. 8, 1894. Dan. vii. 24, viii. 14, ix. 27. Ascension of 144,000 living Christians to heaven without dying on March 5. 1896. Napoleon's subsequent massacre of millions of Christians during 1260 days from August, 1897, to Jan. 26, 1901, coming earthquakes, famine, pestilences, Christ's descent on earth, commencement of Millennium on the last days of Passover Week, April 11, 1891.

THE CURSE OF MONTE CARLO.

Dear Sir,—I am in sight, at my house, of Monte Carlo, which is but an hour or so away. Petitions to man have failed to close it; kings, emperors, and the greatest men of the day sent petitions to the French Parliament, which have been of no avail.

I am sure the only way to overturn that domain of Satan is through prayer of faith to God. As Jericho fell by God's intervening power, so shall Monte Carlo. Will you ask through your columns how many will join us in signing a petition to God, by taking the matter before Him in earnest prayer daily. As Joshua marched around Jericho, so I and my co-workers are walking around it, and sowing eternal seed also in it by distributions, which, though forbidden, are easily accomplished.

Will you be good enough to warn God's children from entering the Bisca or Casino? I could relate such terrible suicides and ruination to Christian families, but I must spare. I beg to hand you the following statistics, which I translate from the Secolo XIX. of March 7, a Genoa daily paper:—

MILLIONS AND SUICIDES AT MONTE CARLO.

"We hear from Monte Carlo that during Carnival the number of visitors to the celebrated Bisco reached about 50,000. The receipts have been fabulous—twenty million francs. However, the list of duels and suicides is also sufficiently rich—fifteen of the former and sixteen of the latter."

Will any of your readers willing to join us in petitioning God believingly send me their name and address? Matt. xviii. 19; Mark xi. 24; John xiv. 13, and xv. 7. Let us wrestle against this principality of Monaco and powers of the rulers of darkness till we prevail. "He is faithful that promised."—Yours, E. C. Newberry.
Bordighera, Italy.

THE NEW EVANGELICAL METHODIST REVIVAL is reaching the smallest villages as well as the great town populations. A cheering bit of intelligence comes from a little village in the Frome Circuit, called Garehill. That hamlet contains only nineteen houses. But out of those houses thirty persons have sought and found Christ, as a result of a mission conducted by Mr. T. G. Reed, a Joyful News evangelist. We fully share Rev. J. E. Clapham's conviction that we are on the eve of the greatest revival we have ever known. Let all men promote it with might and main.—Methodist Times.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Eight clergymen have offered themselves to the Church Missionary Society since January 1 for service in the foreign mission field, and others are contemplating such a course.

Rev. R. Hobson, vicar of St. Nathaniel's Church, Windsor, Liverpool, has recently been making provision for the wants of unemployed working men in his parish. Aided by several Christian workers, funds are systematically being raised for the purpose of giving the men free substantial suppers. On these occasions numbers are drawn together, and in some instances spiritual good has resulted.

At the close of the usual evening service on Sunday week Rev. T. J. Madden, the new incumbent of St. Luke's Church, Liverpool, held a short service for men only. There were about four hundred present, and Mr. Madden dealt in an able manner with the various phases of infidelity to be met within the present day. He pointed out how many leading scientists had embraced the faith of Jesus Christ, and recommended this to the consideration of all who had any serious doubts.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Leominster is a fine centre of active agencies for good, and has just been privileged with several days' Bible-readings, and other Gospel services, by Frederick Sessions, of Gloucester. Blessing cannot but result from such labour.

At Bridport, in Dorset, an adult school has just been opened under auspicious and hopeful circumstances. The meetings, too, appear to be growing, and the prospect brightening. The Home Mission Committee sends occasional help.

A very interesting foreign mission meeting was held in Charlbury, Oxon, by John H. Williams, on Jan. 27, in which he related his call to service in India, and described Friends' work there. Joined by his wife in heart and sympathy, he can say, "I thank God that ever He took me to India."

Wm. C. Collyer, of Cardiff, has visited and held a week's mission at the Willowholme, Carlisle, and a similar mission at the Byrom-street Mission Hall, Manchester. At the former the room has been recently enlarged, and an excellent and greatly needed Gospel work is vigorously carried on there; and in both missions W. C. Collyer's visit was at once acceptable and helpful to the Friends.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A block of buildings close to the Broadway, Deptford, has just been acquired by Rev. Hugh M'Intosh, and will be devoted to mission purposes in connection with his church at Brockley. The premises, which were formally opened last week, by Mr. Hugh M. Matheson, include an auction mart, which will in future be known as "The People's Hall." It is close to a most squalid region, in which locality the Brockley Presbyterian congregation have long conducted a mission which had outgrown their premises.

One of the most flourishing efforts in connection with Regent's-square Church is the Aldenham Institute, the Presbyterian "Polytechnic." It attracts young fellows of the artisan class, who find under its roof a spiritual, social, and educational home. It owes its existence to Mr. James Robertson, of Messrs. Nisbet & Co., who presided at the annual meeting on Saturday week. An unusual interest attached to this year's reunion, owing to the presence of the new minister of Regent's-square, Rev. John McNeill, who said that everything depended upon the spiritual side of the work done. In connection with the institute there are twenty-eight educational and technical classes.

METHODIST.

At the evening service of the Wesleyan West-Central Mission at St. James's Hall, on Sunday week, Professor Elmslie, of the Presbyterian Theological College, was present. He remained to the close of the after-meeting, and expressed his intention to send all the Presbyterian students to that "inspiring" service.

The young men's class connected with Priory-street Church, York, has 228 members. It furnishes no fewer than 67 Sunday-school workers, 37 exhorters and prayer leaders, and 9 local preachers. The class meets both morning and afternoon on Sundays, and is in full sympathywith the aggre sive work of the Church, contributing largely to the home and foreign mission work. It maintains a native missionary in China.

The tenth anniversary was celebrated last week of Rev. B. Senior's ministry at Surrey Chapel (now New Surrey Chapel), Blackfriars-road, London. Mr. Senior said that when he came to the place ten years ago there were 65 church members. To-day they have about 300 members, a Sunday-school of 500 scholars, and a Sunday evening children's service of 250. No Sunday passes without professions of conversion.

At a praise meeting in Wardour Hall, on the following evening, many remarkable testimonies were borne. God has greatly blessed the services conducted by the young men from Lincoln House in town and country. A touching and remarkable testimony was given by a venerable-looking, white-headed man, who confessed that until his conversion at Wardour Hall, three weeks ago, he had been for "sixty years" more or less under the influence of drink, but that after he had trusted in Christ the very desire for strong drink had been taken away.

SALVATION ARMY.

Two more female officers have gone to prison in Sweden rather than desist from holding meetings after nine o'clock at night.

Out of seventeen officers in Wurmenburg, Germany, seven of them have been raised through the labours of the others during the last eighteen months.

A Shelter for women and children only was opened at Hanbury-street, Spitalfields, on Friday last. Beds are provided for 200 women and fifty children per night, and in the daytime a crèche for 250 children will be carried on. This Shelter will be worked very largely in connection with the rescue work.

BAPTIST.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon is preparing a new work on proverbs, using for it the materials collected in his John Ploughman almanacks.

The young men connected with Regent's-park Chapel have started an evening club for the lads in the vicinity who are roaming the streets.

Beulah Church, Thornton Heath (Rev. J. W. Harrald, pastor), which was formed in February, 1888, with 79 members, now reports 112, with fourteen regular communicants who are not members. In the Sunday-school and Bible-classes there are 360 scholars, with 31 teachers and officers. New buildings are about to be provided to afford increased accommodation.

The Earthen Vessel contains an official statement tha the Metropolitan Association of Strict Baptist Churches has excluded from membership the church at Highbury-place, Islington (Rev. P. Reynolds, pastor), for "having received to full membership, and having admitted to the Lord's table, an afflicted sister in the Lord without immersion."

Hampton Court Church (Rev. A. Hall, pastor) reports the admission of 26 to membership during the year; the roll now numbers 62. At the annual meeting it was unanimously resolved that the following paragraph be added to the church covenant and inserted in the trust deed:—"We deny every form of salvation after death; purgatory, restoration, life only in Christ, annihilation, and every other invention which aims to explain away the clear meaning of Matt. xxv. 46."

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Thomas Rowlands, of Madagascar, has been visiting some of the churches in Wales, to arouse interest in the cause of missions to the heathen.

The church at Winchmore-hill, N., reports seventy-seven members, nineteen of whom were received last year, four of these from the Sunday-school. The congregations have steadily increased since the pastor, Rev. John Jermyn, settled in September, 1887.

Rev. F. Hall, of Heckmondwike, has concluded a series of Sunday afternoon popular services which have been conducted in the large hall of the Co-operative Society on unsectarian lines. A string band and a voluntary choir led the singing. The attendances have been most gratifying, especially of those who attend no place of worship.

A service to take farewell of Rev. Frederick Hastings, prior to his departure for Australia, will be held at Tolmer-square Congregational Church, N.W., on Tuesday, March 26. Dr. R. W. Dale, of Birmingham, through whom Mr. Hastings received the invitation to succeed the late Rev. S. Hebditch in the pastorate of the church at North Adelaide, and other ministers will take part in the meeting.

The annual meeting of the congregation at Harecourt Chapel, Canonbury, under the pastoral care of Rev. Henry Simon, was held last week. The various societies were reported to be in a flourishing condition. Much good has been accomplished during the first year of Mr. Simon's pastorate. A Band of Hope, mutual improvement and debating societies, and gymnasium have been organised, as well as a ministers' aid society. Mission work has been undertaken at Hoxton, the school and congregation have largely increased, and ninety-three members have been added to the church.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Salvation Army "lasses" have opened fire in Maryborough, Queen's County. Large numbers of Roman Catholics have listened to them respectfully while they sang and preached in the streets.

Some conversions of Roman Catholics have taken place of late in connection with several Methodist churches. The political controversy, says The Methodist Times, is not disturbing the spiritual work.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Rev. Dr. Laird, of Cupar, is to be the next Moderator of the Free Church.

The work at the Sabbath morning free breakfast, Kilmarnock, is going on very successfully, proving a boon to many poor children and grown-up people. From 200 to 250 have breakfast, after which they are addressed by various speakers.

By the death of Rev. George Philp, Saltcoats, Glengarnock U.P. Church loses one of its best friends. The congregation was only a mission one when it started, and under the supervision of Mr. Philp it was raised to the full status of a congregation. He was much esteemed by all.

The annual meeting of the Lorne Hall Mission, Govan, was lately held. Mrs. Watt, who superintends the work, is engaged in a noble mission. She has in view the moral training and religious education of the youths in this district, over whom the churches have but scant control. The past success has been in great measure due to her earnestness and zeal.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Mr. William Twamley, at Blackrock, Dublin, a devoted Sunday-school teacher and earnest temperance worker.—Sir Frederick Boyd, at Ballycastle, formerly rector of Holwell, Bedfordshire.—Rev. William Murdoch, incumbent of Ardglass, at his brother's residence in Australia.—Rev. William Ward, a venerable Primitive Methodist minister, of Sheffield.—Mrs. Haile, wife of Rev. J. H. Haile, missionary of the London Missionary Society at Ambòhibelòma, Madagascar.—At Downham Market, Rev. Miles Pickering, for forty years in the Wesleyan ministry.—Rev. John Evans, since 1844 vicar of Whixall, Whitchurch, Salop.—Rev. G. W. Armitage, for over fifty-five years a minister of the Primitive Methodist Connexion.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Mr. Coad has had a successful temperance mission at Chancery-lane, Ardwick, Manchester.

The Committee of the Liverpool Sailors' Home reports that drunkenness amongst sailors is decreasing.

Mr. Caine, M.P., has given notice of a resolution in the House of Commons on the administration of the liquor and opium laws in India.

Over four hundred pledges were taken at the recent temperance mission at Rev. Jackson Wray's Church (Whitefield's Old Tabernacle), Tottenham-court-road.

The Temperance Record, 33, Paternoster-row, offers "Home Circle Prize Competitions" on temperance subjects. Anyone desiring further information should apply as above.

Drunkenness has increased so sadly in the Birmingham police force that at a meeting a few days ago the Watch Committee decided to dismiss six officers, to warn others, and to issue a general order to the force warning the members against the offence.

The licensing magistrates for the Tottenham district have set an example which might be widely followed on other benches. Eleven applications for new licences were made, but were in every case refused. Such guarding of the best and truest interests of the neighbourhoods concerned cannot be too highly commended.

FOREIGN.

The Sunday afternoon temperance meetings in Toronto, Canada, have an average attendance of 2500 people. Six daily papers of wide circulation carry extensive reports of these meetings all over the country.

"A writing, resting, and temperance refreshment room," says The Woman's Chronicle, has been opened in Paris, nearly opposite St. Roch Church and very near to the Louvre Museum. It is designed for the convenience of American visitors to Paris.

Rev. Joseph Cook in the prelude to his Monday lecture, February 11, said that there is more money behind the rum-shop oligarchy than there was behind slavery, and that so intrenched is this power that there is hardly hope of succeeding without the military arm. Although one point after another of the intrenchment may be carried, the victory cannot be complete until there is a national constitutional amendment.

The Homes for Aged Christian Blind Men and Women (under the direction of Rev. Henry Bright) are at the Mansion House, 71, 73 and 75, Hanley-road, Hornsey-rise, London, N.; not 171, Hanley-road, as given in our issue of March 1.

Lessouto. — There has been much sickness in the families of the missionaries in this part of the South African mission fields, two or three workers having lost children by measles and other ailments. It is hoped that, during the present year, at least two other labourers will leave for Basutoland.

A Mission Hall is sadly needed at Plumstead in which to carry on the good work in which Mr. and Mrs. George Richardson have for some years been engaged. At present the only available place for services is the club-room of a public-house. Land on which to build has been secured, and £500 is needed to erect the hall. The treasurer, Mr. W. H. Lewis, of the London and Provincial Bank, Woolwich, will be glad to receive contributions, and answer inquiries respecting the work.

The Annual Meeting of the Aldersgate-street Young Mens' Christian Association is fixed for Friday, April 12, in the Mansion House, the Lord Mayor in the chair. Addresses will be delivered by Rev. E. A. Stuart, of Holloway, and Rev. John McNeill, of Regent-square. A new departure will, on this occasion, be taken with regard to the hour of meeting, with a view of securing the attendance of City business men. Tea and coffee will be served at half-past four o'clock, and the meeting held between five and six o'clock

Engedi House.—Mrs. Seaman, after some years of active mission work in London, is opening a Convalescent Home for women and girls in Eastern-road, Brighton. Her long experience at Bethnal Green Dispensary in connection with a medical mission has made her realise the boon of a Convalescent Home at the seaside for the benefit of the many poor and needy ones of our great City. She has secured a most desirable house at Brighton. It is her desire to dedicate "Engedi House" to the service of God by seeking through its instrumentality to benefit not only the bodily health but spiritual life of the patients. Prayer and kindly interest in this new work are asked, as well as contributions for carrying on the Home efficiently.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the Union, and take its Monthly Notes, which are different from these.

SUNDAY, MARCH 17.—Exodus X.

THERE is a crisis in every soul-history, up to which God's methods appear likely to turn the proud will to Himself; but after that is passed, all those methods only seem to harden. The direct result of the most gracious and tender dealings is hardening; and it is in this sense that God is said to have hardened Pharaoh's heart. The real conflict lay with his stubborn will, which would not yield (3), although his chosen advisers persuaded him to let the people go (7). The only result of their pleadings was to induce the king to recall Moses and Aaron into his presence, and make another effort at compromise (8).

The Eighth Plague.—The locust is the most terrible plague of Eastern lands. The heat intense; the air quite still; there is a sound, as of a strong breeze sweeping through a forest; presently the sun is darkened by a cloud, which is composed of myriads of locusts. They cover all surfaces inches deep, and eat up every green thing, so that they leave a perfect wilderness in their rear (15). Notice the confession extorted by deadly fear (16).

The Ninth Plague.—The Hebrew word for "darkness" is that used of the darkness which covered the deep at the time of creation. The sun was among the chief deities of Egypt; hence there was a horror which might be felt, and which seemed to act as a paralysis (23). But there was light in Goshen. Compare Psa. cxii. 4, and John viii. 12.

The Lord's claim on his people.—"Not a hoof left behind" (26). Christ has redeemed us all, and claims all; every whit must speak his praise, and do Him service. Nothing must be left to the world. But it is only when we have passed through death and resurrection, and have come clearly out into the new world, that we realise all that his service involves. We go out, not knowing our full sphere, but trusting Him, whose service is blessed and perfect freedom.

MONDAY, MARCH 18.—Exodus XI.

"One plague more" (1).—Ominous words were these! And this final act of judgment would smite the fetters from Israel's neck for ever. It is vain for man to enter into conflict with God. God does not crush him at once, as He might, because He is longsuffering and forgiving, and would give opportunity of repentance; but, if he do not yield, the irreparable blow must fall (Ps. vii. 12). The word translated "borrow" is better rendered "ask" (2, R.V.). There is no suggestion in the original of a return being contemplated. It was fit payment for the long, unrewarded toils of the captivity; and the Egyptians understood that they were to part from Israel for ever.

There was more judgment to the parents than to the sweet children whom God took to Himself; gathering the lambs to his arms, as he does so often in our crowded cities still. And perhaps it was better that they should be rescued from the evil to come.

The great cry (6) reminds us of the piercing wail that rings through an Eastern town when a death takes place; and if every house were thus bereaved the accumulated anguish would indeed reach a heartrending climax. But there is to be one other such cry (Rev. i. 7). God alone can put the difference which divided Israel and Egypt. There was a difference like that which will separate sheep and goats at last. But it was not determined on mere arbitrary grounds. It arose from the difference in the characters of the two peoples. All Egypt inclined to side with Pharaoh against Israel, and Israel's God (Psa. cxxxvi.).

TUESDAY, MARCH 19.—Exodus XII.

Henceforth there was a new order of time, the sacred as well as the civil year (2). We should date our birthdays, not from the cradle, but from the cross, where we received redemption. Our life before conversion is not reckoned in the annals of God.

The Paschal Lamb is a striking type of Jesus (1. Cor. v. 7). "Without blemish" (1. Pet. i. 19). In the prime of life. Set apart before actually required (1. Pet. i. 20). Killed "between the evenings" (6). The blood speaking to God without, the flesh feeding the host of Israel within. Roasting, and unleavened bread, and bitter herbs, bespeak the intensity of his sufferings, and remind us of that humble and chastened spirit in which we should draw nigh. And does not the pilgrim attitude bespeak the spirit of the Church? (11). It would ill become us to sit or lie at our ease; all our life is to be a feast; but at any moment we may be summoned to go forth by the trumpet of the archangel. A separated and pilgrim host.

The foundation of peace.—They did not only rest on the blood thus sprinkled, but also on the distinct promise of God (see 13). It did not matter whether the people within doors were aware of the mighty mystery being enacted, or felt as they ought. The one question concerned the blood. All under the blood were safe. If there had been death to the least child, God's word would have been forfeited. And it is just this which we rely on for our own ultimate salvation. He hath said that whosoever believeth shall not perish. It is not your feelings about the blood, but the blood as seen by God, which secures your salvation.

The Exodus.—Plans had been most efficiently made with the greatest ease; the vast host began to take its way from Egypt—one of the greatest events in history! The efficient men amounted to 600,000, which would indicate the aggregate numbers as being not far short of two and a half millions, to which we must add some thousands more for the mixed multitude, who were destined to be both an inconvenience and a danger. The bulk of them were idolaters, whose spirit was very infectious, and frequently led the people of Israel into sin (Numb. xi. 4). They desired the rewards of the pilgrimage, but bitterly found fault with the supplies, and excited the murmurs of discontent.

The laws of partaking the Passover Supper (43—49).—Circumcision has its counterpart in our dispensation (Col. ii. 11). We must have the sentence of death written on our natures, and ever before us, cutting us off and separating us from sin, before we have any right to feed on Christ (Rom. viii. 8). Let a man examine himself also, ere he dares to partake of the Lord's Supper.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 20.—Exodus XIII.

Two customs perpetuated, amongst the children of Israel, that ever memorable night of Exodus: the dedication of the firstborn to God's service, and the feast of unleavened bread, when the Passover must be killed (Luke xxii. 7). As to the reason for these, it was clearly based on this marvellous night in which God's hosts were redeemed by blood, and by a strong hand. How clearly we are reminded of the demand which is made upon all redeemed ones in the direction of personal devotedness and personal holiness. Compare Titus ii. 14.

The firstborn sons in after years were replaced by the Levites, who did for Israel the religious service which would otherwise have been wrought by the eldest sons from every home—a privilege forfeited by sin (xxxii). But still they were only exempted from direct religious service by the offering of a lamb. Every firstborn son lived because blood had been shed. A forfeited life given back! And, in this act, notice that he was put on the same level as the firstling of an ass, deemed an unclean animal, and demanding also the slain lamb as the only escape from the breaking of the neck (13). This parable is for us. See Job xi. 12. Our lives are forfeited as unclean. We are redeemed to serve as God's priests (Rev. i. 5, 6).

The feast of passover was often intermitted in early years. But seven are of historical importance. This the first. The first in the desert (Numb. ix.) Joshua's (Josh. v.); Hezekiah's (2 Chron. xxx.); Josiah's (2 Chron. xxxv.); Ezra's (Ezra vi.). The last passover of the life of Jesus, when the shadow was fulfilled by the substance (Luke xxii.).

The phylacteries of later times were a literal interpretation of the command of ver. 16.

What tenderness in the choice of route! (18).—God had many deep lessons to teach his people, which could only be learnt in the desert (Deut. viii. 2—4). He did not want to show them war until they had first learnt their inexhaustible resources in Himself.

THURSDAY, MARCH 21.—Exodus XIV.

After three days' march they reached the head of the Red Sea, and there received the direction, at that time mysterious, to turn southward, and put themselves in such a position between the mountains which border the sea on the west as would completely stay their further progress unless they could pass over the sea in front, or return through the valley behind them, into the heart of Egypt. How strangely does God lead us, apparently into a net of entanglement (3). But it is only to provide a platform for the putting forth of his might. All is love (Ps. cxxxvi.). The tidings were immediately communicated to Pharaoh, who seems to have had a large standing force at hand, with which he started in pursuit (6, 7).

Consternation (10, 11).—We cannot blame them. How often have we been panic-stricken because we have looked upon our perils and foes, instead of looking up at the stationary cloud, which is the pledge of God's interposition on our behalf. Let us be very wary of ourselves, lest we murmur as they (1 Cor. x. 10).

Stand still (13).—This is impossible to flesh and blood. We must be doing something. We call it the "legitimate use of means." Faith, however, rises above the tumult into the majesty of simple waiting for God, and shelters itself behind Him. If you don't know what to do, wait till you do; it is God's business to direct and defend the believing soul. Let God do your fighting (14).

Go forward (15).—How? The sea foam lined the beach! There were miles of deep water! But when they reached the surf, the billows parted. So will all obstacles yield to us when God leads us on (Ps. lxvi. 6, lxxviii. 13; Is. lxiii. 13). The very waves we dreaded will be our wall (22). The Egyptians owed their safety to the presence of the Israelites, as the ungodly owe their prolonged existence to the presence of the Church (Gen. xix. 22). Which side are you of God's cloud? (19). What terror there is in one look from the eyes of God! (24, and Heb. iv. 13; Rev. vi. 16).

Our Father is ever choosing the best way; let us trust Him, and follow the movements of the cloud. The Lord goes before us by day and night (21, and John x. 4), He will never fail us, or take away the manifestation of his presence, if only we are willing and obedient (Ps. li. 11; Heb. xiii. 5).

FRIDAY, MARCH 22.—Exodus XV.

Israel passed through the Red Sea, as a symbol of death (1 Cor. x. 2). The Red Sea lay between them and Egypt, as the grave of Jesus lies between us and the world which expelled Him from its midst (Gal. vi. 14). And on the farther side the ransomed hosts stood as it were on resurrection ground, to sing their song of triumph. That song is the emblem of another (Rev. xv. 2). The sea of glass recalls the placid stillness ot the Red Sea; the fire recalls the sunrise over the hills of the desert. "They sang his praise" (Psa. cvi. 12).

All praise is ascribed to God.—There is nothing ascribed to self (2). Circumstances, leaders, all are lost sight of, and God alone fills the whole field of vision. How happy would it be for us if we could enter more fully into this spirit, and praise God thus (Ps. xcii. 4). Count up the mercies of God, and weave your praises into a crown to cast at his feet.

The range of this song is from redemption on the one side to settlement in the land on the other. Founding their trust on what God had done, the people were able to boast of what He would do (14—17). They sing of guidance as a past and accomplished fact, so sure are they that He who redeemed would lead (13). Notice that holy resolution (2). Let us remember that God is willing to inhabit our hearts, and let us make Him room (Is. lvii. 15 and Rev. xxi. 3—4).

Marah (23).—God leads us to bitterness that we may learn to appreciate the tree which makes all sweet. That tree is the cross, which turns the bitter things of life into sweetnesses. "Thy will be done" transforms Gethsemane into Paradise.

Elim.—It is not all desert travelling or bitter waters. Full often an oasis shines on our pathway, where we can rest and be satisfied. Green pastures and waters of rest. (Ps. xxiii. 2). But Elim is not Canaan; it is only a foretaste.

SATURDAY, MARCH 23.—Exodus XVI.

The manna was heavenly food. In many points it was a type of Christ (John vi. 32, &c.). It came down from heaven. Angels' food. Its colour was white, its texture was pure, its taste was sweet. There was enough for all the host, but it must be gathered in the early morning, ere the dew had left the ground, and it must be gathered fresh. The manna of yesterday would not do for to-day. As Jesus fed on his Father day by day, so must we perpetually have fresh glimpses of Himself, or else we shall never be able to sustain the toils of the desert (John vi. 57). And there is urgent need that we get such glimpses, before the busy world has engrossed our thoughts. Those who for some good reason were prevented from gathering their full measure were compensated (18); and those who for certain providential reasons are unable to get as much time as they would like with God, have it made up to them (Ps. lxviii. 12).

Quails (13) are still known in those lands, flying in vast flocks, so low to the ground as to be easily knocked down. But it was a providence that they came just at this time. All creation serves those who walk with God (1 Cor. iii. 21).

The Sabbath (23).—Evidently, before the law was given from Sinai, the people were accustomed to observe the Sabbath, which, indeed, is of permanent authority, like the rest of the commands of the Decalogue, being made for man, and having come down to Israel from the gates of Eden. We must not hoard God's gifts, lest they breed worms, and stink. We may be prodigal in using them, for He has unsearchable riches to supply our need.

BLIND BARTIMÆUS.

MARK x. 46—52. GOLDEN TEXT: x. 48.

JERICHO was situated about five miles to the west of the Jordan, and rather more than fifteen from Jerusalem, from which it was separated by a difficult and dangerous road, as suggested in the Parable of the Good Samaritan. Though the modern village of Riha is a wretched and poorly inhabited place, yet the Jericho of our Lord's day was a place of considerable importance and beauty. It has been described as "a blooming oasis in the midst of an extended sandy plain, watered and fruitful, rich in palms, roses, and balsam," hence its name, meaning, "place of fragrance." Through this city our Lord passed in his triumphal journey from Perea to Jerusalem.

There are apparent discrepancies in the three accounts of this miracle. Mark and Luke speak of one blind man, Matthew of two. According to Matt. and Mark, the miracle took place as Jesus left the city; Luke says it occurred as He entered. The first difficulty is easily explained. No doubt there were two, but Mark mentions only the more prominent, and the better known of the two (compare also Mark v. 2 with Matt. viii. 28). Nor is the second difficulty a serious one. Morison supports the suggestion that the appeal to the Saviour began as the procession entered the city, but was not immediately answered, and was renewed as the Saviour departed. This is a very probable conjecture, and would not be the only case in which faith and perseverance were thus tested and strengthened (see Matt. ix. 27, 28 and xv. 22—28).

Bartimæus is an interesting character. His name means, Son of Timæus. Probably he, and perhaps his father, were well known. His disease was, and is, unhappily, too common in the East. Speaking of Arabia, W. G. Palgrave says, "Ophthalmia is fearfully prevalent. It would be no exaggeration to say that one adult out of every five has his eyes more or less damaged by the consequences of this disease." His blindness incapacitated him for work, and made him dependent on the charity of others. But he appears to have had some excellent qualities as well. While sitting there by the wayside, he had heard of Jesus—of the claims He made, the works He performed; and, comparing these with what he knew of prophecy, had concluded that this was the Messiah. He saw what many who had eyes could not see. And as he could form an independent judgment, so he could be equally independent in his conduct. Without much help from others, he had formed his own conclusions, and, in spite of the opposition of others, he fearlessly and persistently acts upon his convictions. In some things, therefore, he is a worthy example for our imitation.

The incident illustrates the salvation of the sinner. Every unsaved person is blind. Jesus came to do a double work: to give sight to those who knew their blindness, and to make blind those who think they see (John ix. 39—41). It is possible to think ourselves both rich and seeing, while we are poor, and wretched, and blind (Rev. iii. 17). Let everyone begin by acknowledging both blindness and poverty. Then imitate Bartimæus.

His persistent appeal (47, 48).—How intelligent it was. Not only did he know his own condition and need, but he knew that Jesus was the Messiah. The people had called Him "Jesus of Nazareth," he appealed to Him as "Son of David." His conscious need quickened his intelligence. If the Messiah, then He could heal his blindness (Isa. xxxv. 5). Hence his urgent appeal. It was not an experiment, but the result of an unwavering confidence. Let every unsaved person have equal intelligence of need, and of the power and willingness of the Saviour, then make a similar appeal.

He made use of a passing opportunity (Luke xviii. 37).—Jesus came to Jericho, not to tarry, but to pass through. It was his first and last visit, and was therefore the blind man's only opportunity. We do not feel the need of such prompt action. We have had so many opportunities, and are expecting so many more that we carelessly let the present slip by unused. Yet delay is shortening our "day of visitation"; too soon it will close!

He persisted in spite of discouragement.—If the conjecture mentioned above is correct, then he was tried by the Saviour's apparent indifference to his cry. But that did not silence him. The people tried to hinder him (48). His cry annoyed them; they thought the cry would annoy the Saviour; a triumphal procession stopped by a blind beggar! So completely did they misunderstand the Saviour. But the blind man understood Him better, and only increased the persistency of his cry. Every soul seeking the Saviour will need persistence. Some hindrances are sure to be in the way. Heed them not, but cry.

The Saviour's response (49—52).—Notwithstanding the noise made by that large multitude—the tramp of their feet, the sound of their voices, yet He heard the cry of this poor man. More welcome to Him than all the evidences of popularity was this opportunity of relieving distress. He "stood still" (49). The whole procession must be stayed until this cry was answered. What an evidence of his willingness to hear the appeal of the guilty now! The people echoed the call: "Be of good cheer." They had discouraged him before. They render Christ better service by their encouragement now.

He "came to Jesus" (50).—Anything short of this would have left him still blind. Coming to Jesus, not merely hearing and believing much about Him, is the important condition. "He rose," or sprang up (R.V.). He was in earnest, and sought diligently for the blessing. We must seek with our whole heart if we are to find. "Casting away his garment."—The loose outer robe, which might have entangled him and delayed his reaching Jesus. A blind beggar could not have many garments to spare, yet he would part with this rather than risk the continuance of his blindness. The garment which some have to cast aside is an evil companionship, a doubtful amusement, a sinful habit. Cast aside anything that hinders your approach to Jesus.

The Saviour got him to tell before all the people what he desired (51). "What wilt thou?"—Could we always answer that inquiry? Are not our prayers sometimes too indefinite? "Thy faith" (52).—He heard this word, he believed it, and "immediately he received his sight." That is the order in our salvation. Hear, believe, and have (John v. 24). Faith is the instrument. Christ is "the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth" (Rom. i. 16). "He followed Jesus in the way."—Jesus had said, "Go thy way." He did, for he had now chosen the way of Jesus. True conversion produces this result. See a further result in Luke xviii. 43.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Blindness.—Seneca tells of a blind woman who insisted that the trouble was not with the eyes, but in the absence of light from the room.

Opportunity.—A wicked Kentucky soldier, deeply convicted of sin, after praying a whole night without obtaining relief, met the chaplain in the morning, and asked him to pray for him. He promised. "I mean now," said the man. "What! here in the road?" "Yes, here, chaplain, now." The chaplain dismounted, and they knelt by the roadside, and prayed until God answered the prayer, and saved the sinner.

DEACONESSES FOR CHINA AND SYRIA.—The Church of England Women's Missionary Association held a very interesting meeting in the Parlour at Exeter Hall last week to take leave of four deaconesses, two going to Shanghai, and two to Jerusalem. These sisters are trained both for teaching and nursing. The speakers at the meeting were Dr. Bullinger, Mrs. Meredith, Miss Lloyd, Miss Cross, Lord Radstock, and Rev. J. Gossett Tanner. Earnest prayer closed the meeting, which was very fully attended.

OBITUARY.

MISS M. L. WHATELY, EGYPT.

OUR readers will hear with great sorrow of the decease of this devoted worker, which took place at Alexandria on Saturday last, after a fortnight's illness. Miss Whately was the daughter of the late Dr. Whately, Archbishop of Dublin. She founded the British Mission Schools in Egypt, an agency which is of immense value, and her death will be a great loss to missionary enterprise in that country. The funeral took place on Sunday afternoon, in the presence of a large company, which included many distinguished personages.

MRS. JOSEPH GURNEY.

On Saturday, March 9, at 11, Ladbroke-terrace, Notting-hill Gate, Harriet, widow of the late Joseph Gurney, fell asleep in Jesus, aged 66. Mrs. Gurney was very well known in missionary circles, as Treasurer of the Baptist Zenana Society, and one of the promoters of the Missionary Prayer Union. She was also, for many years, one of the committee of the British and Foreign Training College, Stockwell. Her death has been sudden and unexpected, and we feel sure the bereaved relations will have the sympathy of many Christian friends.

PASTOR CHARPIOT, OF BRANGES.

Another prominent French pastor has gone. M. J. P. Charpiot, who died a few days ago at Branges, Saône-et-Loire, was justly held in high esteem throughout the eastern departments of France. Born in 1813 near Montbeliard, he was early converted to God, and began the work of evangelisation when quite young. In 1844 he entered upon a life-long ministry at Sornay. With other pastors he suffered imprisonment under the persecuting decree of 1852, spending over three months in gaol for not having secured the registration of his place of worship. Hundreds of persons owe their spiritual enlightenment to the deceased, by whom many Christians were strengthened on their life-course.

REV. DR. M'COY, OF "THE INDIAN WITNESS."

The Indian Witness, of Calcutta, in its issue of February 16, just to hand, announces the death of its editor, Rev. Frank Latimer McCoy, Ph.D. A native of Ireland, he emigrated to America while quite a youth, and at the age of eighteen studied for the Methodist ministry. After labouring in several spheres in the State of Michigan, he accepted the editorial post, which he occupied from January, 1887, to the time of his death. He was a forcible writer, and ever on the alert to deliver himself on moral and religious questions for the good of India and the glory of God. His last earthly work was to invite all the missionaries of his church in Calcutta to a prayer-meeting at his house. The next day he was sick unto death. He has left an example of sanctified activity, as well as a bright Christian testimony.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.—The excellent practical address on "Paul the Worker," recently delivered here by Rev. F. B. Meyer, is now published in booklet form, and may be had from the Rest, 108, Ratcliff-highway, E. (Seven copies, 6d., post free: 6s. per 100.) Those who procure it will not only have their money's worth, but will help a good work, as all profits go to the funds of the institution. Mr. Isaac, the secretary, asks to say that he will be very thankful for supplies of German and Scandinavian tracts, for distribution among seamen.

SALVATION ARMY REPORTS.—The following "Correction," which appears in the South African War Cry, has reference to the communication lately sent to us by Rev. J. Brown, of Bechuanaland:—"Staff-Captain Lewis wishes the editor to state that a mistaken impression is conveyed in the report of an officers' meeting held in Port Elizabeth, by 'Anti-Laodicean,' in The War Cry of the 15th ult., on the subject of missionaries in Bechuanaland. It was certain unprincipled persons who sought to prejudice the minds of the people against the 'red-jerseyed men,' and our efforts had triumphed in spite of such base conduct. Staff-Captain Lewis informs us that he has met uniform kindness and help from the missionaries, and mentions the names of Rev. Wm. Ashton and Rev. John Brown, who have rendered valuable assistance to the Salvation Army. We are glad to make the correction, and heartily wish our brethren, the missionaries, much success and blessing in their efforts to bring salvation to the native races."

CUCKOO CLOCK and WEATHER HOUSE

(COMBINED).

A handsomely carved wood clock, 22in. in height, with ivory hands and figures, strikes the hours and half hours on a powerful wire gong. Each time the clock strikes a charming little cuckoo pushes open a door at top of clock, and comes out, and cuckoos the hours and half hours, then retires, and the door closes after it. Above the clock is the Weather House, containing beautifully modelled figures of male and female peasants, 3in. high. The man comes out if about to be wet, and woman if fine. We warrant these clocks to go for years, and for time-keeping qualities no better clock can be obtained at any price, while they are ornamental and fit to decorate a palace.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN"

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of DISEASED LUNGS.

Mrs. E. W., also CASE of HER CHILD.

This lady, for certain reasons, would not like her name published; but writing me in December last, she says:—"I shall be pleased to answer any inquiry of any patient of yours whom you may privately refer to me."

For some years she had suffered from internal misplacement, and nursing her children during an epidemic of measles, she caught cold upon cold. Cough followed, with pains in the legs and heavy expectoration of green and yellow phlegm, with such a feeling of weight over the heart that she could not lie down. The pain became acute. She was almost pulseless and delirious. The doctor then pronounced her "lungs to be diseased, the right lung most." She had read my book, and, unknown to him, she commenced my treatment. "My progress and recovery (she says) puzzled him. I am stronger than I have been for years. My friends consider it a marvel, but we believe God directed us and blessed the means."

The case of this lady's little boy is also interesting. It was several years ago the child had measles and inflammation of the lungs, which left a most distressing cough. "I asked the doctor, (Mrs. W. writes me) if he could give him nothing to relieve it. He shook his head and said nothing could be done more than I had done. I was then getting ill myself, and was alarmed, but hearing of your medicine I obtained it, and in a few weeks the child was well, and since his recovery has had no relapse."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

FITS.

EPILEPSY OR FALLING SICKNESS.

GIDDINESS, SENSATIONS, AND FAINTS.

I will demonstrate to the whole world how that most dreadful of all complaints, "Epilepsy," which has been hitherto considered incurable, can be permanently cured (without the chance of failure). All afflicted may write with full hope and confidence to Mr. WILLIAMS, 10, Oxford Terrace, Hyde Park, London; who will send all particulars to any person, free of all charge.

EAST END DISTRESS. — Rev. THOMAS JACKSON, 41, Powerscroft-road, Clapton, London, E., appeals for assistance for destitute families. Children's Free Dinners, and Soup Kitchen Fund in urgent need of funds. Gifts of money, food, or clothing promptly acknowledged, and exclusively appropriated to the relief of destitution.

AN APPEAL FROM JERUSALEM. —The Evangelical Mission to Israel is in great need of Christian help. Those of the Lord's children who would like to know it and afford their help, should correspond with Mrs. T. WALKER, The Hall, Glenn, Leicester; HENRY TASKER, Esq., Brook Side, Andover; and Mr. ROBERT MORGAN, 138, Clifden-road, Clapton, London. We are also known to the editors of this periodical for more than 20 years. We may mention the following branches of the work are carried on:—The Gospel to Jews in their houses, and every opportunity. Our meetings in the Mission-room are as follows:—Sunday morning, Worship; evening, Gospel. Tuesday evening, Lecture on Prophecy. Wednesday noon, Mothers' Meeting. Friday evening, Bible-class. Saturday, Lecture to Jews. The Reading-room open all day. Night School, Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday, from 6 to 9 p.m. Pray for all the branches.—D. CHRISTOPHER JOSEPH, Evangelical Mission to Israel, Jerusalem.

CONTRIBUTIONS of Money and Clothing are earnestly solicited by the Committee of the Ladies' Samaritan Society National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen-square, Bloomsbury. The smallest donations will be thankfully received. A few old coats are much needed.

PADDINGTON HALL and Hyde Park Mission.—This Mission has a Sunday School. Open-air Preaching. Indoor Meetings. Visits the Sick and Dying. Works among the Fallen, Dust Women, &c. But is £40 in debt. Who will kindly assist?—J. DAVIDGE, 90, Church-street, Paddington-green, W.

CLOSING OF THE BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.—I regret to have to inform the friends of Israel, that through failing health, I am compelled to terminate the Barbican Mission, which will be finally closed on March 25.

Contributions will be gratefully received by Miss GLADSTONE, Hon. Sec., Latymer Road Mission, Blechynden Street, Notting Hill, W.

CHAS. SMALLMAN, Secretary.

COMING PROPHETIC EVENTS.

THE announcement of the recent prophetic meetings at Cannon-street Hotel, which was printed on page 23 of last week's CHRISTIAN for March 15, contained by the printer or correspondent a misquotation of the following three dates, which on the original placard are as follows:—On second and third line the words should be "End of this Age in Passover Week in April, 1901 (not 1890). Also on ninth and tenth line, "Before his Seven Years' Covenant, as Syrian King, with the Jews on April 21 (Passover Day), 1894" (not 1890). Also on last line, "Commencement of Millennium on Last Day of Passover Week, April 11, 1901 (not 1891).

Opportunity is also taken here to mention that the objection expressed in connection with that paragraph on page 23, by Mr. Cameron Brock as to the texts in Matthew xxiv. and xxv. about the Day and Hour being unknown—is contrary to the best expositors, such as Rev. Canon Birks, Bengel, Shimeall, Dr. Duffield, Dr. Baylee, Pym, Bicheno, Bayford, J. Fletcher, Granville Penn, &c., who justly hold that those texts only apply to the generation before the Book of Revelation was given, and long before the present "Time of the End," when the words of the Prophecy are to be unsealed and unclosed and the Wise shall understand them according to Daniel xii.

Attention is particularly requested to Mr. Birch's 827th printed Sunday sermon published last week by Messrs. Brook & Chrystal, Market-street, Manchester (at 1d.), in which he shows that there are Four Progressive Stages in the "Cleansing of the Jewish Sanctuary," according to Daniel's dates, viz.:—1st on March 21 (Nisan 1), 1844, at the primary ending of the 2,300 years from Ezra's Reforms, completed on Nisan 1, 457 B.C.—2ndly, on April 27 (Nisan 22), 1856, at the Crimean War Treaty of Peace, which was the secondary ending of the 2,300 years from Nehemiah's command to rebuild Jerusalem on Nisan 22, B.C. 445 (Daniel viii. 14, ix. 25, Nehemiah ii).—3rdly, about April 2 (Nisan 1), 1889, which will be exactly 2,345 years from Ezra's Reforms, completed on Nisan 1, B.C. 457, as stated in Ezra vii. This expected further "cleansing of the sanctuary" will probably be some concession by the Turkish Sultan or Governor of Jerusalem of additional rights, privileges or more civil and religious liberty or facilities for the Jewish ecclesiastical observances.—4thly, on Nisan 22, the last day of Passover week, 1901, which will be precisely 2,345 years from Nehemiah's command to rebuild Jerusalem on Nisan 22, B.C. 445, and the final and complete cleansing of the sanctuary. The 2,345 years consists of the 2,300 years, with the additional 45 years, which are the extension of the 1335 years over and beyond the final 1,290 years of the 2,300 years in Daniel xii. 11, 12.

THERE ARE BYE-PATHS of human suffering from whence no cry is heard. Miss FAITHFULL, The Institute, 136, Regent-street, earnestly pleads for many needy, invalid, and distressing cases. The winter is so severe, want so great.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

As our readers will see, we give four additional pages this week, but even these do not enable us to publish all the interesting articles that are in type. As our second portrait of the late Mr. Denham Smith is not out of the engraver's hands, we defer the promised collection of his sick-chamber utterances, and give instead some touching reminiscences by Mrs. Guinness and Rev. W. Crosbie.

It may remove some misapprehension if we inform our readers that the note respecting The Times and Mr. Parnell, in our issue of a fortnight since, was inserted just before going to press, without having been previously seen by the Editor.

Our advertising columns contain an "explanation" by Rev. M. Baxter. We must say, however, that such prognostications seem to us only calculated to discredit "the sure word of prophecy," to lead to useless speculation, and to mislead inquiring minds.

In one of his first sermons in Regent-square, Rev. John McNeill expressed a strong conviction that the ministerial practice of giving "lectures" at the forenoon Sunday diet of worship is very much overdone, while the evangelising of the Church is sadly underdone. If he can inoculate his fellow-preachers with that opinion, he will do much to infuse new life into the services of the sanctuary.

We have a suggestion to make which, if carried out, would tend in the same direction. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe is, just now, deeply burdened with the idea that we are making a mistake in so largely relegating missionary meetings to week evenings. He would have us make a much freer use of the Sabbath evenings, say, after the regular church services are over, in order to spread missionary information and awaken missionary devotion. Our suggestion is that the Sunday morning hour of worship should also be frequently utilised for that purpose. It is then that the Christian people come together in largest numbers, and there could be no better opportunity for laying on the mind and heart of the churches their responsibilities in this matter.

At the missionary meetings in Liverpool last week, Mr. J. E. Mathieson warmly commended his hearers to read Mr. F. S. Arnot's new missionary book, GARENGANZE, just published by Mr. J. E. Hawkins, 17, Paternoster-row (2s. 6d.). We very cordially endorse this commendation. Among its greatest charms are the simplicity of the narration, and the little meditative and expository touches that light up the matters of fact. For let no one suppose it is a dry record of events, though much of it is in diary form. It is full of the romance of travel and of adventure; while through the whole seven years' story there breathes the spirit of the fully consecrated servant of Jesus Christ. It is, moreover, a notable contribution to the discussion of modern missionary methods.

Dr. Barnardo's latest issue of Night and Day is one of wonderful interest, and gives a very complete bird's-eye view of the great work he is sustaining on behalf of the destitute and forsaken children of this great city. Those who are attracted by romance in real life should give it an attentive study. We hope to be able to give, next week, some typical extracts; meantime we heartily recommend to the best sympathies of our readers this now gigantic work of Christian philanthropy.

It is very desirable to minimise and not to exaggerate our divergences on points of doctrine, and we are anxious to come as near to our brethren as possible. A few of our correspondents have supposed that we wish to confine the action of the precious blood of Christ to the removal of guilt, and to deny its power to cleanse and purify. This is a total misapprehension. We are quite at one in this respect. Where we differ is in that we maintain the almost universal view that the blood of Christ in the New Testament, and the blood of beasts, which typified it in the Old, is invariably blood shed to make expiation for sin. Can one text be quoted where the blood clearly means not the poured out life, but the life of Jesus during his sojourn on earth, or since his resurrection; and where it clearly does not mean the blood shed upon the cross, or afterwards applied by sprinkling? We confidently believe that this latter is its invariable significance. If there be any passage where it necessarily has any other meaning, we anxiously beg to have it pointed out.

It is said that the blood has other effects besides that of making expiation. Quite true: but it is its expiatory efficacy which gives it power and virtue for every further function it performs. Redemption and reconciliation, forgiveness and cleansing, justification and sanctification, sonship and heirship, kingship and priesthood, bridal blessing and session upon the throne, God's inheritance in us, and our inheritance in God, every glory which accrues to God through man, and every blessing which accrues to man in time and in eternity—are only rendered possible by the blood of the cross.

A Cardiff newspaper, The Western Mail, recently published a series of articles with the object of showing that since the passing of the Welsh Sunday Closing Act, Sunday drinking has largely increased, and bogus clubs have become more numerous than formerly in South Wales. Doubtless, the articles showed a bad state of things to exist in some places; but, while they by no means demonstrated that state of things to result from the operation of the Act, they pointed the obvious inference that the evil must be accounted for by imperfect administration of its provisions. What has given some importance to these articles is the fact that they have induced Lord Aberdare, who had much to do with passing the Act, to declare that it "had failed in its object, and had done, and was doing, more harm than good." On the other hand, temperance workers and others in South Wales, who have carefully observed its working, affirm that the Act has not only been a success, but is becoming an increasing success. A resolution to this effect was carried unanimously at a meeting held at Cardiff, on Saturday last, and we are glad to be assured that overwhelming proofs will in due course be forthcoming. Similar allegations of failure were made against the operation of Sunday closing in Scotland and Ireland, but in each case the charge was abundantly disproved before Parliamentary Commissions.

At Liverpool Assizes, the other day, a mere lad was sentenced to imprisonment for burglary. It appeared from the evidence that the lad's mind had been inflamed by pernicious literature, and that when he was arrested some weekly numbers of vile stories of highwaymen and thieves were found upon him. A younger brother, only twelve years old, who had assisted in the burglaries, was let off. Is it not possible to regulate to some degree, if we cannot stop altogether, the incessant flood of harmful and dangerous trash, which is being issued by shameless publishers?

There is much anxiety felt in many quarters regarding the future of foreign missions. Nearly a hundred years ago Britain sent its first missionary to India; now there is a probability that the abandonment of several mission stations, through the Church's inability to support them on the same scale, will mark the centenary. Falling off in the contributions is attributed as one cause; lack of the fervent missionary spirit in our midst is a more potent one. An earnest writer in a Glasgow paper says, if there should be any work in which churches should forget their differences, and simply labour to make men Christians, it is this mission work. William Carey, the first British missionary sent to India, the decay of whose then planted mission church is so specially grievous, was an apostolically spirited man. The arising of many like men—for as yet we have but the few—is more necessary to save foreign missions from falling into decay than largely increased revenue, though that is needful enough.

It is to be regretted that some of the evils which have been made apparent during the sittings of the Lords' Committee upon Sweating cannot be promptly dealt with. Many of the shameful things which have been testified to ought not to be allowed to continue to exist a single month. One married couple—spike nailmakers from the Black Country—stated last week that they worked from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily. They could, between them, earn from 18s. to 20s. a week; but from their wages 2s. 3d. for fuel and 5s. for carriage had to be deducted, so that only from 11s. to 13s. per week remained. Out of this, house-rent of 2s. 6d. per week had to be paid. The wife was described as a "sad-looking, pale-faced woman." A girl who followed stated that she was thirteen years of age, and worked from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m., and earned from 3s. to 5s. per week, from which 6d. is deducted by the sweater.

This state of things would be bad enough without the sweater and the trucker coming in; but "the curse of the poor is his poverty," and these poor creatures are at the mercy of all sorts of heartless middlemen, who compel them to deal at their shops, where trade profit is supplemented by shop-keeping profit. The evils of "cruel cheapness" in connection with these unfortunate toilers was painfully illustrated by the statement, made before the Committee by Mr. G. Reay, of a Dudley firm, that "the Government obtained their horse nails from abroad, because they got them cheaper, although they were greatly inferior." Such a fact speaks for itself, as does the placid assertion of The Daily Telegraph, that "no law can ensure good wages while human life and labour are cheap."

A wealthy Congregationalist, and successful Manchester man, who died worth more than two millions and a half sterling, has bequeathed £163,000 to charitable institutions. A Manchester paper says:—

Whatever use he made of his money while he lived, no one will say he has not directed that it should be wisely distributed after his decease. But, then, it is after, and not before. We often marvel, when we see such bequests, that men in such positions should cling so tenaciously to their superfluous wealth during their lifetime, when they might have done untold good with it, and been the recipients of inestimable pleasure in seeing the good they did.

It is recorded of Reynolds, the Quaker, that another told him he intended to leave certain sums of money to religious uses. "Friend," said the Quaker, "thou shouldst remember, thou wilt be judged for the deeds done IN the body, whereas thou wilt be out of the body when such money is used according to thy bequests." David, inspiration tells us, "served his own generation."

We have often urged caution, and an attitude of waiting, before accepting the conclusions of science. The wisdom of this is shown in a remarkable paper in the current Harper's Magazine by no less an astronomical authority than Norman Lockyer. When Lord Rosse's powerful telescope was constructed, much was made of the supposed discovery that far-distant objects, hitherto thought to be formless nebulæ, were in reality clusters of stars. The conclusion was held to favour the notion of a natural history of creation. From this, however, came a further opinion that the nebulæ were masses of gas. The view is now held, until some better explanation is given, that nebulæ like comets are neither clusters of stars, nor masses of gas, but merely consist of meteorites. Such is the last result of spectroscopic inquiry. There are other most important suggestions in the paper that ought to make men question the scepticism which they vainly say is supported by the magnitude of creation.

Attention is being drawn in many quarters to a modern style of preaching which purposely leaves out all appeals to fear. In conferences on preaching there have been those who recommend this omission. Happily, a reaction is setting in against these one-sided sermons. It may be useful, as a help to this reaction, to quote one of the greatest of the so-called fathers. Clement of Alexandria speaks of the function of fear as implanted by God in order to man's safety, and as a motive to righteous action. He regards an appeal to it as indispensable to the Divine method of teaching by means of revelation, and as that which is wrought in the soul by the inspiring Spirit. A remembrance of these things would preserve audiences from the preaching which is as novel and shallow as it is soul-destroying.

The state of Italy, like that of other kingdoms, is one of troubled agitation. At the beginning of this month the Pope was carried in state to celebrate Mass in the Sistine Chapel, and then poured out bitter complaints against the Government for its policy against the Papacy. On the other hand, statesmen dilate on the injustice of the Pope's action in the matter of the appointment of bishops. Meanwhile, a Franciscan preacher of marked popular gifts is drawing crowds to his Lenten addresses in a church in the Corso which is blocked by the people as he leaves the building. What is the meaning of this shaking and perturbation of nations? Does not everything show how hungry the souls of men are, spite of falsehoods and infidelities, and that, unconsciously to themselves, peoples are crying out for Him who is the Peace and the Truth?

A singular contrast has happened in two religious communions. A minister has sent in to the Liverpool Presbytery the resignation of his charge of St. Andrew's Church, Douglas, Isle of Man, in consequence of the majority of his office-bearers attending a supper in celebration of Burns the poet, and, soon after, sitting down at the Lord's Supper. He had remonstrated against this as inconsistent, but in vain. On the other hand, in Halifax, five of the deacons of Park Congregational Church have signed a letter of dissent from the views taught by their minister on the subject of Christ's atonement. These are strong measures; but it must be felt that a practical protest on the part of a pastor, against what he deems a false liberty, and an open expression, on the part of deacons, against what they deem to be false theology, are signs of the times.

A very encouraging account has been given of the satisfactory results which have followed the employment of a medical missionary, Miss Sugden, at Hankow, China. The Wesleyan Missionary Society are now having a large hospital built for women and children, at which Miss Sugden, and Rev. S. R. Hodge, who has surgical and medical diplomas, will act. "The Gospel," it is stated in the report "will be daily preached to the out-patients in the waiting-room, and special attention given to the spiritual interests of the in-patients." What a blessing such a work must be in a country like China.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.—A large ward in Her Majesty's Hospital for Sick Children, Stepney, is to be named after The Boy's Own Paper, the readers of which have nearly raised the sum of £750, by which the appropriation was secured. The ward will be dedicated to the memory of General Gordon.

SABBATH SANCTIFICATION.—It is proposed to circulate 300,000 copies of a call to prayer for this object, in London and neighbourhood. The sum of £40 is needed to accomplish this, and subscriptions can be sent to Mr. Joseph W. Leng, 33, Paternoster-row, London, W.C. Last year, when this special effort for the Metropolis began, the number of copies distributed did not reach 30,000. Friends are kindly asked to send help at once, as the days agreed on for distribution are from April 7 to 14.

Which is Right?

A few weeks ago a Church of England Mission was held, in which, amongst others, an advanced Ritualist and a prominent evangelical clergyman took part. "A Watchman" writes to us that the former, together with another whom he names, has Done more to Romanise the Church of England than any other clergymen we know. It is true that he blends the Gospel with belief and practice of the Confessional, and of the Romish Sacraments, which include the sacrifice of the Mass. What must be the state of a conscience—ay, what must be the perilous self-delusion of that spiritual life, which, while it remains in the Church of England, teaches and practises those dogmas of the apostate Church of Rome, and which dogmas are called by the Church of England "damnable doctrines and dangerous deceits." Rome to-day largely owes her popularity with the upper classes, and the bishops of our Church, to the plausible and perfervid minglemangle of Ritualistic missioners."

In reply to this, the evangelical clergyman writes:—

I heard him twice: the one sermon involved a reference to Holy Communion, his text being, "Give us this day our daily bread"; and the other involved reference to forgiveness of sins. In neither sermon did he say anything to which I should have taken any very serious exception. I don't mean to say that my views and his coincide, but I would go so far as to say that the difference lies more in point of view and form of expression than in the essential nature of things spiritual. He referred to Confession, but in a very guarded way, that could hardly be described as going beyond the Prayer Book, to which your correspondent has given his adhesion. A very evangelical clergyman sitting beside me was so much pleased with the sermon that he went in and thanked him for it very cordially.

My own theory of ———'s is that he is God's appointed messenger to the High Churchmen of our land, and that he has done more than any other man now living to infuse spiritual life into the dry bones of High Church theology. I believe solemnly before God that there are thousands of High Church people to-day rejoicing in conscious pardon and peace who have received it either directly or indirectly through him. Are we justified in setting upon the pillory of theological denunciation a brother in Christ who is full of his Master's spirit, and who is honoured by the Master to "cast out devils in his name," "because he followeth not with us"?

It should, I think, further be borne in mind that —— was appointed to his present position by Bishop ——, who has no sympathy with extreme opinions, and they seem to get on extremely well together. Further, he told me that he is received by men of all sorts of different schools in his diocese, and evangelicals on the whole attend his gatherings for the clergy better than do High Churchmen. Of one thing I am as certain as I am of anything, that such diatribes only injure the cause they are intended to serve. They only disgust men of moderation and particularly rising young men, while they tend to narrow the prejudices of bigots.

We withhold names, in order to avoid personalities. A very important question is here raised, as to which we have ourselves reached a very definite conclusion. But we should be glad of the views of our readers on the subject. The question is, Which of the views expressed above is right?

PARIS MISSION TO THE JEWS.—Mr. Solomon Feingold, evangelist, informs us that on March 1 the Jews, being jealous of the success attending his labours, raised an uproar in the mission hall, 6, Rue Malherbes. Having destroyed some of the furniture, and assaulted the workers, they started cries of "Vive Boulanger!" This constituted a political offence, and the police at once ordered that the Hall should be closed. The demonstration was evidently the design of wicked men who wished to bring discredit upon the Mission. The directors, Misses Law and Palmer, may count upon sympathy in this trial, which, it is hoped, will soon be terminated, by the police allowing the hall to be re-opened.

Euodia and Syntyche.—2.

Our second point is that Euodia and Syntyche were the centre of the dissension in the Church at Philippi.

Dr. Watts told his young friends that "Thomas and William and such pretty names should be quiet and harmless as lambs." Euodia and Syntyche are beautiful names; Euodia—Sweet-savour; Syntyche—Affable. They remind us of the times of our Puritan ancestresses, when two sisters or two companions might have been called Faith and Patience, or Hope and Joy, or Grace and Peace. In these days of modern thought and less direct dealing with the Bible, their parents might have named them Sweetness and Light.

But Euodia and Syntyche, in spite of their well-meaning names, fell out by the way. It may be inferred, however, that it was no mere personal quarrel that divided them: for they had fervently laboured with the Apostle in the Gospel, and on this account it is more likely their disagreement should arise from the doctrine or the work of the Gospel than from any collision of their individual tastes or private interests. "Their activity," says John N. Darby, "having gone beyond the measure of their spiritual life, betrayed them into an exercise of self-will, and set them at variance."

The earnestness of the Apostle's entreaty to them to be reconciled is an echo of the vehement appeal, noticed in our former paper, with which the second chapter opens. Indeed, if we connect that passage with his message to these two sisters, we shall see that they must have been regarded by the Apostle as the chief cause of the division which existed. The connected passages are thus translated by Conybeare and Howson:—

> If then you can be entreated in Christ, if you can be persuaded by love, if you have any fellowship in the Spirit, if you have any tenderness or compassion, I pray you, make my joy full, be of one accord, filled with the same love, of one soul, of one mind. Do nothing in a spirit of intrigue or vanity, but in lowliness of mind let each account others above himself. Seek not your private ends alone, but let every man seek likewise his neighbour's good....I exhort Euodia and I exhort Syntyche to be of one mind in the Lord. Yea, and I beseech thee also, my true yokefellow, to help them [to be reconciled]; for they strove earnestly * in the work of the glad tidings with me,—together with Clement and my other fellow-labourers, whose names are in the Book of Life.

"Here," says the Dean of Raphoe, in the Speaker's Commentary, "he apparently associates Clement and the others with his yokefellow, in the proposed task of peacemaking. Thus these words are to be connected with 'help,' and not, as by most, with 'labourers with me.' To mention the past services of Clement and others would be here irrelevant; but it is in keeping with the spirit and tenor of the Epistle that not the chief pastor only, but all who under him are 'fellow-labourers' with the Apostle, should be invited by him to unite in restoring harmony to the Church. The importance thus stamped on the matter serves to show these women at once his high regard for them, and his sense of the hurt done to the cause of Christ by their discord."

Surely it seems to show also that if the chief pastor, and all his fellow-labourers, were entreated to lend their aid in reconciling these women, they must have been the very core of the dissension which was troubling the church at Philippi. Nor need this seem strange; that was not the last time that the sisterhood have embroiled a church. Moreover, women had from the first been an important element in the Philippian assembly. See Acts xvi. 13; 14, 15; 16—18; 40. It was to women assembled by the river-side that Paul and Silas first preached. Then Lydia's heart was opened, she and her household were baptized, and she constrained the Apostle and his companions to abide in her house. It was a woman, a pythoness, who opposed them, and out of whom Paul cast the evil spirit. And it was to the house of Lydia that they returned after they had been released from prison. No wonder the tempter should seek to sow discord among the loving saints at Philippi, and that it should be especially by means of women who had been foremost in the work of the Gospel that his wicked purpose should be effected.

The form of the Apostle's entreaty to Euodia and Syntyche, to be of the same mind in the Lord, connects itself with the same words used more than once previously; e.g.:—

> i. 27.—"That ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the Gospel." ii. 2—"That ye be like minded, having the same love, of one accord, of one mind." iii. 15, 16—"Let us therefore as many as be perfect be thus minded; and if in anything ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you. ...Let us mind the same thing."

This repeated entreaty to them all to be of one mind culminates in the exhortation to Euodia and Syntyche, and traces the discord home to them as its cause and centre.

The words "in the Lord" also are significant. They perhaps, more than any others, characterise this Epistle, in which they occur nine times, besides "in Christ," "in Jesus Christ," "in Christ Jesus." Self-will, self-love, self-seeking, had entered into the Gospel service of the saints at Philippi, and the Apostle again and again insists that they are "brethren in the Lord"; all his own purposes and expectations are "in the Lord"; he rejoices and will have them rejoice only "in the Lord"; their gladness in receiving Timothy must be "in the Lord"; and he entreats these women not only to be of one mind, but "of one mind in the Lord."

Observe the gracious tact with which the Apostle approaches the unhappy variance between Euodia and Syntyche. He does not scold them, nor point them out to his true yokefellow as two quarrelsome or self-seeking women. He does not at first, nor indeed until the close, refer to them at all. He fetches a compass, and comes round to them. He surrounds them with a network of love, human and divine. He contrasts, without direct reference to them, the self-sacrificing spirit of Jesus with the spirit of vanity and intrigue which has taken hold of them. He prepares them for his direct appeal, at last, to "be of one mind in the Lord," by his previous exhortation, to all their fellow-saints at Philippi, "Let that mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus"—and all the wondrous words that follow (ii.).

What a pattern of spiritual warfare, of holy skill, of divine tactics, in turning the devices of the enemy into a means of enlarging the experience, deepening the lowliness, and intensifying the love, of those who had once run well, but Satan hindered them. Now they will mount up as on eagles' wings, they will run and not be wearied, they will walk and not faint. They will labour in the Gospel with an imitation of Jesus before unknown.

Pastors may learn, from Paul's dealing with Euodia and Syntyche, an invaluable lesson as to the delicate handling necessary to the human spirit even of the regenerate, especially when the tenderer half of human nature is concerned. Learn, also, how patiently and lovingly he bore that heaviest burden, which came upon him daily, the care of all the churches. And what an exceeding need there is of faithful pastors, who will feed the flock of God, not of constraint, but willingly; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock. Paul will not only have the crown of righteousness, which the Righteous Judge shall give at that day to all that love his appearing; but, when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, he shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. May there be many elders of this generation who shall receive it likewise. M.

* "The verb is the same as that used in i. 27, of the unanimous struggle of the church for the faith."

AMONG THE SANTALS.

Dear Sir,—It is just a year ago since I wrote to you and mentioned that Miss Adam and I were in tent, visiting the Santali and Bengali villages. Miss Adam is spending this winter in her van at Deoghur, an exceedingly dark place. She gets interesting interviews with English-speaking babus who seem inclined to talk over the truth, if not to receive it. She also visits the villages there.

I have joined with Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius, and hope to commence a mission for Santals in connection with their Mission, about ten miles from their station. I hope in time to get schools to train the children for Jesus, and shall have an oxen cart to visit distant villages.

You may not know anything about Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius, so I would say that God has kept them sixteen years in the mission field without any change to England or the hills. The Lord has truly supplied all their need as they themselves testify. I do not mean to say that they have had every comfort all these years. There has been self-denial practised, and this God calls us all to; it preserves the health of our souls. Mr. Cornelius left a comfortable home in Sweden for sea life. While thus occupied, God's Spirit strove mightily with him; and, behind one of the boats on deck, alone, he gave his heart to God. Then he felt called of God to spread the glad tidings amongst India's millions. His ship came to Calcutta. After some difficulty he got leave from the captain, and started for the Bengal jungle, following the railway line, alone, and without a knowledge of the language. He joined Mr. Boerresen's Mission.

After two years he married Mrs. Body, a missionary's widow, and went up with her from Calcutta to her bungalow, where he has faithfully preached the Gospel in the surrounding villages and native markets ever since. His work has been chiefly amongst Bengalis, though he preaches in Santali villages, and understands both languages well. I ask an interest in your prayers that God will, in his mercy, lead this people to Himself.—Yours in the Gospel, Emmeline Hollyer.

HAM YARD SOUP-KITCHEN.—The annual meeting of this old-established and useful charity was recently held. From the report we gather that during the past twelve months 220,354 meals were given to the destitute and distressed, 4662 nights' lodgings with meals were afforded to homeless men in the Hospice. Over 1000 Christmas dinners were distributed to poor families on Christmas Eve. In addition to this, nearly 100 tons of coals were supplied gratuitously to the poor of the Metropolis. Relief is not given indiscriminately and by single meals only; 2777 families were registered and provided for during a period not exceeding a month at a time. Another important feature is the provision of penny dinners for sandwichmen and others of that class.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Situation surveyed, Defects disclosed, and the Church recalled to her Lord's Instructions.

XVII.—Christ's Instructions for his Missionaries:

THE PERPETUAL OBLIGATION.—OBJECTIONS MET.

THE first objection to the claim that these instructions are of ceaseless application lies near at hand and is easily met. It is the fact that CHRIST, WHEN HE GAVE THEM TO HIS DISCIPLES, BADE THEM RESTRICT THEIR FIRST JOURNEY TO THE CONFINES OF ISRAEL AND NOT GO INTO THE WAY OF THE GENTILES. Therefore, says the superficial reader, the instructions were limited to that journey. We have already shown that they bear within their bosom that which makes it impossible so to narrow them. But, that our position as to their perpetuity may be bulwarked in every possible way, we will fully meet this point, which is a real difficulty with some.

This objection grows out of a feature which this missionary code has in common with almost if not all of Christ's teachings. They were called forth by the exigencies of the moment, and wore the drapery of the hour that gave them birth. The Lord Jesus, with that wisdom which was from above, was ever intent upon making tributary to the cause of eternal and unchangeable truth the changing events in the kaleidoscope of ordinary occurrence. Therefore He seized upon something that the scene before the eyes of the people afforded, which formed the text or pointed the theme from which He spake. Now it was the sower scattering the seed; again, it is the appeal of one who would have his brother divide the inheritance with him; again, it is the unseemly disputes among the disciples for pre-eminence; and again, the vine-clad hillside, with the smouldering fires that have consumed the fruitless branches, yield the suggestion for immortal discourse.

That most full and comprehensive of all his utterances, the Sermon on the Mount, was spoken largely to meet Jewish errors. It was this characteristic that gave his teaching such a charm in the eyes of the people. It wore a garb and throbbed with a life familiar to them. But it did not, for that reason, expire with the occasion that produced it, but is authoritative still. So it was with this law for missionary operations. It was not given as an abstract code, such as a newly formed state might enact for supposed contingencies. That was not Christ's method. But He took an opportunity which the needs of the hour supplied to announce this constitution of the missionary estate. The fields were white and the labourers few. The time had come for the disciples to put in practice the long-witnessed object-lessons they had in his ministry. But He would add the weight of formulated command to the force of the example of his own missionary methods. In doing it He would, as was his wont, legislate for all time. He has in his eye their life-work, which would begin, in its fullest sense, at Pentecost. He thinks and speaks of the Gentiles to whom they would ultimately carry the glad tidings.

But the time had not yet come for the tide of God's salvation, which was of the Jews, to overflow its ancient banks. His own earthly ministry was confined to Israel, and so necessarily was that of the Apostles before his death. Therefore He told them that for the present they were not to go in any way of the Gentiles. His spiritual athletes are but in training. These, his spiritual vessels, are indeed destined soon to bear a precious freightage to distant shores; but this is only their trial trip. Therefore He necessarily fixes the limit of their journey and provides for their return. When events should be fully ripe for their going forth from his personal presence, no more to return on earth, they would be sent with the enlarged commission, but with no further instructions, for they had all been given, but only with the added assurance that He was with them alway, even unto the end. How unreasonable and superficial, then, this objection.

It is the manner of the prophetic Scriptures—and these instructions deal largely in prediction—to put before the mind a primary and provisional and then a full and final fulfilment. This principle is discerned in Isaiah's prophecy that the Virgin should conceive and bear a son. Study it in the seventh chapter, and see how interwoven are the allusions to the son of the prophetess, brought forth as an earnest of the final and full accomplishment, and the Son of Mary, who was to redeem his people. So in the Messianic psalms, one can scarcely disentangle the threads of prophecy which speak of David and those which foretell the glory of Him whom David foreshadowed. So too, Joel's prophecy had but partial though glorious accomplishment on the day of Pentecost. Its full splendours are yet to break upon the sons of men. (Oh that now the Church may know the day of her visitation, and obey these instructions for her missionaries, that the bright predictions of Joel may speedily come to pass, and the locust-eaten years since Pentecost be restored!)

This same double application is also true of much of the teaching of Christ, and has led to that error to which we have already alluded, by which large portions are claimed to apply exclusively to Israel. If this same double meaning had been discerned in the Apocalypse, the heated controversy between the historical and futurist schools would have given place to that wise moderation of interpretation that would have found that both were largely right. So also when the Spirit says to Timothy, "Know this, that in the last days perilous times shall come," He speaks also much more to us. And so, too, Paul instructs Titus what he is to do in Crete; but it is rightly taken to instruct all bishops for all time. So with all the Epistles. "His commandment is exceeding broad."

This same principle applies to Matt. x. It was intended for all time, and yet it had an immediate application to that specific journey. As in other Scriptures we have mentioned, it contained a clause or two which could not apply to the future, but the greater part of its text cannot be brought within the confines of that single trip of the Apostles. Therefore, we may claim that the existence of these limiting phrases, instead of throwing doubt upon the perpetuity of this document, rather gives it a provisional and sample fulfilment, which was the earnest to the disciples, and is also to us, of the certainty of its continuous fulfilment, so long as obedience took on its conditions and robed itself in the character it presents.

If anything be yet needed to show the weakness of this objection we have examined, let it be considered that in the parallel passages in both Mark and Luke, and in the instructions to the seventy, these limiting clauses are omitted.

We come now to deal with another objection. It is THE WORD OF THE LORD JESUS RECORDED IN LUKE XXII., and is as follows:—"And He said unto them, When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye any thing? And they said, Nothing. Then said He unto them, But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip: and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one. For I say unto you, that this that is written must yet be accomplished in Me, And He was reckoned among the transgressors: for the things concerning Me have an end. And they said, Lord, behold, here are two swords. And He said unto them, It is enough." Here, some would say, Christ repealed his direction to go purseless and scripless. It is true He said, "If you have purse or scrip take it, and take also a sword. Sell your garment to secure a sword." Did Christ then mean that ever thereafter they must take purse, scrip, and sword? But throughout the Acts we find them taking neither purse, nor scrip, nor sword. Therefore either they were disobedient, or we must look for another interpretation than one which would overthrow the missionary constitution.

Again, if the words of Christ are here to be taken literally and as applying to all time, then, as the sword was the most emphasised, the Crusaders must have been right in seeking to spread the Gospel thereby. It cannot be taken in part and rejected in part. A crusade of steel is then the order of the dispensation. But this all spiritual people know is not the meaning. Therefore we see that this scripture in Luke xxii. cannot rightly be used against the missionary code, for if it prove anything it proves too much, and not only arms the proclaimers of faith with gold and temporal supplies but also with carnal weapons. This fully silences the objection, and here we might leave it; but again, that no doubt may remain, we will briefly expound the true meaning of these remarkable utterances of our Lord, and it will be seen that the full understanding of them not only does not weaken our position, but contributes with peculiar force to its stability.

Why then did the Lord warn them to take purse, scrip, and a sword? The reason is given in the context, included in the quotation we have made. "For," added Christ, "I say unto you, that this that is written must yet be accomplished in Me, And He was reckoned among the transgressors: for the things concerning Me have an end." He had been their Provider and Protector. He had stood them instead of reputation, material supplies, safe-conducts, and the patronage of the great. He fixes their minds upon this by asking them if, when they went forth at his command, they lacked aught. "Nothing," they replied. But now He informs them a temporary change impends. It is the hour and power of darkness. The central conflict of all ages is upon Him. He goes now to grapple with the awful sin question. He is to be numbered among transgressors, He tells them; and the things concerning Him have an end. The Father was about to smite the Shepherd, and the sheep, it was as plainly foretold, would be scattered.

When Jehovah was the smiter of the Shepherd and the scatterer of the flock, and permitted the One to whose care He had intrusted the sheep to be counted a transgressor, is it surprising that Christ should forewarn them that a short but dark interval in His power to provide for and protect them had come? Is it surprising that no mighty one stands pledged to see that they have food and raiment while the awful question of the eternal weal or woe of their souls trembles in the scale? Christ also foresaw that they would be stumbled and their faith in Him well nigh fail. They would themselves forsake their spiritual covert. In view of all this, the Lord said to them in effect: "I cannot now care for you as heretofore. The redemption of your souls is the supreme question at this time. Therefore look out for yourselves, and betake yourselves to your natural resources, as you did before I called you from your nets and boats. But it will not be for long. A little while and ye shall not see Me: and again a little while and ye shall see Me, because I go to my Father. I am about to be crucified through weakness. Ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice; and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy. The conflict will be sharp but short. I will, after my death and resurrection, see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man shall again take from you. It shall never again be interrupted as now."

Thus Christ, on the background of this dark episode of his temporary absence, would bring out by contrast the bright colours of his past and future care for them. After this temporary eclipse, the sun would seem to shine more gloriously. Thus, too, He would impress them and us with the stupendous character of that herculean burden which He bore—the double burden of our Alpine sins and our Himalayan sorrows.

The Lord reminded them in the context in Luke xxii. that they had continued with Him in his temptations. They were to drink of his cup and be baptized with his baptism. Now He was entering into the deepest sorrow of all. Therefore it seemed but meet and fit that they should have fellowship with Him at this time of supreme anguish, unintelligent and unwilling though that fellowship was; that, while the Father's face was being hidden from Him because sin was on Him, they, whose sin it was, should taste what was the loss of that Father's care in at least temporal things. Thus the shadows of the cave of Adullam fell upon not only the true David, but likewise upon his "mighty men" who were to take the kingdom with Him.

But why did the Lord bid them take a sword? Just before, we are told, they were striving as to which should be greatest in that kingdom which they thought was to be a carnal one and sustained by carnal weapons. Christ rebukes this unseemly strife, and points them to the path of humility, and assures them that they shall yet sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. He then warns them of Satan's temptations that were just before them, and of how Peter would that night deny Him. But they all assured Him that they would die with Him before they would deny Him. Their pride, self-confidence, and high thoughts of power and of a carnal kingdom were uncorrected. Therefore Christ bade them take swords. But that He did not mean them actually to use them is apparent, for when Peter asked, as the mob soon after closed around them, "Lord, shall we smite with the sword?" and did so without waiting for an answer, Christ healed the wounded ear, and said: "Suffer ye thus far. Put up again thy sword into its place; for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword."

Therefore it becomes clear that the literal use of the sword was not commanded, but prohibited. Hence we gather that his command to take the sword was a figurative way of telling them that in this interval of his absence they must betake themselves to the ordinary human measures of self-preservation, and look for no supernatural intervention in their behalf; and also, by exhibiting the helplessness of the sword to defend Him in the garden, or to fortify their courage so that they might stand by Him in the hour of his trial, He would instruct them, in this striking and figurative way, that all carnal weapons and measures were useless in that spiritual realm in which only his kingdom at present consisted. So He would bring out into bolder relief their weakness in the direction of being leaders to uphold Him in the earthly kingdom they wished Him to take.

But how cheering now to glance away from this to a post-resurrection scene. The disciples had, in accordance with Christ's word, betaken themselves to their old vocation of fishing. They had toiled all night and had caught nothing. In the early morning Jesus stood on the shore, and so directed them that they took a multitude of great fish, symbolical of the vast success that was to attend their fishing for men. When they were come to land they saw a fire of coals and fish laid thereon, and bread. Jesus said: "Come and dine," and He took bread and gave them, and fish likewise. How beautiful to faith is this picture! Here the Lord took again, as of old, the place of their Provider, which the exigencies of accomplishing their redemption necessitated his laying temporarily aside. He bids them feed his sheep, having said in effect: I will feed you. The language of Christ's action in this morning scene is briefly this:—I am with you to give you great success as fishers of men, and also to feed you with material bread. I assume again, as of old, the responsibility of giving you both heavenly power and earthly supplies.

With all this in our eye, we may read with new meaning the great commission given a day or two thereafter:—"All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore and teach all nations; . . and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." We may paraphrase it thus:—"That power in which I sent you forth to preach and heal, that power in which I provided for and protected you, was indeed suspended by my death and burial; but now all power is forever mine. Fear not to go forth as of old in my name. All earthly power is mine, which avails you for earthly supplies; all heavenly power is mine, which avails you for heavenly supplies. Do not fear another break, for I am with you now, even unto the end of the age." Thus Matthew's Gospel ends, while the last words of Mark reveal to us the disciples going forth as of old, the Lord working with them and confirming the word with the old familiar signs following.

XXII.—THE BLOOD OF CHRIST.

Hebrews ix.

Round and round this ancient window into the past is bound the red cord of blood. Twelve times at the very least does this solemn, this awful, word occur. The devil himself seems to admit that it is invested with some mystic potency; else why should he compel his miserable followers to interlard each phrase they utter by some reference to it. Man cannot look on, or speak of, blood without an involuntary solemnity, unless, indeed, he has done despite to some of the deepest instincts of his being, or through familiarity has learnt contempt. And we feel, whilst reading this chapter, as if we have come into the very heart of the deepest of all mysteries, the most solemn of all solemnities, the most awful of all tragedies, or martyrdoms, or sacrificial rites. Take off the shoes from off your feet, for the place on which we stand together now is holy ground.

Blood is becoming increasingly recognised as one of the most important constituents of the human body. Scientific and other research is more and more inclined to verify the ancient sayings, which may have been spoken in the colleges of Egypt, where Moses learned the most advanced science of his time, before ever they were stamped with the imprimatur of inspiration, "the blood is the life"; "the life of the flesh is in the blood" (Deut. xii. 23; Lev. xvii. 11). We know that the red corpuscles of the blood play an important function in carrying the oxygen of the air to consume the decaying tissues, and to light fires in every part of the human frame. But who can tell all the mysterious functions of the numberless colourless discs which float along the currents of the blood, and which may be intimately connected with the very essence of our vitality? Certain it is that impoverished blood means decrepit life; tainted blood means corruption and disease; ebbing blood means waning life. The first effort of the physician is to feel the pulse of the blood; whilst the most fatal disease is the poisoning of the blood. Blood is life. Life is blood. And shed blood is life poured forth from its source and fountain-head.

There is nothing, therefore, in man more precious than blood. If he gives that, he gives the best he has to give. His blood is his life—his all; and it is a noble act when a man is ready to make this supreme gift for others. It is this which lights up the devilry of war, and sheds a transient gleam of nobility on the coarsest, roughest soldiery, that they are prepared to sacrifice their lives in torrents of blood, to beat the foeman back from hearth and home and fatherland. This is why women have treasured up handkerchiefs dipped in the blood that has flowed on the headsman's block from the veins of martyrs for liberty or religion. This is why men point without a shudder to the stains of blood on blades that have been drawn in freedom's holy cause, or on tattered banners which led the fight against the battalions of Paganism or Popery. This is why the historian of the Church does not feel too dainty to make frequent reference to the blood which flowed in rivers on the eve of the Sicilian Vespers, and on the day of black St. Bartholomew. No, we glory in the blood which noble men have poured out as water on the ground. None of us too squeamish or sensitive to dwell with relish on the phrase.

Why, then, should we hesitate to speak of the blood of Christ? It was royal blood. "His own" (12), and He was a King indeed. It was voluntarily shed. "He offered Himself" (14). It was pure, "Innocent blood," "Without spot" (14). It was sacrificial. He died not as a martyr, but as a Saviour (26). It flowed from his head, thorn-girt, that it might atone for sins of thought; from his hands and feet, fast nailed, that it might expiate sins of deed and walk; from his side, that it might wipe out the sins of our affections, as well as tell us of his deep and fervent love, which could not be confined within the four chambers of his heart, but must find vent in falling on the earth. Why should we be ashamed of the Blood of Christ? No other phrase will so readily or sufficiently gather up all the complex thoughts which mingle in the death of Christ. Life; life shed; life shed violently; life shed violently, and as a sacrifice; life passing forth by violence, and sacrificially, to become a tide of which we must also all stoop down and drink, if we desire to have life in ourselves (John vi. 53—56).

"This is He that came by water and blood, not by water only, but by water and blood" (1 John v. 6). Oh, precious words, recalling that never-to-be-forgotten incident, when, following the rugged point of the soldier's spear, there came out blood and water from the Saviour's broken heart (John xix. 34). Had it been water only, we had been undone. Water might do for respectable sinners, 50-pence debtors, Pharisees, who are not sinners as other men. But some of us feel water would be of no avail at all. Our sins are so deep-dyed, so inveterate, so fast, that nothing but blood could set us free. Blood must atone for us. Blood must buy us. Blood must cleanse us. Blood must be poured into bloodless or corruptly-blooded veins. Blood must be rubbed in, so to speak, to the very texture and fibre of our moral being, to stay the spread of the contagion, to arrest the poison, to cancel the plague. In other words, life must be shed to redeem us, and life must be poured from the very being of the Son of God into our exhausted and lifeless souls, as the river of prophetic vision swept into the sea of death, with tides that healed marshes and salt plains, and carried life and fertility everywhere.

But there is a deep sense in which that blood is flowing, washing, cleansing, and feeding souls, all down the age. Like the stream of the desert, it follows us. "It speaketh," pleading with God for man, and with man for God (xii. 24). "It cleanseth," not as a single past act, but as a perpetual experience in the believer's soul, removing recent sin, and checking the uprisings of our evil nature (1 John i. 7). It is the drink of all devout souls, and its perennial presence and efficacy is well symbolised by the appearance still on the communion tables of the Church of the wine, which tells the worshipper that the blood of Calvary, once shed, and never to be shed again, is as fresh and efficacious as ever, or as the wine poured freshly into the cup. Let men say what they will, the shedding of the blood of Christ is an embodiment of an eternal fact in the Being of God, and is an essential condition of the healthy life of man.

(1) It purges the defiled conscience as completely as the ashes of the heifer purged the flesh of the ceremonially unclean (14). Why, then, do you carry about the perpetual consciousness of sin? Confess sin instantly, or ever you are aware of it. Claim the blood of sprinkling, and go at once to serve the living God.

(2) It puts away the sins of previous dispensations.—It was in virtue of the death to be offered on Calvary that the holy God was able to forgive the offences and accept the imperfect services of Old Testament saints. The shadow of the cross fell backward, as forward. And it is because of what Jesus did that all have been saved, who have passed within the pearly gate, or shall pass it (15, and compare Rom. iv. 25).

(3) It ratifies the covenant.—No covenant was ratified in the old time, except in blood. When God entered into covenant with Abraham, five victims were divided in the midst, making a lane, down which the fire-symbol of the Divine presence passed. "There is of necessity the death of the covenant maker." And, in pursuance of this ancient custom, the first covenant was solemnly sealed by blood (18, 19). How sure and steadfast must that covenant be into which God has entered with our Surety on our behalf. The blood of Jesus is an asseveration which cannot be gainsayed or transgressed. All God's will is opened to us since Jesus died. We may claim what we like. We are his heirs, the heirs of the wealth of our Elder Brother, Jesus.

(4) It opens the way into the holiest.—What the High Priest did every year in miniature, Christ has done once (24, 25, 26). "He died unto sin once." By virtue of his own shed blood, He went once for all into the real holiest place, appearing in the presence of God for us as our High Priest, and leaving the way for ever open to those who dare to follow. "The heavenly things themselves" need cleansing, not because of any intrinsic evil in themselves, but because they are constantly being used and trodden by sinful men. Now, however, though that is so, there is an efficacy in the work of Jesus which is always countervailing our impurity, and making it possible for us to draw near to God with boldness and acceptance.

(5) It put away sin.—"Once for all." "Once in the end of the world." Not for each dispensation, but for all dispensations. Not for one age, but for all ages. Not for a few, but for the "many," comprehending the vastness of the number which no man can compute of the great family of man. As the year's sin of a nation was borne away into the desert by the scapegoat, and put away, so was the whole sin of the race centred on the head of Jesus. He was made sin. As a physician might be imagined drawing on to himself all the maladies of his patients, so did Jesus draw to Himself and assume all the sins of mankind. He was the propitiation for the sins of the whole world. And when He died, He dropped sin as a stone into the depths of oblivion. And He put away sin. The Greek word is very strong: annihilated, made nothing of, made as though it had never been. Sin, in the mind and purpose of God, is as entirely done away as a debt when it is paid. Hallelujah! in heaven and on earth (Rev. v. 9, i. 5). But whilst this is an eterna truth with Him who knows not our distinctions of time, yet it will avail only as a fact when each individual sinner lays claim to this wonderful provision, confesses his sin, and realises that there is now no longer condemnation, because the Lamb of God has borne away his sin and the world's. Will you now dare to reckon this to be true for you, not because you feel it, but because God says it? Dare to repeat 1 Pet. ii. 24, and Isa. liii. 5, substituting "my" for "our."

What marvellous appearances are these three! He appeared once in the end of the world as a Sacrifice. He appears now in heaven as a Priest. He will appear the second time without sin unto salvation, as of old the high priest, at the close of the day of atonement, came out with outstretched hands to bless the people. Oh, to be looking for Him, that we may not miss the radiant vision or the tender blessing of peace.

Author of "From Death into Life. An Autobiography."

III.—THE OLD GENERAL.

Upon one occasion I observed a fine-looking military man, though he wore no uniform; but his carriage and bearing betokened his calling plainly enough. He was marching out of church, as cool as probably he was on the battle-field.

"Who was that fine-looking man?" I enquired afterwards.

"He is General ——, from India," replied my friend, with a smile.

"Why do you smile?" I asked.

My friend answered, "Why, you admire him more than he does you. He was asking me who in the world you were, and remarked, that he came to church to hear about Christ, but that you seemed to know and talk more about the devil. He says he has heard enough from you, and will wait until you are gone before he comes to church again. I expect you have hit him rather hard."

"I hope so," I said. "'He that winneth souls is wise.' I was led to expose a few of the devices of the devil this morning, that some of my hearers might be made aware of him. 'Surely in vain the net is spread in the sight of any bird.'"

However, to my relief, in the evening I saw the same erect figure striding into church, and to my great pleasure as well as surprise, he remained to the after-meeting.

As soon as I had given instruction collectively to those who remained behind from the first congregation, I went down to speak to individuals who were still waiting. As the General did not move from his place I took him in his turn. When I came up to him I asked the usual question, "Are you saved? or can I do anything to help you?"

"Why, sir," he answered, "I have been a champion for the truth for years, but you make out that I am only standing outside the door, and looking through—what is more than that, you say the devil is sure to have me."

Inwardly thanking God, I sat down by his side, and asked him the question, "What makes you think you are outside and not inside the door?"

"Sir," he replied, "I never in my life thought or even heard of such a thing as crossing the threshold. You say there is a wall, and that all those inside that wall are saved. How are we to know who is inside?"

I replied, "When you are outside you knock and pray for admission. When you are inside you do not do that, but thankfully accept your position as safe."

"Then you mean to say that if I am knocking for admission I am still in the enemy's power and entangled in his net?"

I hesitated a moment, for I wanted to say, that God had opened his eyes to see things so clearly, that I was sure he was not far from the kingdom.

Observing my hesitation, the General said, "I see you do not mean the same thing out of the pulpit that you so bravely preach while you are in it. Some of you people, when they are up in 'Coward's Castle,' utter things you are afraid to say to our faces. Do you mean me to understand that you are saved, and that you have crossed the threshold yourself?"

I replied, "Yes, I do indeed mean to say that, and I do mean out of the pulpit every word that I declare in it. More than that, I know by experience about those nets of the devil, and I also know how the Lord can and does deliver from them."

"Then," said the General, "you are my man. Let me talk freely with you."

I said, "I am under promise to speak to two or three persons who are now waiting. Will you let me go to them first? In the meantime, please think over some definite questions or points for consideration."

When I returned to him he said, "I am obliged to go away now. Besides, I have more questions to ask than I care to detain you with to-night. But will you call upon me in the morning?"

I willingly agreed to do this, but before parting I said, "I cannot help telling you that there is only one step between you and salvation, and no one can take that step for you, you must take it for yourself. Do it like a man to-night, and we will go into your difficulties, please God, to-morrow morning, if needful. Now just a short prayer before you go." The General knelt down, and I did the same. He was greatly moved during my prayer, and then rising from his knees, thanked me with much emotion, exclaiming, "God bless you!"

"Yes," I said, "thank you, and may He bless me to your soul's good."

The gallant man turned away his face, but he pressed my hand. Having given me his card, he went away.

The next morning I called, according to promise, punctually at ten o'clock.

"Come in," said the General, "I like punctuality." He looked so much brighter than the previous evening that I was not surprised when he said, "I have taken the one step which you said no one else could take for me. Now, instead of asking, I am thanking; I am inside the wall. I thank God and you too."

What a marvellous change twenty-four hours had made in that man! He said to me, "I used to be a thoughtless worldly man in India, but when the cholera broke out with great virulence, and I saw strong men seized in the morning and dead at night, I was moved with fear. It was awful, I can tell you, and dreadful to see the way in which they died. It made me think and pray as well. I then and there determined to live a better life, and that I have ever since persevered in doing to the best of my ability. I commenced at once reading religious books, and was amazed to find how ignorant I was, and how much there was to be said and written upon these subjects.

"I soon became aware that I was a marked man, and that my fellow-officers meant me when they pointed fun at religious people—'the psalm-singing lot.' These men were not so bold during the cholera time, I assure you. I told them this, and told them also that I was not ashamed of being a Christian. I was enabled not only to stand against them and their fun, but was compelled to be aggressive. The more I read the Bible, the better I understood the way of salvation, or at least I thought so. I used to talk freely of what I saw in God's Word, and what I knew to be true. I suppose this is what you call looking through the door which was made for me to go through.

"When you described 'doing your best' as a denial of the finished work of Christ who has done all, that was a severe blow to me; and when you added, 'That is one of the devil's nets by which people are kept outside the door of salvation,' I was astonished beyond measure; though, to tell the truth, I had not been satisfied with my work. I felt all along that there was something wanting, though I was accounted such a saint. I wished to feel more than I did, and to realise what I stood up for."

I said, "Now you understand how this waiting to feel is another of the devil's nets. How can you feel saved until you are saved—or feel inside the door until you are there?"

"I pacified my mind," said the General, "by hoping that all would come right somehow or sometime."

"This hoping to be saved is also one of the devil's nets. People do not hope for a thing they have."

"Yes," said the General, "I understand it now; but I must confess I was immensely disgusted with you when you said that this kind of hope was the devil's hope."

I said, "Satan uses such devices as these for keeping back souls whom the Holy Spirit has made anxious and brought even to the door of salvation."

"I cannot tell," said the General, "how I reached home after that morning discourse of yours, it upset me so thoroughly. I found some relief in abusing you and saying I would never hear you again."

"I am obliged to you, General," I said, "for this insight into the other side. I see and feel my side of the story, and often wonder what people can be made of who remain so cool and untouched by God's word. I am encouraged by what you tell me to hope that more good is done by the preaching of the truth than we are aware of at the time. I observed you marching out of church, and must confess the thought crossed my mind: 'That fine man has not felt very much,' whereas it appears that you were riddled through and through with the shots of Divine truth.

"Now, dear friend, let me advise you to make a note of these thoughts and experiences of yours. You will meet with many who are looking through the door, who are doing their best, who are waiting to feel, and who are hoping they shall be saved sometime; and you will know how to deal with such. Remember the whole world is outside the door of salvation until they step over the threshold to enter inside. Never trifle with souls. It is far better to say that a saint is not saved, than to say a sinner is. You can do no harm to the former, and may flatter the other into hell. This is what the devil is ever doing with saints and sinners."

The General became an out-and-out Christian soldier. Among his other badges of honour he had this degree to his name—O.A.O. (Out and Out). Moreover, he was happy in his home besides, for his wife, son, and daughter were all on the Lord's side. A man cannot work happily abroad, if those at home are not in sympathy with him.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK is being pushed forward with commendable diligence in Paris. The Sunday-school Society of France has arranged a series of Wednesday evening conferences for the discussion of practical questions. M. Theodore Monod delivered a helpful address at the first meeting held recently.

Pilgrims Toward Plymouth.*

This is a sequel to "Perfectionism, the False, and the True," and contains further strictures upon the work and teaching of the "Faith Mission." Its smart sarcasms make it attractive reading to those who have no interest in the important issues involved in this controversy, but are likely to lessen its effectiveness for good. Controversy in defence of the truth becomes at times unavoidable; but to possess and manifest the spirit of love in controversy is necessary in order to win our opponent; the battle is gained when he himself is gained—not otherwise. It is possible to excite admiration and applause for the manner in which we defeat our opponent, rather than sympathy for the truth we defend. No doubt this is far from Mr. Salmond's intention, and he may rightly conclude that some of the assumptions of the Faith Pilgrims are deserving of sarcasm, but we doubt whether this method will help those for whose benefit his pamphlet is written.

Not only the tone, but the matter of this pamphlet is open to criticism. Mr. Salmond quotes in full, a letter by Dr. Elder, and describes it as "an admirable letter," in which the ideal of Christian life is as faulty in one direction as that of the Faith Pilgrims in another. For example, we see no reason for contesting Mr. Govan's statement "that every Christian to-day should have a definite baptism, or filling of the Holy Ghost, as they had at Pentecost." Yet this letter describes this as "neither Scriptural nor consistent with facts," and enforces this by the reference in Scripture to "Babes in Christ," "Young Men," and "Fathers." Further, this letter complains of "confusion and misunderstanding" in the following quotations. Mr. Govan says: "The promises were due when Christ went up to heaven"; "we have alongside the promises of God, his commands"; "He does not give us commands that He is not willing to give us power to obey." Are these words wide of the truth? So Mr. Salmond, adopting Dr. Elder's letter, seems to say: "Surely what Scripture teaches, and the experience of his people in every age confirms, is that He reserves to Himself in his infinite wisdom to choose the times and ways in which He will fulfil his gracious promises." We do not like this quotation so well as the statement of Mr. Govan which it seeks to correct. It seems to us to be an apparently successful cover for present disobedience and failure. We think Mr. Salmond's own teaching would have been less open to criticism than this of Dr. Elder, which he quotes with such approval.

The title of this pamphlet is unfortunate, and contains a somewhat contemptuous reference to a people who are certainly not without a claim upon the gratitude of the churches of Christ. Whatever may be the faults of the Brethren, it is certain that they have had no small share in teaching clearly, and enforcing faithfully, many truths of Scripture, to which other sections of the Church have not given sufficient heed. It is a pity that Mr. Salmond should have chosen a title that must of necessity array against him many intelligent students of the Divine Word. But, on the other hand, it is also a pity if the Pilgrims have so conducted their work as to convey the impression that, as one minister who has observed their work, says, "they seek early co-operation with the churches only in order to ultimate separation." This is a serious charge, and Mr. Salmond seems so sure of its truthfulness that he says, "The Faith Mission movement, besides striking on the rock of false teaching, has been run into the shallows of Unsectarian Sectarianism, towards which, indeed, from the first it has been studiously guided." (The italics are ours.) Whether the Pilgrims attempt to defend themselves against this charge or not, they will surely see that they need to avoid such methods and such references to churches and to the ministry as have helped to give rise to this impression.

We sincerely hope that good will result from this controversy. There is something to be yielded on both sides. While we regret that in this pamphlet, Mr. Salmond does not speak in language calculated to win his opponents, we are equally convinced that the Faith Pilgrims have mingled with their teaching doubtful doctrines which must prove injurious to their hearers, and therefore injurious to their movement. Is it too much to hope that they will receive counsel given in the spirit of Christian love?

Dr. Saphir on the Old Testament.

Dr. Saphir's address on Thursday morning, last week, in St. John's Presbyterian Church, Allen-street, Kensington, was devoted to the supernatural and miraculous character of Bible history. There was a large audience. In the course of the preliminary exercises, Dr. Saphir read from the books of Daniel and Ezra the wonderful testimonies of Nebuchadnezzar, Darius, and Cyrus, to Jehovah as the true God.

At the outset of his address, Dr. Saphir showed that the reason the human intellect is not able to receive the Bible is, not because there is any lack of evidence as to its perfect truthfulness and accuracy, but because the history is of a supernatural and miraculous character. God and the things which refer to his eternal and spiritual kingdom are so interwoven in Scripture history, that without the light and power of the Holy Ghost man is unable to accept it. Therefore, the history is an object of faith as well as credence, and faith is the gift of God. Alluding to the relation of the Bible to science, the speaker said that there is no collision at all, so long as science keeps within its proper limits. Atheists and pantheists cannot logically accept the possibility of a miracle, but persons who believe that there is a God who is living, full of wisdom and power and love, can find no difficulty in accepting the testimony which shows that God reveals Himself by acts upon earth, and within the history of mankind. As to the laws of nature, we who believe in God do not conceive of them as limits to his power and liberty. He who made the laws—for laws pre-suppose a lawgiver—uses them as his servants, and in and above them asserts his own power and wisdom.

Speaking of Bible history as a development of the purpose of God, who saw the end from the beginning, Dr. Saphir maintained that, concerning salvation and glory, the supernatural and miraculous was quite to be expected. Before the execution of the work of creation, there was in the depths of the Deity an idea of the new heavens and the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, and the new creation in Christ Jesus. Without Christ the history would never have taken place; without Christ it would have had no end, no purpose. In this light the miraculous element of Scripture is seen to be full of wisdom and consistency. For great reasons and purposes, God acts upon earth apart from the laws of Nature. This is miracle. The miracles of the Bible are not isolated or unconnected, but links in a chain, and by them the history of God's work on earth is carried forward. They appear at important times and crises, when, according to the Divine wisdom, it is necessary for God to interfere.

Having described the supernatural as when God speaks, appears, or acts, and the miraculous as when, through the agency of his chosen servants, God breaks through the phenomena which we behold, and manifests his own presence and purpose, Dr. Saphir rapidly traced the chain of the supernatural in the Old Testament. He dwelt at length upon the many occurrences recorded in the Pentateuch, in the Book of Joshua, in the history of Elijah and Elisha, and of Daniel. Speaking of Jonah, he said: This book stands out for its vivid and graphic character. There is no reflection; everything is fact and picture. "God is not the God of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles." He sends the prophet to Nineveh! There are two miracles; one belongs to outward nature, and one to the inward kingdom. How great is the miracle of the conversion of the Ninevites! That great city, which contained millions of inhabitants, from the king on his throne down to the lowest of the people, repented, simply on hearing the message of a strange prophet, who was landed on their shore. The other miracle was that God prepared a monster of the sea to swallow up Jonah and preserve him three days, and afterwards bring him forth on the dry land. Impossible as this appears to some, there are many corroborative instances to be found in secular history, of great monsters of the sea, which are only able, either to swallow their prey entire, or to break it into pieces. But when we remember what God purposed by this history, when we see its sublime idea—the pity of God upon the Gentiles—and that God would afterwards, through Israel and Him of whom Jonah was a type, "command all men everywhere to repent," and return unto his love; when we remember how our blessed Saviour repeatedly referred to this very book in both its aspects, first as to his burial being typified by Jonah's experience in the sea monster, and secondly, as to the repentance of the Ninevites, who "shall stand up in judgment" against those who did not obey the voice of the "Greater than Jonah"—then we see the peculiar significance of the book, and regard its miracle as the manifestation of Him who is perfect wisdom and love.

Proceeding, the Doctor held that all that is supernatural and miraculous in the Old Testament has its explanation, its root, and its purpose in Christ Jesus. God spoke to Abraham and to Moses; He appeared unto Abraham and unto Moses; the glory of the Lord was seen between the cherubim in the holy of holies. That was supernatural, but it was all because, in the fulness of time, God APPEARED—was made manifest in the flesh—and we beheld his glory. The Shekinah tabernacled in Him who tabernacled and dwelt among us. And if God SPAKE, his ultimate and perfect message to mankind was given in Jesus. Coming to the miraculous in the Old Testament, we find God acting in many ways, healing the sick, forgiving sin, subduing the powers of nature, showing Himself stronger than Satan, whom He will vanquish, and as able to raise the dead. Jesus, in like manner, forgives sins, cleanses the leper, restores to the blind their sight, stills the storm, conquers devils, and raises the dead! If, in Old Testament times, God performed miracles by men who had faith, so also Jesus by faith did miracles with the finger of God. As is evident from the narrative of Lazarus, the miracles of Jesus proceeded from Him, both as the Son and as the servant of God.

Miracle must be viewed also in the light of the Present and of the Future. Everyone who is convinced of sin and brought to love the Lord Jesus Christ is a miracle. Is it not the Holy Ghost Himself who quickens? Is not the power put forth by Jesus Himself? Moreover, in the further development of his purpose as foreshadowed in prophecy, God will again make his power known in the world, and marvellous things will be seen. In conclusion, Dr. Saphir spoke on "miracle" rousing us to behold God in Nature and in Providence, and urged his hearers to take to heart the Lord's words, "Have faith in God."

"I THIRSTED STILL."

The following incident will show how God is longed for as the true source of happiness, even by the poor Hindoo. A missionary and his wife in India, itinerating among the villages connected with their station, passed a few days in the home of one of the catechists. A little room, a kind of "prophet's chamber," with a cot, a stool, and a lamp-stick, had been prepared for them. The missionary had gone on to another village, his wife remained behind. Having spent a somewhat tiring day, she was about to retire for the night, when an old man came to her, saying, "Salaam ma'am, I have many words to say to you; I have much to tell you, and I must tell you. Please allow Moses and his daughter to sit by while I speak to you."

So Moses and his daughter and the old man sat down on a mat, and the lady seated herself on the side of the cot to listen. The room was but dimly lighted by the tiny lamp fixed to the stick. As the old man went on with his story, a light not of the earth, seemed to fill the room.

"Salaam, ma'am, I am an old man. Grey hairs have long been on my head, and for many years I was a sorrowful man. I worshipped idols as my fathers and grandfathers had done; but I had no comfort, I wanted something more. I thirsted, oh, how I thirsted for something better than my idols could give. I went to a goaroo; I told him I wanted God—to see God. He told me to perform ceremonies, and repeat muntrums. I did this, but it was like digging in a dry well; not one drop of water came, and I thirsted still.

"I went to a Brahmin. He told me I must wash the Brahmin's feet, and drink the water, and perform many other abominable rites. I obeyed him; but, alas! without any effect, and I thirsted still.

"Then I was told to visit some holy places and take money and cloths to the priests, and they would show me their god. This I did, and many a weary mile I travelled, hungry and thirsty; but the hope of gaining what I wished helped me on, and, mile after mile, I journeyed. But this, too, was all in vain; 'I thirsted still.'

"In despair I came back to my own village, thinking it was of no use; I must give it up. But, oh! ma'am, God had mercy on my weary, thirsty soul. One day I met this man," pointing to Moses, "and he gave me a little book. I read in it these words (John iv. 14): 'Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst.' I read, I stopped, I asked, 'Who is this "I" that will give this water?' Oh, ma'am, I can never tell what I felt as I read these words again and again. I can say no more now." Here the dear man broke down, and, turning to Moses' daughter, said, "Child, sing."

She had a peculiarly sweet voice, and started a Telugu hymn on the loveliness of Christ. He soon joined in, his voice tremulous with emotion. We all sang. It was a small and humble choir; but the music was such as angels love to listen to. After we had sung, he began to speak again.

"Well, ma'am, I went to Moses and asked him what these words meant. He said it meant the well of salvation, opened by Jesus Christ. Oh! I said: 'Will He give me the water?' He said, 'Yes'; and I believed, and found it was quite true. Oh, lady, lady, how many wells I had dug in, but they were all dry. But this well of salvation through Jesus bubbles up and up. I feel it now," and again he began to sing. He said, "I have written some hymns about Jesus Christ. May I sing one of them?" This he did. Then he said, "Now I must confess Christ before the world, and be baptized in that precious name."

"Yes, father," said Moses; "but you know you will lose your caste then."

"Ay, my son, I know it, I know it, and my own sons will, perhaps, not allow me to live in my own house. But, never mind, I shall find a corner to live somewhere. Jesus will take care of me. The water will still spring up to everlasting life."

Midnight passed ere he finished the "many words" he had to say. The oil in the little lamp was well-nigh consumed, but still he lingered. He seemed as though he would never tire of talking of the love of Christ.

Some time after this he was baptized. Truly in losing his caste he lost his home. His sons turned him out of his house, but the catechist, Moses, took him in; as he said, he found "a corner to live in." He was so anxious to tell others of the "living water," that he used to travel from one village to another and sing Christian songs, telling of the love of Christ. When he grew blind and unable to guide himself, he paid a boy a small sum to guide him about and read the Scriptures to the people. After a while he fell ill. Moses nursed and cared for him till he passed away to see Him for whom his soul had thirsted; and now what draughts of joy will he drink from the "river of the water of life."

"HIS STAR."

"We have seen his star in the East and are come to worship Him.

Twinkle, twinkle little star,
How I wonder what you are;
Never name to thee was given,
As to other lights of heaven.

But I know you were "his star,"
Shining bright in heaven afar;
So that men might guided be,
And the Babe of Bethlehem see.

I too want to be Christ's star,
Shining for Him as you are;
Not to make my brightness seen,
But dark souls from earth to wean.

Twinkle, twinkle, little star,
Never ask I whose you are;
For did not the wise men say
'Twas his star that led the way.

Jesus make me too, thy star,
Shedding thine own light afar;
Guiding by my steadfast light,
Weary souls from out the night.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., March 24, Luke xv. 11—32; Mon., March 25, Luke xvi. 1—18; Tues., March 26, Luke xvi. 19—31; Wed., March 27, Luke xvii. 1—10; Thurs., March 28, Luke xvii. 11—25; Fri., March 29, Luke xvii. 26—37; Sat., March 30, Luke xviii. 1—17.

ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH, NEW KENT ROAD, S.E.—The special services for children held by Mr. Henry Hutchinson, of the Special Service Mission, from March 10 to 17, have (writes a correspondent) been greatly blessed. A mighty stream of grace from the throne of God has filled and overflowed the channels dug for it by prayer and faith. Very many dear children have been brought under conviction of sin, and have been deeply touched and drawn to Christ by the story of the Saviour's love and sacrifice. The joy of the teachers has been too great for words, as they have taken their scholars by the hand and heard them declare their decision for Christ.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. Josiah Spiers, Bishop's Stortford, March 8—20 Gospel Hall, Southgate-road, Wood Green, N., March 22—24, 8 p.m., for teachers and workers; and March 25 to April 5 (Sat. and Sun. excepted), for children, 7 p.m. Mr. H. Hutchinson, St. Silas, Birmingham, March 26; Wickhambrook, Suffolk, April 8—13; St. Bride's, Liverpool (with Rev. W. S. Standen), April 22—27. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Congregational Church, Romford, April 7—12; Doveridge, Uttoxeter, April 19—23. Mr. Martin J. Hall, St. James's Schools, Plumstead, March 16—20; St. Jude's Iron Room, Mildmay, March 30 to April 5; Southampton, April 5—8.

Tenth Anniversary of Children's Scripture Union, Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, Tuesday, April 2, 3 p.m. Rev. A. A. Stuart will preside, and Mrs. Evered Poole will give an address to workers; 6.30 p.m., Dr. H. Sinclair Paterson will preside.

EAST LONDON TABERNACLE.

Mr. Archibald G. Brown's record of work during 1888 is as interesting in its details as it is varied in character. Combined with his recently delivered discourse on "The Devil's Mission of Amusement," it orms a compact booklet, in which the man and his exertions are well epitomised and shown. A perusal of the pages on amusement leads those who are least acquainted with the work of the East London Tabernacle and its adjuncts to the inevitable conclusion that Mr. Brown's heart and soul are devoted to the attainment of the highest ends by the safest possible means. Coming to the "record of service," questions of matter and manner are once and for all defined and stated. The work is, first and foremost, soul-saving, and it is, moreover, continuous throughout the year. A third first principle of Mr. Brown's administration is, expenditure is regulated by income; like other similar operations, his depend, as to their extent, upon the funds which are placed at his disposal.

The room-to-room visitation by the missionaries, which Mr. Brown calls the "main trunk" rather than a branch of his work, continues. With unabated zeal and ever-increasing experience, the workers go their daily rounds. "There is no picking or choosing; the families are taken as they come. Many thousands of visits have been paid. The careless have been faithfully warned; the anxious tenderly helped into peace; the sad ones comforted; the sick prayed with; and the dying pointed to the Lamb of God so long as life lingered. The testimony has not been in vain in the Lord. Souls have been saved. The Church on earth has been increased. Heaven has been enriched.

Gracious words have been accompanied by kindly help where needed. This assistance took many forms during the year, affecting young and old alike. A new departure is recorded in the form of a little Girls' Home at Sheering, Essex, which is at the same time a centre of spiritual blessing in the village. With the present year, moreover, another effort began—a medical agency. Arrangements have been made with a local practitioner, who is also an earnest Christian, to prescribe and care for any cases that may be brought under notice. The poor will likewise highly appreciate other arrangements made for their welfare in connection with the Tabernacle. The seaside Home at Herne Bay had 250 weary inmates during the year, making just 1000 who have enjoyed its comfort and quiet since it was opened in the autumn of 1884.

The mission chapels are all doing a good work. Standing in the thick of squalid little streets, they are neither too large nor too grand. Earnest Gospel preaching is maintained in each, and many efforts are made by the workers to help the poor to help themselves. Mr. Brown is very cordial in acknowledging the co-operation of friends from all parts of the country, and, indeed, from different countries of the world. We trust that his many excellent undertakings will have God's blessing upon them during this year. Mr. Brown's address is 22, Bow-road, London, E.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH has been continuing her labours in Liberia; but, being run down in health, has now gone to the more civilised settlements of Sierra Leone, in search of the rest necessary to recruit. Wherever she goes meetings are arranged for her, and she is obliged to labour on. Suffering constantly from rheumatism, and often from fever, she claims our sympathy. Mrs. Thomas Davis, Foxrock, co. Dublin, Ireland, will gladly receive contributions for the next remittance to Mrs. Smith. She has now two adopted children to provide for as well as her own simple wants.

Missionary Meetings in Liverpool.

On Saturday last, Mr. Graham Wilmot Brooke and a companion, Mr. Ernest Shaw, sailed from Liverpool for their new post of labour on the Niger. The occasion was seized by some of the earnest friends of missions in Liverpool for the holding of two union missionary meetings on the previous day. The gatherings were designed to partake of the nature of a farewell and God-speed to Mr. Brooke and his friend; but they actually took a wider scope, and were well used to convey missionary facts as well as to deepen in the minds of the Christians present a sense of their overwhelming responsibility as to the heathen world. The idea of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and those who co-operate with him in this movement is that, if the churches could be led into the path of full consecration in life and service, the result would be seen in the self-dedication of many to the work of evangelising those parts of the world that still lie enshrouded in heathen darkness. To this point a good deal of the speaking was directed, especially the addresses of Rev. G. C. Grubb, Mr. G. Wilmot Brooke, and Mr. Gelson Gregson.

THE VOICES OF THE NATIONS.

The afternoon meeting was held in the large hall of the Strangers' Rest, Park-lane, where a very blessed work among sailors and emigrants of different nationalities is sustained. Mr. James E. Mathieson, of Mildmay (who had gone expressly from London), presided, and the interest awakened was so great that an overflow meeting had to be held. Mr. Mathieson read a portion of that very appropriate Scripture, Psa. lxvi., which begins by invoking all lands to make a joyful noise unto the Lord. His application of the words was most impressive. What, he asked are the sounds that we hear going up to God from China? They are the wail of infants left to die, and the anguished cry of women suicides. Another sound we should hear would be the groan of the many victims of the opium drug, were it not that the drug stupefies and silences as it drags its votaries down to speedy and certain death. Turn the listening ear to India; where is the joyful noise ascending from that land to the Lord? Do we not rather hear the pitiful and oft-repeated wail of the child widow, whose life is a living death? Yet English rule in India has had more than a century in which to show what it can do to staunch the sorrows of her people. From Africa, too, what sounds go up to God? Above them all there is the hideous wail of the tens of thousands done to death by the poison water sent from Christian Liverpool, London, Glasgow, Hamburg, or New York. Hear again the despairing cry of the slave who sinks beneath his burden, and whose bones lie bleaching on the jungle pathway, or who goes to a fate worse perhaps than death. Mr. Mathieson went on to mention the two previous attempts of Mr. Wilmot Brooke, to enter the Soudan, and of this third endeavour which is to be made by the way of the Niger. Shall not our prayers go with him, that the darkness of that vast region may be pierced and the light of the Gospel let in? In the Epistle to Philemon there is a beautiful expression, "Having confidence in thine obedience." Of how many of us who are professing Christians could the Master say with regard to the great work of missions, "I have confidence in thine obedience"? Why do our young people stay at home, with so many open doors for workers all the world over?

SOUTH AFRICA.

Mr. W. Spencer Walton remarked on the awful fact that in South Africa, as well as elsewhere, English civilisation has proved a greater curse than a blessing to the natives. The churches themselves have not been free from blame. It seems in South Africa as though everybody was anxious to plant his own little flower in his own special denominational flowerpot. Mr. Walton said he had received from a Ritualistic clergyman in Grahamstown a long letter trying to convince him of the folly of starting an unsectarian mission in South Africa. We fear the Ritualist has written in vain, for Mr. Walton says he is firmly convinced that if missions are to succeed there, sectarian boundaries must disappear. In this address he also entered a protest against diverting salvation work into educational lines. Education may be a good work, but the servant of Jesus must aim directly at reaching the hearts and consciences of the people, and not rest till they are brought to the cross of Christ. Mr. Walton described the proposed scope of the recently formed Cape General Mission, in connection with which he hopes to go to South Africa in August. It is desired to establish centres of missionary operation at Kimberley, Pretoria (or Johannesberg), and Barbertown. The little territory of Swaziland, near the Orange Free State, is without a single missionary, and it is hoped that something may be done for that people. The scourge of drink is a terrible one in South Africa. The traveller from Cape Town to Kimberley by rail may see a broken brandy bottle on an average every twenty-five yards. Brandy is 3d. a bottle, and a man can get drunk for a halfpenny. It is said that five hundred natives are picked up dead in Kimberley every year, slain through the drink. Mr. Walton closed his recital by exhorting all to give of their best to the Lord, going forward in his strength and leaving results to Him.

C.M.S. WORK ON THE NIGER.

As the representative of the Church Missionary Society, Rev. J. B. Whiting, of Ramsgate, said that Society greatly appreciated the fact that in his new endeavour Mr. Wilmot Brooke would work in harmony with their Mission on the Niger. He and his companion would be able to show the Europeans there the example of a real Christian life. It must be sorrowfully confessed that the ungodly lives of Englishmen are the greatest hindrance to the work of God in those regions. Thank God, many African merchants are now feeling their responsibility in the matter, and are becoming more careful in selecting their agents. It will be a grand day for missions when those who go to foreign lands in search of wealth will live the upright righteous lives that many of our business men do at home. We may be sure the native Christian workers on the Niger will receive a great blessing for themselves as well as in their work through the visit of Mr. Brooke and his companion. Mr. Whiting gave some interesting particulars as to the conformation of the vast country drained by the Niger, and the great opportunities it affords for missionary work. He said he did not believe in the popular outcry about the smallness of apparent results in comparison with missionary expenditure. How do we know what numbers are savingly converted? Let our prayer be, "Show thy servants thy work and their children thy glory." If we do the work committed to us and leave the results with God, future generations shall see the triumphs He has won.

The speaking at the afternoon gathering was closed by a very telling address from Rev. George C. Grubb on the "Fulness of the Spirit." It had no special bearing on foreign as apart from home mission work, but it was a singularly fresh and practical utterance; we hope to give notes of it in a succeeding issue. Mr. Brooke offered the concluding prayer. Many of the friends adjourned to an upper room, where tea was provided, and where some time was spent in pleasant social intercourse.

THE EVENING MEETING.

The evening meeting was in the Rotunda, the large auditorium of which was well filled with interested listeners. A number of local and other ministers and Christian workers were on the platform. In opening the proceedings, Mr. J. E. Mathieson read a part of Psa. cxv. He said that the words, "Not unto us, O Lord," might afford some explanation of the poverty of blessing at home and the smallness of the ingathering abroad. Men have been taking to themselves the glory, instead of giving it to God alone; so the showers have been stayed; the heavens have been as brass, and the ground as iron. Thirty years ago God poured out on this land a remarkable time of spiritual blessing, and many were set at liberty for service. We want to see these mighty works repeated. If we have blessing at home we may expect to see it abroad. We have been building fine churches and chapels, and "restoring" cathedrals at enormous expense, but there has been no corresponding blessing. It has been stayed because we have been so selfish. The Jews were not punished and dispersed as a people so much for their rejection of Jesus Christ as for their refusal to extend the knowledge of the Saviour to the Gentile nations around. We in England are a highly favoured people, as highly favoured, we are disposed to think, as was the Jewish nation; but we have been exceedingly slow in discharging our responsibility to send the Gospel message to other lands. Of late we have been having our eyes opened to these things, and it is satisfactory to know that the great missionary societies are revising their methods. They are being prepared now to take workers into their ranks who have not gone through a long course of college education. There are not a few now going forth to the mission field like Mr. Wilmot Brooke, without any human ordination, but plainly anointed of God to this work. The love of money, alas, has crept into the modern Church with all its blighting, deadening influence. This is why the professing Church of Christ is so deaf and dumb and lame and impotent. Let us cry to God that He would open our eyes to see what is wrong, so that every hindrance and stumbling-block may be taken out of the way. In closing, the Chairman introduced Mr. Brooke to the meeting, and spoke of some of his relatives who have been and are earnest workers at home.

A WORLDLY AND POWERLESS CHURCH.

Mr. G. W. Brooke said we would do well to inquire how it is that so many millions are passing into a hopeless eternity, and the Church does not seem to have the strength to stop any of them. In connection with the missionary question, there seems to be a call at the present time for almost greater self-examination than at any time in the past. A special danger seems to be hanging over the whole foreign missionary movement. In the past we have had to contend with indifference; there is now the far more subtle danger arising from popularity and enthusiasm. What we need is to have the wisdom of God, which is counted foolishness among men. In this work there is no present danger more freezing and subtle in its influence than the co-operation of "the world." In Haggai ii. we read: "If one that is unclean by a dead body touch any of these, shall it be unclean? And the priests answered and said, It shall be unclean. Then answered Haggai, and said, So is this people, and so is this nation before Me, saith the Lord; and so is every work of their hands; and that which they offer there is unclean." The Lord keep us from having such an awful thing said of our work, or from its being said in the future. Are not those that are "unclean by a dead body" touching mission work? Let one have heart contact and communion with a dead world, and the very touch of their fingers is certain pollution. Do we not see it from the beginning to the end of this revived missionary work? I ask very humbly: Do we not see it in the missionary announcements? Do they look as if they were made up by the inner circle of God's children? Do they not look as though the Church were going down to Egypt for help—the galvanising of a kind of enthusiasm from a dead world? I have actually seen a missionary pamphlet entitled, "Independent Testimonies to Foreign Missions." I am perfectly certain some of these testimonies would never have been given to Christ. I am ashamed to see it stated for the enlightenment of the Church that missions are a wonderful help to the cause of the world; for that is all that civilisation is. If we want to see what the world's civilisation is, let us look at Tyre. And the civilisation of this hypocritical and lying England is just the same. Look at her Parliament, in which nobody would get up and damn his speech by mentioning the name of Jesus Christ three times in it. Do we not see those who have "touched the dead body" in our missionary meetings, with their carnal enthusiasm and excitements, which produce nothing but cheers and waving of handkerchiefs, where there ought to be confusion of face for the worldly motives and methods and sympathies? Do we not see it in many missionary addresses? Does not the Gehazi spirit creep in? and where God has wrought a cure, are not individuals and societies pressing in to get a present? I am afraid we have lost the spirit of refusing to be seen that the glory of God may appear. The prophet has sometimes been too anxious to come down to be shown, and he has himself gone and asked for a present. Do we not see the desire to win the praise of man creeping into mission work? Let us look into these things. I need not tell you of the deadness in the foreign mission field. I suppose we would not have to go a mile from here to see the awful spiritual deadness in the churches in Liverpool, which we should find repeated and re-repeated in so many places in the heathen field. Alas, the missionary societies are in too many cases fed by dead churches, that know nothing of the power of the Spirit of God.

Mr. Brooke, referring to the spirit of consecration in the days of the early Church, when none said that the things he possessed were his own, asked whether Christ could find that the Church is now giving half as much in proportion as those first Christians. The Gospel is being preached in all its fulness, and yet there is little result. Satan does not seem to think it worth while to stir up opposition, because he is not feeling the sword of the Spirit. How many Christians have ever been filled with the Spirit, so that they know the sword of the Spirit pierces to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of joints and marrow? When God opened my eyes (said Mr. Brooke) to the fact of there being such a gift as this, a little more than two years ago, by reading of the defeat of Israel before Ai, and when He led me to ask for this gift, I was perfectly startled at the extraordinary things that happened. Ridiculously simple words were used to produce results that I had longed for after three or four hours earnest talk with people. Do we not need to be cleansed from all that hinders? Most of us must feel guilty in that we have been at times "unclean through a dead body." Here we are talking of the service of God, and we have been bringing pollution into the work of our hands, so that the Lord has smitten us with blasting and mildew. The Lord show us how the windows of heaven may be opened!

REV. J. GELSON GREGSON,

in touching on the principles of God's action in revealing his will to the world, referred to the lowly position of the chosen Apostles. It was "in the name of Jesus of Nazareth" that their wonderful works were performed; and that name is the same to-day. It has not lost its power and influence. Some of our wise people seem to think that the old methods are fossilised, and we must adapt ourselves. The people of India, they say, are so learned that we must get at their understandings and their hearts through their brains. So we have been taking away the safeguards of their own religion, and we have given them nothing in its place. The caste system, much as we Englishmen may despise it, has its advantages. It has a moral force to restrain a man from gross evils, and keep him straight. With our western culture we have snapped that bond, and now by our teaching of negation the man has got nothing. The early disciples were not sent to teach mathematics or astronomy; they were to be witnesses to the fact that Christ had risen, and this they did by the power of the Holy Ghost abiding in them. And this will be the power of our witness-bearing to-day. With this we can successfully challenge all the false religions of the time, and the world with its superior mental equipment. God's principles of working are the same everywhere. With Him there is no Europe or Asia, or Liverpool, or London; the world is one vast brotherhood. Or rather it is two vast kingdoms—the kingdom of God and the kingdom of Satan. Shall we shake hands with the foe? will we cross the line and join the enemy? As Christians, we must not truckle to the times, or make a compromise with error. We are to be like the prophet on Carmel, with his "Thus saith the Lord"; then we shall know that there is power in the Divine presence of the Holy Ghost, where it rests and abides. If we are disappointed with the results, let us inquire what seed we have been sowing. Let us look the question honestly in the face, and, if there has been anything wrong in our methods, let us turn right about and do right. Let us see to it that we are acting on principles as eternal as God Himself, and let us leave responsibilities with Him. A Church baptized with the Holy Ghost will have no difficulty about missions; there will be the men to send out, and there will be the money to keep them when they are there. The difficulty is that we, with our superlative wisdom are trying to supersede the Divine order. As soon as the Church is humble and teachable and loyal enough to say to her Master: We are ready to go anywhere and do anything, the question of missions is a solved problem. Just think of ten or twelve different missionary societies planting themselves in one heathen town. A man goes to the representative of one society and says: "What is your religion?" "Oh, ours is all right; but don't go to the others—they are all wrong!" Away the man goes to another, and he says: "Nay, we are all right, and the others are all wrong." Such a state of things needs to be looked in the face. We shall find that unity is possible when we are baptized into the Holy Ghost, but it is not possible till then. To send forth men to propagate sectarianism in a country that had a religion when our forefathers were savages, is a thing that the world may well say is an absurdity. We want to send men out simply and only as witnesses to Christ; then we shall see God working in mighty power.

"THE WINDOWS OF HEAVEN."

The closing address was by Rev. G. C. Grubb, on the conditions on which God can alone open the windows of heaven and cause his blessing to descend. This expression, "The windows of heaven," occurs three times in the Scriptures. The phrase as it stands in Malachi is quoted in almost every prayer-meeting, but we scarcely ever hear the precedent condition mentioned. We meet with the expression first in Gen. vii. 11, where we read that the fountains of the great deep were broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened. So the first opening of the widows of heaven is an opening in judgment on all corrupt flesh. Peter gives us Apostolic licence to spiritualise the Flood. In doing so he tells us that baptism really means death and resurrection with the Lord Jesus Christ. As the waters of the Flood prevailed till the highest hills were covered, so in the judgment of sin, through the sacrifice of Christ, all pride, self-laudation, and all working in the power of the flesh, go down, and are covered over in death by the Spirit of God. Are we really willing to find out what is wrong in ourselves? It is a terrible thing when a man finds out that his past life has been a mistake. Let us cleanse ourselves from all defilement of the flesh and spirit. Before we can lead a holy life there must be this cleansing.

In 2 Kings vii. we read that when Elisha prophesied of plenty, one of the king's lords said, "If the Lord would make windows in heaven, might this thing be!" Here we find that the windows of heaven are closed to unbelief, and to an unbelieving Israelite. As we go about the world we find a great many Christian people who deny that the Lord can give plenty instead of scarceness, and instead of defeat can give constant victory. Are there any weary hearts here longing for blessing, and yet in a state of starvation? What is the matter? How is it that the Bible has become so uninteresting to you? It is because your heart is not really right with Jesus. You have forgotten that man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. The attitude of the soul to the Word of God is a spiritual thermometer. If you love supremely the uncommentatored Word of God, then your heart is fairly right with Jesus. The naked Word of God is like honey to the obedient soul.

Lastly, we have the well-known passage in Malachi: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove Me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." There is the secret of success, in work at home and abroad. Bring the whole tithe—the whole of your time, your money, your investments. Everything must pass beneath his gaze. It is a blessed thing when God rules completely. Let Jesus have his own way, and all will go well.

An after-meeting was held, to which a large proportion of the audience remained. After some brief words of exhortation from Mr. Grubb, and prayer by Mr. Brooke, a number stood up, expressing their desire for guidance with respect to their future service. Some time was spent in conversation with these, and probably the seeds were sown that will produce a crop of devoted missionary service in coming years.

The intention of Mr. Brooke and his companion is to go as far as, if not beyond, the kingdom of Sockotoo, some hundreds of miles up the Niger River. This is the fourth visit Mr. Brooke is making to Africa, his previous visits being to the Congo, and also the Senegambia regions. Mr. Brooke is anxious for it to be known that his visits are not for exploration, but entirely of a missionary nature. This is the second attempt that Mr. Brooke has made to reach Sockotoo, his previous one being unsuccessful through ill-health. Mr. Brooke's last experience in the Congo district was full of exciting incidents. He penetrated the country as far as Mobangi. His intention was to reach a place 1350 miles distant, but when he got about 1000 miles inland, and a little up the Mobangi River, he was seized by the pirate tribe of Baloi. Mr. Brooke was then in the company of a French Government agent, named Gol, and had about thirty canoe paddlers. As soon as the voyageurs were brought into the village of the Balois, the place became a perfect pandemonium, the yells, shrieks, and noise being terrible. The fate of the strangers was very soon settled, the natives drawing their knives across their own throats to indicate that all of the captives were to be beheaded. However, Mr. Brooke was able, by his knowledge of the language, to make the natives understand that if they killed the white men or the canoe men, the fellow-natives of the latter, a powerful tribe, would come up and kill all of the Balois. The mention of the tribe was sufficient, and the Balois allowed the strangers to pass. They, however, repented at night and gave chase. The fugitives, however, managed to elude their pursuers, and, by braving a very dangerous river at night-time, succeeded in getting clear. These circumstances made the party abandon their first intention, and they had to return to the coast.

On another occasion, when alone, Mr. Brooke was captured by a ferocious tribe. His execution was soon fixed upon, and one man levelled his rifle at him, whilst others stood around with uplifted knives and spears. So near was the end that Mr. Brooke seized the muzzle of the rifle, and explained to the people that his death could do them no good, and if he lived he would do them no harm. His persuasion succeeded in bringing the chief and people to his side, and he was released. Speaking generally, Mr. Brooke found the tribes on the main rivers much more civilised and humane than those dwelling alongside the tributaries, which latter were in most instances either complete or semi-savages. Mr. Brooke carries no firearms with him, the Bible being, he says, his great protector. As at present arranged, the Church Missionary steamer Henry Venn is to meet Mr. Brooke and his companion at Akassa, and take them up the Niger.

Mr. Moody and his Work.

THE QUESTION DRAWER.

The following questions and answers were given at a recent meeting in San Francisco:—

Q.—How shall we treat people that can't afford to go to church?

A.—The idea that people can't afford to go to church! I find your theatres are full, your saloons are full, places of amusement are well patronised. Think of the money that is spent for sin in this city, and yet people can't afford to go to church. I tell you it is one of the devil's lies. I don't know of any man or woman who can't afford to go. I think a great many of the churches in your city have free pews. It is a mere excuse. People can attend church if they want to. I seldom go into any church but what they are very anxious to have the people come.

Q.—How do you treat these people who don't believe in revivals?

A.—I treat them very kindly, and I try to convince them that revivals are perfectly Scriptural. I don't see how any man or woman can take the Bible and read it carefully and not believe in revivals. I will venture to say that three-fourths of this audience were converted during a time of revival. Those who talk against revivals are those who get back into the world and who get cold The minister who won't go into the inquiry-room and lead inquirers to Christ wants something to ease his conscience, and he says, "I don't believe in revivals": and, a few weeks after revival services are held, says, "I have not seen any converts." Do you think they are going to knock at your front door and tell you they are converted? If you will look for them you will find them.

Mr. Sankey and myself were holding meetings in a large city once, I remember, and we did not have a good room for an inquiry-meeting. There were two churches close by—one at one end of the block, and the other at the other end. One of them was the most fashionable church in the place. It was a new building, and everything was first class. It was finished in black walnut, very fine carpets throughout the building. The minister said, "You can have this whole building from top to bottom." Their doors were thrown wide open. The minister said, "We are going to lay ourselves out for this work; we are not going to accept of any engagements on the evenings of the meetings." For about eight weeks every night when a meeting was held you would see that minister and his wife at work in the inquiry-room. I don't think there was a pew in that church but had half a dozen converts. All around you would see Christian men and women praying and leading others to Jesus Christ. When the meetings were over 326 joined the church one Sabbath. The minister of the other church never stepped foot into the inquiry-meeting, and I don't think he had 50 join his church. Not a great while before he said he didn't believe in revivals. Of course, he didn't.

Some say a revival leaves the churches in worse condition than they were before. It does—some of them. The young converts are going where they get sympathy, and where people take an interest in them, and where people believe in such things.

I have not taken the pains to ask about the work that was accomplished when I was here eight years ago, but I meet the converts everywhere working for Jesus Christ. I met some of them in Portland, some in Washington Territory, and I don't go to a town or city that I don't meet the converts of fifteen or twenty years ago. I would doubt my existence as soon as I would doubt the fact that God is not in revivals; that he is not in this movement.

I remember that three or four years ago 480 churches reported that not a soul had been converted during the whole year. It seems to me if I was a pastor I would try to lead someone to Christ in a year, if only a child, and not have to report a whole year perfectly barren. Some people say they don't believe in evangelists. You know God had only one Son, and He made Him an evangelist. The evangelist has his place in the Church as well as the ministers and deacons. I think if men would become acquainted with the Bible a little better they wouldn't have so much to say against revivals.

Q.—You said if a church member went to church on Wednesday night, to a party on Thursday night, the theatre on Friday night, and a progressive euchre party on Saturday night, you thought God hated him.

A.—I didn't say that. I said God hated shams and that kind of thing; He don't want you to go that way. I think a person's heart isn't right who is all the time seeking worldly amusements. What God wants is to keep his children out of the world.

Q.—What is the best method of keeping up the Sabbath evening service?

A.—I think we want a revolution in a great many of our churches. I believe the Sabbath evening service should be devoted to preaching the Gospel of the Son of God. I believe in conducting it in a way to interest the people, and to get all the people we can to take part in the services in the way of singing and working up the service.

There was a minister called from Minneapolis to Worcester, Mass., to take charge of a down-town church. Business had come in around the building, but they did not want to give up the church; they wanted to hold it in that part of the city. Sabbath mornings he would have very fine audiences; people would come three and four miles to attend the old church. But Sabbath evenings he would preach to empty pews. So he called a church meeting and he told them he would have to resign. They were surprised, and they said: "Why the church has not been so prosperous before; we have to bring stools and chairs into the aisles; no one has had the success that you have."

"I am a young man," he said, "and I am very much pleased with my congregation on Sabbath morning, but I can get only one audience a week, and a great many are off in the summer, and some Sabbath mornings in the summer I don't have a full church; I must go where I can get an audience twice on the Sabbath, and a pretty fair audience on a week day."

They didn't want to part with the young man, and they said: "What do you want us to do? How can we make things different?"

"I want the members to come out on Sabbath evenings, and I want the young people to come down here and sing in the evening, and a band of young men to distribute handbills and to invite the people off from the street into the church. Then I want the elders to come and act as ushers," he said. Some of them were aristocratic and some of them millionaires, but they were very fond of this pastor, and rather than let him go they consented. It was but a little while before that church was packed every Sabbath night, and people had to come early in order to get a seat. He preached earnestly, just the best he knew how, and then he would hold an inquiry-meeting right after the sermon, and it was not long before they had a great many accessions every communion Sabbath. And now in every church in Worcester they are having evening services of that kind.

In this country, and in England, where the ministers only get a good congregation Sabbath morning, very few persons are converted. Hardly anybody ever thinks of getting converted Sabbath morning; and there is really no opportunity given for a person to come into the kingdom of God. The church does not look for conversions on Sabbath mornings; and if you do not urge them to come in Sabbath evenings, when shall you reach them? They do not come Wednesday evening, and the result is the unconverted have but little influence brought to bear upon them.

I know a wealthy young man; he and his wife are in the habit of sitting in the gallery where they can overlook the congregation, and when the minister gets through they start for the door to meet someone who seems to have been interested; they get them by the hand, and they try to lead them to Christ. Each of them has a large Bible-class. There have been large additions to that church, and there has not been a communion but somebody has been baptized through their influence. This work clinches the sermon, and with such labour there will be results all the while. I believe that is the normal state of the church, and when it is in that condition people won't be so anxious to attend theatres and to dance. Somebody wants to know my opinion about dancing. I think this modern round dance is the world, the flesh, and the devil. That is my opinion; take it for what it is worth.

Q.—How shall we best look after the inquirers, and how shall we know how many sought and found the Lord during this work?

A.—I don't think you will ever know until eternity; I have not time to be counting converts; we will find that out when we get home. I would rather have a hundred genuine cases than have a thousand professed conversions, and yet hardly know whether they are saved or not. Let us drop that idea of counting converts. But let us keep to work, and if we will just keep at it there will be a good many converted before the year is over.

Q.—Would you advise the forming of fellowship meetings for the instruction of the young converts?

A.—I certainly would. It stands to reason that a man who has been in the church for twenty-five years needs different instruction from one who is just starting out in the Christian life. A gentleman called upon me with his wife at the hotel, and he has been blessed up here at the Pavilion, and his wife. They have been keeping their store open on the Sabbath, and it was the most important day of the week, and he wanted to know if he had got to give that up. These young converts need instruction. I told him certainly, he ought to close his store by all means; that no work should be done on that day unless it was necessary, and it certainly was not necessary for him to keep his shop open on the Sabbath. He said he should close the store, and he went off with the burden gone.

Q.—Is it advisable in regular church work to have after-meetings follow each service?

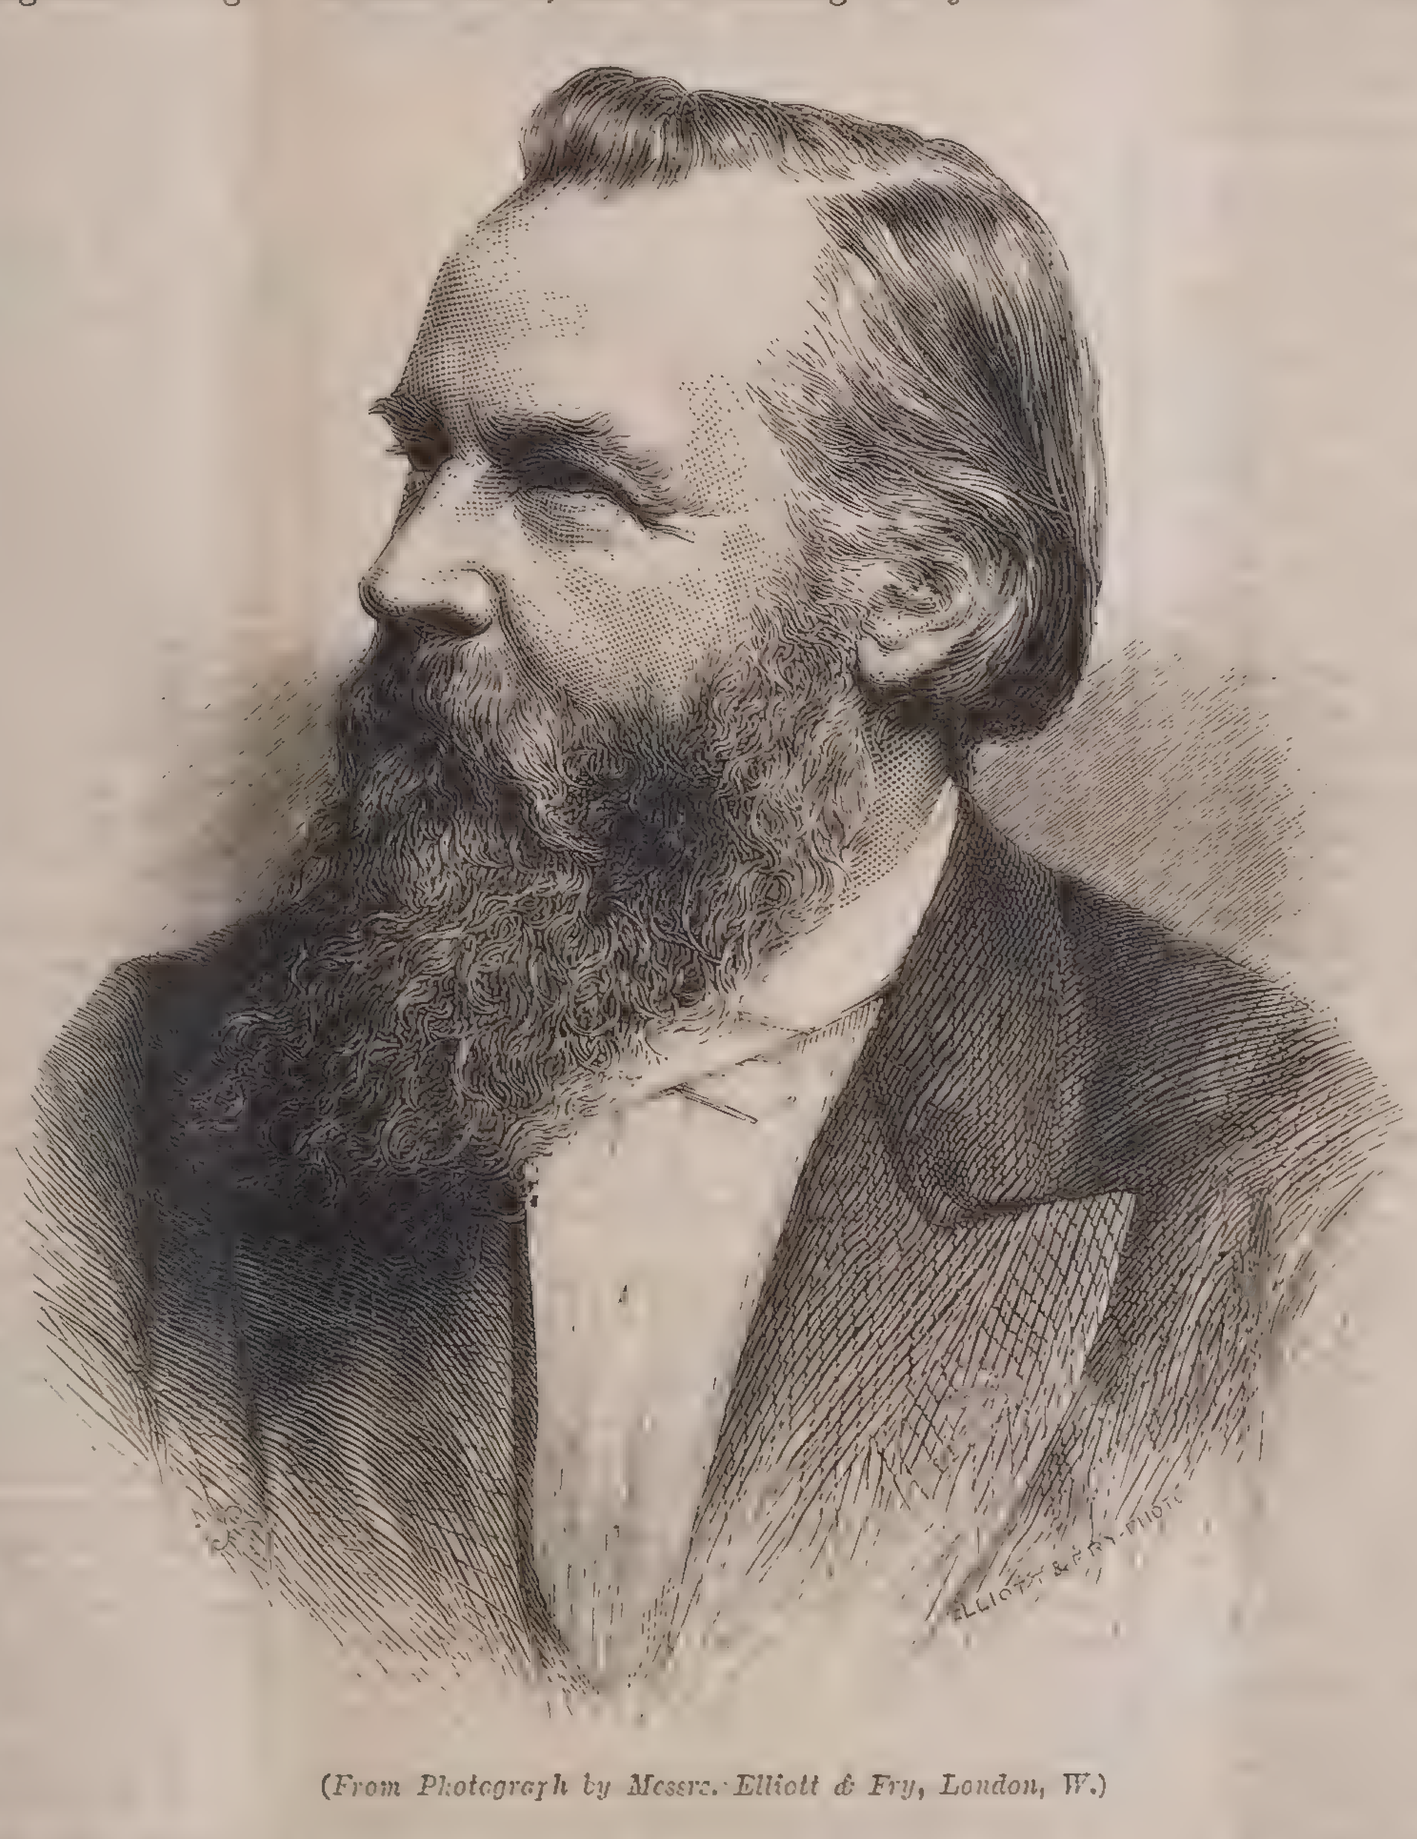
A.—I would not say each service. Some should be for instructing and building up Christians There are three kinds of service I would have in all churches. One is where we go to worship God. Another is where we go to be fed. The Church must be fed. And then the third is proclaiming the Gospel, and we should look for results right on the spot. The very best time to get persons to turn to Christ is right then and there, when they have been impressed with a powerful sermon and are under conviction. Here is a drinking man, and he is inclined to change his course; he goes away; no one has a word for him; in twenty-four hours he has mingled with his old associates, taken a glass of liquor and the whole impression is gone. Then if he should come again it is harder to make an impression on him than it was before, and the hardening process goes on all the while. We want to strike while the iron is hot; follow the matter up right then and there on the spot. If we watch for souls, we will get them.

Of the meetings in San Francisco, an American contemporary says:—The inquiry-room was opened early in the "campaign," but seemed at first to be an arena for discussion. As described by Dr. M. M. Gibson, the United Presbyterian pastor: "A San Francisco inquiry-room, especially in a large work of this kind, is a singularly cosmopolitan affair. There is not a shade of unbelief or downright infidelity existing under the shining sun that you will not meet there—German philosophy, English rationalism, French infidelity, Huxley, Spencer, Darwin—in short, the whole rank and file of these subtile thinkers thrown in your face. In fact it requires almost that the worker be posted on the whole system of Evidences. In this medley of conflicting opinions it is refreshing to get a clear case of real repentance for sin."

Rev. J. JACKSON WRAY,

Whitefield's Tabernacle, Tottenham-court-road, London, N.W.

THE subject of our brief sketch was born in the village of Sancton, in the East Riding of Yorkshire, in 1832. Mr. Wray is the son of a village carpenter, and in his youth learned his father's trade. It is said that he still credits himself with the ability to "turn out a decent cartwheel" if put to the test.



His father was a long-headed and thoughtful reader of books, quite famous as a local poet; to that father's judicious training and profound interest in his mental improvement he declares that he owes more than to all the subsequent schooling and college training he ever received. His father took especial pains with him in the matter of a clear, well-rounded fashion of speaking the Queen's English, and that vigorous Anglo-Saxon form of it which is found in the works of Shakespeare, Bunyan, and the Book of books. From him, too, he has inherited that strong poetic instinct, which is sufficiently patent alike in his sermons, his lectures, and his books.

His mother, who was sister to the somewhat celebrated Thomas Jackson, was generally beloved and honoured in her circle as "a woman of a godly sort"; she did much to mould her son's character on the same lines.

An early removal to the little town of Market Weighton placed the youth within reach of an excellent private school, where, though the master was one of the Rhadamanthus order, with a dry rod which has left green memories behind it, yet the foundations of a good education were well and duly laid. The calling of a wheelwright had no fascinations for him, and he felt always that he had that within him which urged him to a higher and a wider, though, as he affirms, not necessarily a nobler, sphere. The sudden death of his mother led him to serious and decisive thought about religion. By her grave he vowed to give his heart to God, and was able to realise the change which follows simple faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

He commenced a private school before he was twenty years of age, mainly that he might have opportunity to teach himself. After a brief spell at teaching, he offered himself to, and was accepted by, the Wesleyan Education Committee, and was sent for training to their Normal College at Westminster. He regards that course of training as one of the best experiences that ever befel him. His first subsequent scholastic charge was a school at Madeley Wood, established by the celebrated John Fletcher, of Madeley, on behalf of the colliery children of that region.

After a brief but eminently successful course there he sought and found a much larger and more influential sphere at Oldham, where well nigh a thousand children and a staff of seven or eight masters were under his control. With characteristic energy he threw himself into the work he loved, and achieved success not only in his secular work, but in leading his youthful charge to Christ. One of his choicest memories lies in the fact that many of his pupil-teachers and scholars have become ministers and missionaries, and have won high position in the scholastic world.

But all the while he could not free himself from the impression of an early call, emphasised by his mother's prayers that he might be, and her prophecies that he would be, a preacher of the Gospel. The revered and saintly Dr. John Hannah, of Didsbury, gave him encouragement and aid, and Rev. F. A. West, at that time President, in answer to his appeal for counsel, wrote: "Writing as the President of Conference to a married applicant, I must say your chance of acceptance is not good, but writing in the light of your letter and of what I hear of you, you ought to try." He did try, and was warmly and even eagerly received at the Conference of 1858.

Mr. Wray was appointed forthwith to Freetown, Sierra Leone, to take charge of an institution for training native schoolmasters and catechists, an employment for which he was peculiarly fitted. An epidemic of yellow fever ravaged the colony; and after twelve months of sore trial, during which the mission suffered the loss of well nigh all its agents, Mr. Wray returned to England, bereaved of children, his wife helplessly weakened by African fevers, her sister who resided with them dying at sea on the homeward voyage, and himself reduced to the wreck and shadow of a man. After a year's rest for recuperation he was appointed to minister to the spiritual needs of the large population of artisans in the London and North-Western Railway town of Crewe. Here he was specially successful in crowding the sanctuary, rearing schools, and winning souls to Jesus on every hand. He has left his mark there legible enough at this day.

From thence to Macclesfield, to Redruth, to Exeter, where his repute as a lecturer became widespread; and thence, according to the Methodist law of circulation, which has something of the Wandering Jew in its stern "move on," he came to London. As might have been predicted, he stayed there, and became one of its forces "for good and truth and right." At Kilburn, at Great Queen-street, at Wandsworth, he fulfilled a three years' appointment, and all the while his name and note as a preacher, a lecturer, and, eventually, an author, became wider and stronger, until Jackson Wray became a name known through the length and breadth of the land.

At the close of his Wandsworth labours he felt called on to resign his connection with the Wesleyan Church. He had always wished to travel, in order that he might gain fresh pabulum for platform, pulpit, and press; and now he thought his opportunity had come: but it was not to be. No sooner was it known that he was free than he was besieged with calls to the pastorate. Among them was one from Whitefield's old Tabernacle, in the Tottenham-court-road. In pursuance of his design, he declined; but again the call came. Mr. Wray felt then that his hopes of travel must be given up; the Divine providence marked out another path for him. The Tabernacle was at that time without pastor and rapidly becoming without people. The desire to raise the historic place up to its old-time character for soul-saving took possession of him, and for ten years he has done his utmost to bring that ideal about. Whitefield's has not had such a spell, genuine and long continued, of true prosperity for many a long year. There crowds hear the Gospel strain sounded out in earnest and burning fashion, and a live and rapidly growing church fills the place with life, and light, and energy. Active organisations of every kind are flourishing, but flourishing under restraint; and with one accord the people cry, "Give us room, for the place is too strait for us." Let us hope that this hindrance may be soon overmastered and that the energetic pastor and his flock may be no more "let and hindered" in their aggressive warfare for the Master.

As a lecturer, as well as a preacher of the Gospel, Jackson Wray has gained a good degree. His favourite topics are the heroes of the Reformation, modern heroes of philanthropic fame, and last and certainly not least, "Rare Old Æsop," who is made to discourse from his fables sound commonsense and clear Gospel truth that would have astonished the quaint philosopher himself. These latter are mingled with a native humour which makes them immensely taking everywhere they are delivered.

As an author, Mr. Jackson Wray may be fairly said to have won a world-wide name. His "Nestleton Magna," "Matthew Mellowdew," "Simon Holmes," and pretty well a score of other books for old and young people have received a welcome not only in the three kingdoms but in Canada, the United States, Australia, and other lands beyond the sea. His two volumes of "Homespun Homilies," and other works of the same class, diffuse Gospel light over a wide area.

Since Mr. Wray's return from a protracted stay in Canada and the States he has identified himself with the Total Abstinence movement, and bids fair to make as great a mark in that direction as in the many others in which his eloquent tongue and versatile pen have travelled. A nine days' Gospel Temperance mission has lately been held at the Tabernacle, of the most successful kind. Four hundred people, including several of his deacons and leading members of the church, have signed the pledge; and the pastor himself vows a lifelong campaign against the traffic in strong drink.

Mr. Wray is editor of, and chief contributor to, a monthly magazine called Good Company, which well deserves its name. In the interests of the movement for an international Bible-reading through all the churches he has undertaken the editorship of another monthly, Bible Light.

IRISH SOCIETY.—Sir,—I was one of the examiners at the recent periodical examination in Manchester, when 166 Irish Roman Catholics passed inspection in reading, translating, and repeating from memory selected portions of Holy Scripture in Irish and English. The progress of this work is impaired, and partially imperilled by financial pressure. There are now in Ireland nearly 6000 persons under Scriptural instruction, and about 500 in Liverpool and Manchester.

The Late Mr. Denham Smith.

TRIBUTE BY MRS. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

The following interesting "recollections" of our departed brother by Mrs. Grattan Guinness were partly read at the funeral by Mr. C. Russell Hurditch. They present a true idea of the character and worth of Mr. Denham Smith, and the loss that the Church on earth has sustained in his removal:—

"Harley House, March 9.—Dear Denham Smith—so he is really gone to the Saviour he loved so well. It seems strange, yet not strange, to picture him in heaven instead of on earth! He knew so much of heaven on earth, that heaven without earth will seem very natural to him. He passes before my mind as a vision of incarnate 'love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith.' Who can recall any bitter or unbrotherly word from his lips, or associate sad and depressing memories with any one of his addresses? Who ever saw his sweet beaming countenance ruffled or disturbed, or witnessed a harsh act or unkind deed done by him? What thought of evil can be associated with him, or who has ever shivered under the frosts of unbelief in his company?

"His range of teaching may have been more circumscribed than that of some others, but for that very reason his main theme, which was the central theme of Christianity, was peculiarly emphasised by him. 'Christ died for the ungodly.' How he loved to dwell on that 'substitution.' How his illustrations and his arguments and his hymns and his prayers and his pleadings with men and with God, clustered around it and were based upon it. No wonder he was a helper to many, awakened and convinced of sin perhaps under other preachers, led into light and liberty under him.

"He was one who enjoyed life and service, and did not—at any rate before being laid aside by illness—long to enter into rest. One day at the Mildmay Conference, I met him in the garden. It was soon after our 'Approaching End of the Age' was published, and he greeted me with his usual loving brightness, adding immediately, with a humorous expression of countenance, 'I don't like your new book at all; no not at all!' 'Why not?' I asked. 'Oh,' he replied, 'I don't profess to understand it all, but one thing I do understand, and I don't believe.' 'Indeed; do tell me what it is!' 'Why,' said he, in the most pleasant, indignant tone, 'you say in your "law of completion in weeks" that old age begins at sixty-three. I'm sixty-three! I don't feel a bit like old age yet, and I don't intend to for a long time. That can't be true!' And assuredly, if the mind and heart are the measure of the man more than the mere physical frame, he was never an old man.

"And now he has renewed his youth for ever. To how many of the loved and lost he is now for ever re-united. He must have had a glad welcome from them, as well as from the blessed Master Himself! His will be no starless crown by and by. My husband, who is in Mexico at present, will, when he hears of this removal, feel he has lost one of his oldest and most loving friends. They were a good deal associated in the early days of their ministry, thirty years ago, and parted in a tender, loving interview some months ago, when Mr. Smith's end seemed nearer than it proved to be."

MR. DENHAM SMITH'S MOTHER.

Sir,—I was much interested in reading the sketch of the life and character of the late Mr. Denham Smith which appeared in The Christian last week. I began my ministry at Romsey, in Hampshire, in 1856; and at that time Mr. Smith's mother was a member of the Congregational Church over which it was my privilege to preside. She was then advanced in years; but her intellect was clear and vigorous, and a more holy woman I have not known. She was often a great help to me in spiritual things. Her insight into God's Word was wonderful. I always felt I could preach better after conversation with her. Texts of Scripture became luminous with new meanings as she cited them, and explained them in her way. Mr. Smith owed a great deal to his mother. He used to come frequently from Ireland to see her. And I remember with much thankfulness his visiting us during the Irish Revival in 1859, and stirring our hearts with the accounts he gave us of that remarkable work of God.

Now that the devoted and most useful servant of God has joined his sainted mother in the heavenly land, it is to me a joy and a means of grace to recall the memories of those days.—Yours faithfully, William Crosbie.

Ecclefechan, Dyke-road, Brighton.

The commodious Clapton Hall at Upper Clapton, which for many years has been one of the principal scenes of the late Mr. Denham Smith's labours, was crowded on Sunday evening last, when an address was given by Mr. Russell Hurditch on "The Power of Divine Grace." He was listened to with rapt attention throughout, many of the audience being visibly affected.

PROTESTANT ALLIANCE.—At a recent meeting of the Committee of the Protestant Alliance the following resolution was adopted:—"That the Committee of the Protestant Alliance desire to express their deep sympathy with the Evangelical Alliance of Canada, and with their Protestant fellow subjects in that country, in the struggle in which they are engaged in resisting the aggressive aims and demands preferred by the Jesuits and other opponents of faith and freedom in the Dominion; and earnestly hope that, with the blessing of Almighty God, their efforts for the preservation of religious and civil liberties may be crowned with success."

A. H. Guinness, Secretary.

MR. W. C. K. TORRE, for some years a valued worker in connection with the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff-highway, and about to leave for Buenos Ayres, attended the noon prayer-meeting on Monday at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C. He delivered a brief address, detailing the way in which the Lord had led him to give up a railway appointment in London, and accept one in the Argentine Republic, in order that he might there preach the Gospel to those who have never yet heard it. Mr. Torre, who has had South America laid upon his heart for two years, takes a wife and family with him, and will soon be followed by Miss Ullmann, who is at present pursuing medical studies in London. The entire party was committed to the Lord's keeping, and a blessing was earnestly invoked upon Mr. Torre's efforts to spread the knowledge of Christ among the Spanish-speaking population of the Argentine Republic.

Major Whittle in Edinburgh.

We have now to recount the Lord's loving-kindnesses to us during the penultimate week of our beloved brother's mission in our midst. In many respects it has been the best; and we believe that such a work has been started in Leith as will continue to bear fruit for many days to come. From the first, among ministers and laymen, there have been expectation, preparation, separation, and co-operation. The expectation manifested itself in a very general and prayerful desire that the Major might visit Leith; God answered it by giving his servant the wish to do so.

The preparation at once commenced in a week's meetings for prayer. The separation unto the work appeared in the readiness with which whole churches and missions suspended their ordinary week's meetings to make this special effort a united one. And the co-operation was shown in the faithfulness of the Lord's people in bringing the unsaved to the meetings. Ministers of all the evangelical churches were present night after night, both at the preliminary prayer-meeting, and in the short intense outpouring of soul in the vestry with the beloved evangelist. These last were very precious moments, and were not only a great help and encouragement to the soul of our brother, but they were a deep blessing to us all. The beloved Himself was with us; the Father blessed us; the Holy Spirit filled each longing heart.

The word preached was with power, and sinners were converted to God. Postmen, policemen, and telegraph boys received special blessing. Of the latter, a number were reported as having decided for Christ. The young men's after-meetings, in the adjoining hall, conducted by Mr. Charles E. Whittle, were largely attended, and the Lord greatly owned the testimony of his young servant. He has a firm persuasion that God never saved a more undeserving, unlikely, nay, a more hell-deserving sinner than himself; and "As He has been able and willing to save me, He can just save anybody here, right away! So let Him, let Him!" Young, timid believers, whose lives otherwise might have borne no fruit, have been night after night almost compelled by his outspokenness to stand up and confess Christ; while men giving way to their passions and appetites have been dealt with in no measured terms. An enthusiastic band of young Christians has supported him thoughout. The meetings were held in Junction-road U.P. Church, and the minister, Rev. J. M. Scott, and the office-bearers, afforded us the most loyal and loving help. We had quite a band of ministers nightly, and the only difficulty was who to select to accompany the Major into the pulpit; for he likes to have two or three earnest men close to him, praying while he preaches. Among others we had the co-operation of Rev. Messrs. McCulloch, Park Millar, Kilpatrick, Crerar, Kelman, Dickson, Scott, Stevenson, and many others, as well as evangelists and City missionaries. Many interesting cases of conversion have been reported.

MISS MITTENDORFF'S HOME. — Mr. J. Weatherley desires us to call attention to the fact that the annual meeting of the friends of this Home will be held at the rooms of the Y.W.C.A., 17, Old Cavendish-street, W., on Wednesday evening, April 10. Miss Mittendorff continues to reside on the Continent, where in her native air, she hopes it may please the Lord to renew her strength. The Home is still under the superintendence of Miss Macgrath, who has the entire confidence of the council of management. Copies of the last annual report will be sent gladly to any who write for them to Mr. Weatherley, 51, Gordon-square, W.C.

The Sunday afternoon addresses to Christians, held in Glasgow Christian Institute, are going to be a source of much profitable enjoyment. "Africa" was the last subject treated, and some of those who purpose going out to co-operate in the Gospel with Mr. Fred. S. Arnot were amongst the speakers.

Dr. Pentecost, having bidden farewell to the business men, has resumed his noon-day Bible-readings. He is now in the evenings evangelising in Bethany Hall, East Glasgow. For overflow meetings, a neighbouring church's accommodation has been secured.

Rev. John Robertson, of Stonehaven, whom certain papers call the "Stonehaven Spurgeon," is the son of a ploughman. He honours the old sire who toiled in the fields to pay his son's college fees.

Speaking at the first social gathering of the Scottish Farm Servants' Union, Mr. Robertson gave some good advice which, unhappily, he very much marred by subsequent extravagances of speech. He said he regretted that a meeting which they began so sensibly was to be ended, like a pack of fools, by dancing. He hoped everyone would take cramp in their toes; that each foot would be transfixed through and through with a judgment! Speaking of the farm-servant's courtship, he gave golden advice, which the same class in every land would do well to engrave on their minds. He urged the men to be open and above-board in their wooing; to go straight to the door and say to the farmer, "I'm in love with your kitchen lassie; give me a free pass in, and I'll not abuse it." Back-door and window courtship he prayed them to avoid and despise. Despite the sharp warning about dancing, an assembly followed, and the minister was taken to task for his remarks.

In Edinburgh, thirty-two churches of various denominations have adopted unfermented wine for communion purposes.

It is eighteen years since the Scottish Band of Hope Union was established. The young are the hope of the country, and the aim of this Society is to defend their present and future from the ravages of the drink traffic. There are 130,000 Band of Hope children in Scotland connected with the Union, but there are also Bands of Hope not affiliated, so that, connected with, and apart from, the Union, there are in Scotland not less than 200,000 boys and girls—Band of Hope in truth.

Rev. John McNeill will be in Edinburgh once more in April. He is going to lift up his voice on behalf of the Y.M.C.A., which is in debt, and consequently in need of a friend who is a powerful pleader and a great attraction in himself.

REJOICING IN SUFFERING.

To an invalid friend of long standing, whose sick chamber is a cage for sunshine instead of a prison of gloom, I heard the doctor say, "How is it you are so full of smiles? Why, if I had both my lungs so inflamed as yours are, and you could hear my breathing all out to the front door as I do yours, I should be very different." Her answer was, "The Lord puts me into the furnace to purify me, to make me more like Christ, so I can rejoice in my sufferings!"—Miss Leakey.

"DID YOU EXPECT ME?"

The anecdote is told of Rev. Mr. Kidd, a Scotch minister who was very eccentric, and had his own way of doing things. "Just as the year was opening," says one of his parishioners, "I was very busy in my shop, when, right in the midst of my work, in stepped the parson. 'Did you expect me?' was his abrupt inquiry, without ever giving or waiting for a salutation. 'No, sir,' was my reply, 'I did not.' 'What if I had been death?' he asked in a solemn, earnest tone, and out he stepped, as suddenly as he had come, and was gone almost before I knew it."

THE SPIRIT OF SLUMBER.

I saw a man yesterday, when travelling on the railway, trying to awaken himself out of sleep. It took him some fifteen minutes before he could shake off the deep slumber that had taken hold of him in travelling through the cold and wind. It is a very difficult thing to fight against the spirit of slumber. The faithful at Sardis, in fighting against it in their neighbourhood, must have felt it in themselves. To overcome this creeping death which paralysed the church's heart and conscience, required a vigorous inward life; the habit of keeping before the mind a high spiritual ideal; a fortitude that no ridicule could shake; and much prayer, private as well as with like-minded brethren, for the all-supporting grace of Christ.—Dr. Donald Fraser.

"THE SAINTLY SELF."

Self dies hard, even when we have made the discovery that in Christ he has been already representatively crucified...Perhaps the subtlest self of all is the saintly self—the self that asserts itself in denying itself, and fosters a subtle, spiritual pride in the emphatic profession of humility. I meet with dear Christian souls who seem calmly to take it for granted that they are living on a higher plane than their less enlightened fellow-Christians. "We are living the higher Christian life, and we have such wonderful times up here on the mountain-top; we are so sorry for you poor dear half-enlightened souls, who are still on the wilderness side of Jordan, and haven't yet entered the promised land, with which we are now quite familiar." There is a deal of dying to be done still by those who cherish these lofty thoughts of their own attainments. The holiest man will ever be the man who thinks least of his own holiness.—Rev. W. H. Aitken.

FAVERSHAM GOSPEL BAND is made up of Christian men and women who labour earnestly to bring their fellows under the sound and influence of the Gospel. With the goodwill of local friends, and the assistance of members of various denominations, the work has grown, and a commodious Gospel hall has been provided. The undertaking has cost about £1500, less than half of which has been collected. The services are conducted by members of the band, who welcome assistance by all who love the Lord.

A VILLAGE REVIVAL.—Some weeks since a lady, in passing through a village in Middlesex, engaged in conversation with an aged man who, living quite alone, was much used of God as a light shining in a dark place. She sent him subsequently a parcel of tracts and books, and, in a letter expressing his thanks, he says: "They have caused quite a revival in our locality already; they have been received very thankfully, and I have engaged a little girl—a cripple—to read them to the neighbours who cannot read themselves." There is no knowing how much fruit a little seed-sowing of this kind may bring forth in the dark villages of our land.

Active Service in Soldiers' Homes.

It is now nearly twenty years since I was led into active service among soldiers in Ireland. From a small Bible-class in my own home, to well-attended gatherings in Tralee, and thence to the Soldiers' Home in Cork, traces briefly the beginnings of my work.

All special missions have their own peculiar characteristics. Work among soldiers is remarkable for variety of incident, which naturally attends efforts to bring home the Gospel to the hearts of masses of young men, gathered from all classes of society, and separated from kindred and home. Perhaps it will be interesting to your readers if I give a brief sketch of

ONE DAY'S WORK.

In the morning our chief interest is the post, and it is a real pleasure to hear from our friends in the different regiments which have left us. But, although the whole morning is spent in letter-writing, we find it almost impossible to keep up with our large and ever-increasing correspondence. I could give many testimonies as to how these men value even a few hurried lines of sympathy and encouragement. Some hundreds of soldiers scattered everywhere belong to our "Soldiers' Bible Union." My co-worker, Miss Schofield, edits a magazine entitled "Forward," which contains notes on their Bible-readings, and helps us to keep in touch with men who have received blessing in the "Home." Early in the afternoon we go up to the barracks to visit in

THE HOSPITAL.

This hospital is generally pretty full, as it accommodates, besides the sick of Cork garrison, any soldiers throughout the whole South of Ireland whose health incapacitates them for further service. They are sent to it for invaliding. They arrive here strangers, amongst men belonging to strange corps; often hopelessly ill, and, separated from all their old companions and friends, they are naturally depressed, and a few kind words of sympathy find a ready entrance into their hearts.

Let us enter ward No. 1. We want to see a poor lad who is far gone in consumption. A hospital orderly has told us, "He is dying, and would like to see you; but I don't think he would like you to 'talk religion' to him, for he says he can't bear it." Going up to his cot, we tell him that we will only stay a few minutes, for we don't want to tire him; we know he can't talk much with that hacking cough. Then we give him some flowers to smell, and as he hands them back, we say, "Oh, no, they are for you." "What, for me? it is kind of you. It is a long time since I have seen any flowers, and I am fonder of flowers than anything." As he looks admiringly at them, he points out one and another to us, saying, "My mother used to have flowers like that in her little garden." This leads to some talk about his home and his mother, and the tears stand in his eyes as he says, "Ah, my mother is as good a Christian woman as lives, but I've been the black sheep of the family." "Perhaps for that very reason she thinks oftener of you than of the others, for she is anxious on your account." "I believe you're right there." "Wouldn't she like to have you home now that she might nurse you?" "That she would."

Then we venture to say a little about One whose love for him is more deep and tender than even that mother's, and who for long years has longed, as no earthly parent could, for the return of His prodigal. But we said we had promised to stay only a few minutes, and we rise to go. "Oh, you're not tiring me. Don't go just yet." Before we leave we promise to come and see him next day. Ere we pass on, I may just mention that before his death, which took place a few weeks later, that young soldier had rallied sufficiently to enable him to travel home, and he was restored not only to his mother, but to his mother's God.

In Ward No. 2 there are no serious cases, so we find all our friends sitting round the fire, and very glad they are to see us and our books. When a man is kept in during long weeks of convalescence, or for some slight injury which unfits him for duty, he finds the time hang heavily on his hands. A visit from a friend is then a pleasant break in the monotony of the day. Our first business is to give them some flowers to make their room bright, and then to exchange our LIBRARY BOOKS.

They are always eager to get something to read, and our only difficulty is that the supply is not equal to the demand. One soldier, as he returns his book, says, "It made me feel quite soft-hearted; these tales remind one of bygone days." Now, this is a young fellow whose confidence we have for some time been trying to gain, but hitherto we have found him shy and reserved. As he has opened the conversation himself, to-day, we try to make the most of our opportunity; so while one lady engages his comrades in conversation, another has a quiet talk with him. To her remarks he answers, "There's no use in my trying to be different, I've gone too far—you don't know how bad I've been."

Then he tells his tale. When a mere lad he got into drinking habits. His poor mother became alarmed about him. She had good cause to fear drink, for her husband died in delirium tremens, and now her son seemed to be following his father's steps. Thinking that perhaps, if he got away from his drinking companions, he would be different, she persuaded him to go out to some of her friends in America, who found employment for him; but he soon lost this through drink, and returned to London, where he plunged into all kinds of dissipation. Letter after letter came from his mother entreating him to come home. At times he half resolved to return; but then the thought occurred to him that if he did he would have to lead a different life, for he could not bear to witness his parent's sorrow, and the resolution was abandoned. A telegram came that his mother was dying, and at last he hastened homewards—but arrived too late! "When I heard she was gone," he said, "I turned from the door. I dared not face my relatives, for I knew that they would think, and think rightly, that my conduct had helped to bring her to the grave, and from that day to this they have not heard anything of me." "But you can meet that mother in heaven; her prayers have been following you, and the Saviour has been following you all these long years. He is saying to you now, 'Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise—no matter what they have been, no matter what they are—I will in no wise cast out.' Will you come to Him to-day?"

There are many other wards to visit, and the same work to be done in each, so we cannot stay any longer here. But, on returning home that evening, a letter was written to that young man, trying to explain the way of salvation more fully to him, and it brought this answer:

> I received your kind letter this morning, and am very thankful to you for it. I have read the verses which you pointed out to me. I never enjoyed reading the Bible so much before, and I feel much happier since. I have been very wicked, but the Lord says: "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and He will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon." I do want to forsake my evil ways, and I have confessed my sin to God, and believe He has pardoned me....May God help you to bring light, and peace, and pardon, to many more hearts.
> Your truly grateful, ———

This young man afterwards proved, by his changed life, the reality of his conversion. Leaving the hospital, we turn our steps towards the

MARRIED QUARTERS.

Passing along the Verandah, we knock at a door, and introduce ourselves as coming from the "Home." Here we find a poor, weary-looking woman; evidently it would be useless to ask her to attend any meetings, for she has too much to do, with three or four children, to be able to get out; and, as she says, "He won't stop in to mind them of an evening, but I do wish he'd go down to your Home, Miss." We ask when he is likely to be in, and if we cannot see him that day, we promise to call soon again, and do our best to get hold of him.

Our knock at the next door is answered by a gruff, "Come in." We find the wife is out, probably at the wash-house; but this is an opportunity long prayed for, and not to be missed. Here is a man whom we have tried again and again to get hold of, but never had the chance before. He knows what we want, and laughs as he sees how he is caught, for he remembers, and so do we, how often he has purposely avoided us. Now we go straight to the point, and try to tell him of the real danger he is in by putting off his salvation and trifling with God from day to day. He sobers down; God's message lays hold of his heart, and we have the joy before long of seeing that man, and soon after his wife also, leading steadfast Christian lives.

Now we must make haste down the Barrack Hill, and "go home," as the men say, when they follow us an hour or so later. They generally begin to come in for the evening between six and seven, and in the winter time looks very bright, with one group round the fire chatting and reading; others at the table looking over old volumes of The Illustrated London News or The Graphic, while a few more are at the writing table busy with letters. Downstairs in the Coffee-room the men have been coming and going all day, and will be till eleven o'clock. It is just eight now, and time for

THE READING-ROOM

OUR NIGHTLY MEETING.

After a good deal of singing, we read a few verses, and talk over them as simply as possible. While some of those present are very intelligent and well educated, there are others who can only understand the plainest and simplest language. We do our utmost to encourage the men to speak freely and ask questions, for in this way we find out what is going on in their minds, and can grapple better with their difficulties.

It is time for those who are not "on pass" to think about getting up the Barrack Hill; but before saying "Good night," we generally manage to get a little quiet chat with one or two, and often there are men "on pass" who stay talking with us up to eleven o'clock. God does reveal his love to many of these men who attend our meetings night after night, and then it is very encouraging to see their anxiety that others should know Him. Nearly every night, before the eight o'clock meeting, the Christian soldiers get together to plead for the salvation of their comrades, and we could fill many a page with the record of God's faithfulness and lovingkindness in answering these prayers.

So the days go by, embracing not only the work I have narrated, but numerous visits and meetings at out-stations, such as Ballincollig, the headquarters of a cavalry regiment, Youghal, Haulbowline, Naval and Military Station, Cork Harbour, and troop-ships at Queenstown; while our Home and work include also the Royal Irish Constabulary.

I now desire to ask attention to the fact that the second city in Ireland, Belfast, with a large garrison of 2000 soldiers and some 800 policemen, is yet without a "Home" such as I have described. To the founding of a "Home" in this city I am giving my attention. Two thousand pounds have already been subscribed, and a site secured; £2000 more is needed. To try and obtain this sum I am at present in London. The need is very great; the Lord's stewards will surely speedily supply it.

For Cork, in order to close our financial year out of debt, we require £200. Let me remind your readers that the large majority of soldiers in Ireland are English and Scotch, and, in the present depressed state of our country, it is impossible to get funds there to carry on a work among them.

My co-worker, Miss Schofield, with two ladies helping her, who all give their services voluntarily, are most efficiently carrying on the work in Cork.

This work appeals to all Christians, by whatever name they may be called. It is purely unsectarian. Men of all denominations make the "Home" their own, and the work is carried on in sympathy with their chaplains.

Soldiers' Home, Cork. ELISE SANDES.

Letters to the Editor.

WHITE CROSS LITERATURE.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me to offer through your columns a grant of one hundred copies of the White Cross series, upon certain conditions, to anyone who may be interested in the movement?

During the course of the year, it is hoped that a hundred thousand papers may be issued. Upwards of ten thousand have been already issued.—Faithfully yours, G. S. S. VIDAL.

Museum Close, Oxford.

"CAST AWAY."

DEAR SIR,—After having read twice through Rev. W. Haslam's "Cast Away" in THE CHRISTIAN for March 8, p. 14, may I ask whether it is really meant for a serious argument in favour of the doctrine that a person once converted is safe for ever? I can hardly think Mr. Haslam himself can believe that his article is convincing. To one who holds the opposite view it is interesting to notice how weak a case appears to be brought forward by one of so large an experience as Mr. Haslam.

Surely no Christian can doubt God's power to keep us if we will let Him, but the gist of the question is this, Does "conversion" destroy our free will—deprive us of the power to take ourselves away from Christ Jesus? Do not the Bible and life's experience both teach us that it does not?

I am, truly, J. MARSHALL STURGE.

Bewdley, Worcestershire.

[Certainly, conversion does not destroy our free will; but if by conversion is meant regeneration, we should say that a man once born cannot be unborn. The Jacobs, the Davids, the Peters, are regenerate though they fall; the Esaus, the Sauls, the Judases, are not, however fair they may seem sometimes. See 2 Peter ii. 22; 1 John ii. 19.—ED.]

THE WORK OF GOD IN ROME.

DEAR SIR,—Last year a lady visiting Rome organised a branch of the Y.W.C.A. That branch is now flourishing, and its weekly class for young ladies is very well attended; it seems to be the centre of meeting for Christian ladies in the capital of Italy. It is now proposed to advance a great step; arrangements are in progress for a Christian Convention in Rome on April 28, "for the building up of believers, and for quickening and deepening spiritual life." For this purpose an influential committee has been formed, and the prayers of God's people are earnestly requested for a great blessing on this important undertaking. Speakers have been invited from England, and as the expenses for travelling and for the local arrangements will be considerable, pecuniary help from us at home has been solicited. I shall be very ready to receive donations toward the expenses.

A Christian Convention in Rome will be one of the year marks of 1889, and I earnestly hope that Christian people in our islands will help to make it a great blessing to the many visitors who will be in Rome, by their prayers and their substantial aid. Miss Grace Filder, 27, Via Sistina, Rome, is the honorary secretary at Rome, and I shall be very ready to help her in England.—Yours very sincerely, W. HATT NOBLE.

Redhill.

[We rejoice in the prospect of such a Convention, and trust that some of our readers will be able to avail themselves of the opportunity to visit Rome on the occasion.—ED.]

THE CURSE OF MONTE CARLO.

SIR,—Referring to the editorial note in your last issue as to the advisability of establishing a church at Monte Carlo, may I (seeing that you seem to consider such a step desirable) say that having spent a short time at Cannes and Mentone, I took the opportunity to make inquiry into this matter.

I cannot help thinking that the Bishop of Gibraltar, and those who agree with him, came to a wise decision. The effect of the gambling is so thoroughly demoralising that the Christian Church should not, even in appearance, give it the slightest sanction; and the strongest protest which can be made is to have nothing whatever to do with the place or with its proceedings.

Yours truly, KINNAIRD.

TRAVELLING ON THE LORD'S DAY.

DEAR SIR,—I notice letters in THE CHRISTIAN in reference to railway-men and Sunday work.

It has appeared to me that many ministers and others are "out of court" to a large extent on this question, inasmuch as they use railway trains and other public conveyances to go to their preaching engagements on Sundays. There is, or was, a train out of Derby on a Sunday morning known as the "ministers'" or "parsons'" train, because so largely used by those going out to "take services."

I heard many years ago of an infidel commercial traveller who was so convinced of the value of a day of rest that he altogether avoided going by train on Sunday. Would that religious people generally would follow his example.—I am, truly,

Evangelistic Notes.

An Eight Days' Gospel Mission, conducted at the Methodist New Connexion Chapel, Beswick (Manchester South Circuit), by Mr. George Evens and his wife, has been owned of God to the salvation of sinners and the upbuilding of believers in their holy faith.

Rev. William Haslam commences a mission at St. John's Church, New North-road, Hoxton, N., on Sunday next. It will be continued until April 2. Addresses for Christian workers will be given at the church each week-day morning at 11.30 (Saturdays excepted).

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has held an eight days' mission at the Congregational Church, Seaford, with encouraging results. As an outcome of an address on Social Purity, delivered to a large audience of men by Mr. Hallowes, a branch of the White Cross Society has been formed.

Miss M. S. S. Herdman lately addressed the sailors and soldiers at Miss Robinson's Institute in Alexandria for five consecutive evenings. She was assisted by Rev. T. R. Lawrence and General Haig. There have been several marked cases of conversion, and the Christian men have been much blessed.

Kingsbridge, Devon.—Rev. R. Balgarnie's mission in this town, held in connection with the Baptist and Congregational bodies, has been a means of great blessing. Crowded congregations have attended the meetings every night. A large number, including many from other denominations, have gone into the inquiry-room and professed faith in Christ.

Feckenham, near Redditch.—Three weeks' special evangelistic services have been conducted in the Free Church by Mr. J. S. Brunning, of the Evangelisation Society. The meetings have been well attended, and a goodly number have been brought to Christ. Believers have been much encouraged and strengthened in the faith of the Gospel.

Mr. T. M. Carleton, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, has conducted a Gospel mission in the Temperance Hall, Donegal, and in the adjoining district of Cassany. In the latter place a good work of grace has begun. Every night an attentive audience listened to the stirring and scriptural addresses of the preacher. The power of the Spirit accompanied the word, and old and young were alike humbled under a sense of sin. Many are now rejoicing in the assurance of pardon. At the close of the meetings a temperance society was formed; also a branch of the Y.W.C.A.

Mr. Sankey.—In a recent letter, Rev. Dr. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, writes: "My neighbour and friend, Ira D. Sankey, spoke in my pulpit last (Sunday) evening."

Mr. Douglas Russell conducted evangelistic meetings in Tunbridge Wells from Feb. 17 to March 4, in Great and Vale-road Halls. The Gospel told out nightly in its scriptural simplicity, was made the power of God to the conversion of numbers, young men predominating. Several cases of special interest came before the workers. Afternoon Bible addresses were given on fundamental truths. These meetings were seasons of much help and blessing to Christians.

Messrs. Peatt and Crozier, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, have given Gospel addresses in the Boyle Presbyterian Church for three weeks, and much blessing has followed the services. Believers have been greatly refreshed and there have been many professed conversions. At the after-meeting of the closing service, more than half those present waited to be conversed with about salvation. The evangelists have also been giving addresses in Carrick-on-Shannon.

Ireland.—Mr. Robert Clark, an evangelist connected with Harcourt-street Baptist Chapel, Dublin, has been preaching with much blessing at Athlone and Tubbermore during the past month. In spite of severe weather, the attendance at the former place was good, believers were refreshed, and souls born from above. Tubbermore Baptist Chapel, which holds 500 people, has been crowded to the doors, and several have professed to receive the Lord Jesus as their personal Saviour and Friend.

Mr. G. C. Needham in Paris.—Between Sunday, the day after his arrival in Paris, and Thursday evening last week, when he left for Rome, Mr. George Needham lifted up the name of Christ in no fewer than six assemblies of English hearers and six of French. His daily addresses to English workers, at 23, Rue Royale, were highly prized by many. His appeals in several of the McAll Mission Halls, and in connection with Miss De Broën's Mission, arrested the eager attention of the Parisian crowds everywhere. After his discourse at Salle New York (Rivoli), on the suggestion of a French pastor, a long and loud salvo of applause was given by some 300 French people as a token of admiration and gratitude to Mr. Needham and the Americans who so generously help forward the evangelisation of Paris.

SAMUEL H. ANDERSON.

SOUTHSEA MISSION.—Tens of thousands of persons have during the past eight years heard the Gospel, as proclaimed in the tent on Southsea Common during the summer months. To many the word spoken has proved the power of God unto salvation, and it is hoped that the work will continue to receive like blessing from God in future years. The superintendent, Mr. John Denning, is at present at a standstill for want of funds to order new canvas for the tent. His address is "Ebenezer," Saxe-Weimar-road, Southsea.

"THE CHRISTIAN HARBOUR LIGHTS."—A large company of seamen and others attended the monthly muster at the Seamen's Chapel, St. George-street, E., on Monday evening last. Several seamen testified to the blessedness of the Christian life, and exhorted their mates to yield themselves to Christ. Short and stirring addresses were given by Mr. W. H. Seagram, Mr. H. W. Maynard, Miss Messer, and Rev. G. J. Hill. Many seamen were deeply impressed, several signed the pledge, and others were enrolled as members of the Christian Harbour Lights.

MISSION WORK IN LAMBETH. — On Thursday evening, March 14, the annual meeting of the George-street Mission, Princes-road, Lambeth, was held. Tea was provided in the Lambeth Ragged Schools, and the public meeting held in the mission hall. The chair was taken by Mr. James Doulton. The hall was tastefully decorated. The report, read by the hon. sec., Mr. Thomas Wild, told of benevolent, temperance, and Gospel work carried on by Mr. Goodman, the city missionary, and a good staff of friends and helpers many of whom were on the platform forming a choir, and a brave array of speakers. After a short speech from the chairman, and Mr. William Luff, Lady Hope addressed the audience, offering to open one of her coffee-rooms in the neighbourhood, if any friend would provide funds to set it going. This offer ought not to be allowed to fall to the ground.

SALVATION ARMY on the CONTINENT

Exeter Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity on Wednesday evening, last week, on the occasion of the eighth anniversary meeting in connection with the Salvation Army work in France and Switzerland. The announcement that Maréchale Booth-Clibborn would attend and speak was, doubtless, a great attraction, and genuine and widespread regret was felt at the announcement that, in consequence of illness, she was unable to be present. For some time she has been in poor health, yet, after wearying travels in the south of France, she did not hesitate to visit England for the purposes of the meeting. Arrived in London, however, she quite broke down under an attack of rheumatic fever. Colonel Booth-Clibborn, husband of the Maréchale, was present, as was also Miss Sterling, "the prisoner of Chillon," and the proceedings were enthusiastic throughout.

After a season of earnest prayer, and some hearty singing, General Booth, who presided, delivered a vigorous address. Having referred to recent controversy as to missionary methods and their results, he spoke on consecration. This word points the remedy for the state of things complained of. Following up thoughts suggested by it, the General said: "Where is Mr. Caine? Why does he not come and put on a jersey? He loves the Salvation Army, but why do not he and such-like people join it? Devildom and heathendom are growing ever so much faster than Christian truth is being expanded, and we are going at the old coach rate instead of at railway rate." Alluding to the charges brought against the Salvation Army, that it allows its workers to use themselves up too quickly, Mr. Booth said: "I always tell my officers, 'You shall suffer,' and I never stand between them and the cross. They do not serve me, but Jesus Christ, whom they love, and who will in due course reward them for whatever they do." In conclusion, Mr. Booth said that on these principles the war has been carried on, and with cheering success, in France and Switzerland.

Colonel Booth-Clibborn gave an account of the work. The story was one of travel and toil, perplexity and opposition; but there were cheering circumstances, as well as many difficulties. Twenty-four new posts were opened during the year. A commodious central hall, with adjoining offices, has been taken in Paris, at 3, Rue Auber, near the Opera, and a low theatre has been captured in the revolutionary quarter of Belleville. These will be specially useful during the Exhibition. The people have been reached better than ever before, and considerable progress has been made towards the various corps becoming self-supporting. Among the most determined enemies of the Army, as well as among the most depraved and desperate of the people, conversions have taken place. In Switzerland persecution has been to a great extent lived down, and it is hoped that, as the high objects of the Army are better understood by the authorities, the remaining obstacles will be removed from the path of progress.

An interesting episode followed, Colonel Booth-Clibborn's infant daughter, Catherine Evangeline, being brought in, and solemnly dedicated to the Lord. The General took the little one in his arms, and received from its father a promise that with his wife he would train the darling for God, and to fight as a soldier in the Salvation Army. Having received the child in the name of Christ, the General invoked the blessing of God upon it, the audience joining in a hearty "Amen."

Mr. F. W. Crossley, of Manchester, having, in a few words, given expression to his great interest in the Continental work, Captain Stirling detailed her experiences at Chillon, where, as will be remembered, she was incarcerated fifty-three days for breaking an antiquated law, by collecting children to whom she spoke of the love of Christ. The pending appeal has been decided adversely, and we assume that she will have to return and complete the term of one hundred days. The imprisonment afforded Miss Stirling grand occasions to testify for the Lord, and of these she was not slow to avail herself.

The total income of the continental work for the year amounted to £10,650. Details may be read in a report (illustrated) just published, and to be had from the International Headquarters, 101, Queen Victoria-street, E.C. At the close of the meeting several promises of support during the present year were announced.

LONDON CITY MISSION.

By the kind invitation of the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, the members of the London City Mission, with a goodly number of their friends and supporters of the work, spent a pleasant season, on Thursday evening last week, at the Mansion House. The company included the Lord Chancellor, and a number of influential gentlemen. A goodly number of ladies also attended, and the preliminary reception passed off enjoyably, being followed by a sacred concert, vocal and instrumental.

The Lord Mayor presided at a meeting which was afterwards held in the Egyptian Hall, and delivered an address full of sympathy with the work of the Mission. He rehearsed its objects and methods, and spoke highly of them; dwelling upon the history and progress of the Mission, he rejoiced that so much success had attended the labours of the missionaries. He pointed out that the population of London is increasing at the rate of 110,000 a year, and expressed a hope that the public would continue to recognise the high claims of the Mission upon their sympathy and support.

Mr. F. A. Bevan, treasurer of the Mission, in a brief statement, said that each missionary costs £100 per annum.

The Lord Chancellor moved a resolution cordially acknowledging the efforts of the Mission in constructing a bridge of practical sympathy between the rich and the poor. He observed that the continuous influx of provincials and foreigners into the Metropolis is seriously aggravating economic problems, and there is great danger of a seething mass of humanity being brought together without the civilising elements in which a nation grows up. The speaker pictured the devoted missionary going from room to room, and from cellar to garret, teaching precious truths and showing sympathy to hearts overcharged with sorrow, and weary under life's heavy burden. He concluded by commending the generous example of the late Mr. Samuel Morley to imitation by those who have it in their power to help the City Mission.

The resolution was seconded by Rev. J. H. Scott, rector of Spitalfields, who said that in his parish there are fifty common lodging-houses, with 6,000 inmates Mr. T. Vicary, the missionary on the Billingsgate district, having given a brief account of his interesting work, the resolution was carried with acclamation.

The missionaries number 481, and last year paid 3,388,763 calls. The office of the Mission is 3, Bridewell-place, New Bridge-street, E.C.

DEACON ABRAHAM, in a letter from Oroomiah, Persia, tells of earnest effort among Moslems and Jews, as well as continued endeavours in the midst of the Nestorian population. As a rule he gets a patient hearing while reading the Scriptures to the people. The Deacon says he should like to communicate with English artisans, filled with the Holy Ghost, and desirous of settling in Persia in order to help on the cause of God. The demand is for such as are skilful in well-drilling, leather-curing, wool-dealing, glass-making, and carriage building.

ROMANISTS AND RESCUE WORK.

A case is now before the High Court of some interest to managers of public institutions, and to all engaged in rescue work. Some six months ago a young girl, aged fifteen, was brought by an elder sister, aged twenty, to Mr. L. K. Shaw, of the Manchester and Salford Children's Aid Society. The girl was without mother, but had a father, of drunken and vagrant habits, who for two years had provided no home for the girl. She was living in a common lodging-house, earning about 4s. a week by rag-sorting, &c., but exposed to grave moral danger. It was her own desire to escape from these low surroundings, and, with the full acquiescence of the father, she entered one of the Homes of Mr. Shaw's Institution. During the interval that has elapsed she has seen her father and other relations, who expressed their satisfaction at the improved appearance and surroundings of the girl.

Six weeks ago she left the Homes at her own desire, for a situation as domestic servant, to which Mr. Shaw recommended her, and where she is now supporting herself, and giving entire satisfaction in a respectable household. Just recently, however, the so-called Catholic Rescue and Protection Society (of which Dr. Vaughan, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford is President) have prevailed on the father to sign a document demanding this girl to be restored to him, in order that she may be placed in a Roman Catholic Home, under the care of Dr. Vaughan. To this both the girl in question and her elder sister object, both girls having gone for some years to a Protestant Mission Hall in Manchester.

The application to the Court now is to compel Messrs. L. R. Shaw, and G. R. Kirlew, the hon. secs. of the Manchester Children's Aid Society, to divulge the present residence of the girl, in order that she may be removed therefrom. This they naturally object to do, urging that, the girl having left their Homes, their control has ceased, and also that they should not be called upon to betray the confidence of a girl who is in service, and who objects to enter a Roman Catholic Home. This is another of the many instances where the Romanists leave their children neglected and uncared for, until some Christian individual seeks to help and care for them, when they at once become solicitous about their welfare. The Romish party seem resolved to press the theory of parental rights to its extremest limit in the interests of their Church, and Messrs. Shaw and Kirlew are resolved to resist to the utmost any attempt which, if successful, might prove a dangerous precedent to all engaged in rescue work. Whatever support can be given to Messrs. Shaw and Kirlew by the assurance of Christian sympathy and prayer, should certainly not be wanting.

SOUTH AFRICA.—We wish to draw the attention of our London readers to the announcement of an address on South Africa, to be delivered by Mr. W. Spencer Walton, in the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N., on Friday next (March 29), at 8 p.m.

AMONG THE KASHMIRIS.—Miss Fanny J. Butler, of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society, has sent a deeply interesting letter home from Kashmir. The home life of the Kashmiris strikes English people as extremely devoid of comfort at the best of times. In sickness, however, it is worse, for the natives have no knowledge of sick nursing and feeding. The dispensary was opened on August 13, 1888, and by the end of the year there had been nearly 5000 attendances. A little house adjoining the dispensary has been opened as a hospital, and it has never yet been without patients. Miss Butler does not echo the sentiment that Orientals are ungrateful; it is, she says, doubtless true of some, but others are contented and pleased. This is a pleasing testimony, and we trust that it will be made possible for Miss Butler so to extend her efforts that she may witness increasing gratitude on the part of the people. Assistance towards the mission operations may be sent to Miss A. Butler, 7, Park-villas, Blackheath, S.E.

MISSION WORK in BECHUANALAND.

WE have just had our annual gathering, when the Christians from the neighbouring villages meet together at the head station for the transaction of church business, for intercourse and fellowship, and for united prayer. Twenty members were received into church fellowship. On Sunday, the little church, which will hold about 250, was filled with visitors; while the regular home congregation, amounting to about the same number, sat outside. In the afternoon, upwards of 200 sat together at the Lord's table, and I believe all felt it good to be there. On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, we had morning and afternoon meetings for prayer and praise.

As one result of these meetings, we have determined to let the present year be marked by increased and earnest effort in carrying on evangelistic work. As a church, we have resolved if possible to preach the Gospel in all the outside villages, and also in all the principal divisions of the larger towns. We shall have many hindrances, and there are existing circumstances that may render this year's work more difficult than it has been before; still I believe the people are entering upon it with trust in the power of God, and a desire to bring glory to the Lord Jesus. May I ask your readers to remember us in prayer.

MISS DE BROEN'S WORK IN PARIS.

ON Thursday, last week, Mr. George Needham opened with prayer, and dedicated to the service of God, an office in the centre of Paris for Miss de Broen's Belleville Mission. The place is situate 205, Rue St. Honoré, between the Rue Castiglione and the Louvre, near the Tuileries Gardens. English and American friends took part in the service of prayer and praise for mercies received. Mr. Needham spoke warmly on the usefulness of the enterprise, and Miss de Broen said that her heart was full of praise, that after six months of praying and working, and of innumerable difficulties, she had at last succeeded, by God's help in securing the room.

Prayer was offered by several visitors and friends, God's blessing being invoked on behalf of the Mission, and all others in Paris. Hopes were expressed that the room might become, according to Miss de Broen's earnest wish, another place of witness for the Saviour. Friends of the Mission have long desired that there should be an accessible office, whereat information respecting the Mission may be obtained. From thence, four times a week, a guide will conduct visitors to the Mission in Belleville. It will also be in connection with the large Women's Christian Temperance Union of America, Miss de Broen being president of the Paris section.

Besides accommodation for writing, reading, and resting, tea and coffee will be supplied at a moderate rate at all hours; and there will be an inquiry office for schools, hotels, &c. The light and airy room, with capital frontage to the crowded thoroughfare, is suitable for meetings in French and English. Texts and scenes from the life of our Lord ornament the walls and windows.

MADRID.—Mr. A. R. Fenn writes:—We have just had some extra meetings, having had with us for a few days Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong. Not only did the attendance, night after night, keep up, but several persons appeared to be brought to decision; indeed, this whole district seems to be in a remarkable degree prepared for the simple message of salvation through Christ. Oh, if we only had men and women endued with power from on high who would go and gather the sheaves.

TRACTS FOR JAPAN.

DEAR SIR,—Permit me to thank the friends who have so kindly responded to my request for tracts, and especially the two friends who have encouraged me by practical help. These expressions of sympathy lead me to hope that many more might like to bear a share in the work I am engaged in. I am a self-supporting missionary, and have preached in my own house, having set apart a large room for this purpose. During the past year the Lord has acknowledged my testimony for Him, and permitted me to baptize eleven converts.

My object, in addition to preaching, is to circulate Gospel literature in the form of small tracts, and the practical sympathy I have received induces me to hope that I may obtain a small printing press, a few founts of English type, and other needs of a similar nature, and print my own tracts. I am well informed in all matters connected with the art of printing, and, by the aid of a press, &c., I could circulate many thousands of Gospel tracts, and many a weary pilgrim, over mountain paths to distant shrines, may find in Christ that rest of soul which he travels many weary miles to seek.

There are, indeed, open doors in Japan, and it is my desire to enter into a few more of them. The harvest is great, and men are needed, men of earnest spirit, to reap the harvest, and fill the granaries of God.—Yours sincerely,

100, Yokohama, Japan. F. STANILAND.

A NEW WORK IN SPAIN.

DEAR SIR,—It will be in your recollection that many years ago (in 1862) our now aged brother in Christ, Mr. R. C. Chapman, accompanied by the late William Gould and Mr. George Lawrence, passed through London on their way to Spain to make use of such opportunities as God should open to them for carrying the Gospel into that country.

At that time there was no liberty for either the distribution of the Word or the preaching of the Gospel openly; but when, shortly afterwards, religious liberty was proclaimed, other servants of Christ entered by that open door, and centres of Gospel effort were established in Barcelona, Madrid, and other places. For over twenty years, as you and many of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN will remember, Mr. Geo. Lawrence continued in the work, labouring at Madrid, but principally at Barcelona, with much blessing to many souls. But there are many parts of Spain yet untouched, and, having in mind the great need that exists in the province of La Mancha, I have recently been permitted to erect a hall, with small house adjoining, at the town of Criptana, where there is a station on the Alicant Railway; where many have been and can be gathered to hear the Gospel from the surrounding districts. My object in writing is to say, that as Mr. Lawrence is now ready to resume work in Spain, I propose in a few weeks to accompany him to Criptana where he will remain to carry on the work, and where I trust he will have the sympathy, prayers, and fellowship of his brethren in both England and Spain. I may mention that our beloved and aged brother, R. C. Chapman, who has been intimately associated with the work in Spain from its commencement, is in full sympathy with our brother, George Lawrence, in this his intended new departure and service in Spain.

Any communications respecting this work may be made to Mr. T. S. Mark, The Laurels, Whetstone, London, N., or to, yours truly, Oriolet, Loughton, Essex. WILLIAM GREENE.

MISSION TO MILITIA ON HOUNSLOW HEATH.—During May and two following months three regiments of militia, numbering 2500 will be in camp. They will be Middlesex men, and many of them from the East-end of London. Packets of tracts, or any literature likely to make the mission successful, are earnestly asked, addressed (post paid) to Rev. Samuel Wesley, Hampton House, Hounslow.

ACHSAH'S REQUEST.

JOSHUA XV. 19.

BRAVELY Othniel had won her
By his warrior skill that day,
When in the dust before him
Proud Kirjath-Sepher lay.
Now she comes with richest dowry,
His promised bride to be,
Is her portion insufficient
To bring to such as he?

Then why so quickly move him
To ask another field!
Yea, haste herself to do it;
Caleb she knows will yield.
"What wouldest thou, my daughter?
A goodly land is thine,
Of sunny slope and fruitful vale,
Of pomegranate and vine!"

"True, father, thou hast given me
A sunny, southern land,
But still one other blessing
I crave for at thy hand.
Give to me springs of water,
A constant, full supply,
Lest in some future day of drought
My vines should droop and die."

And not in vain she pleaded;
He gave her all she sought,
"The upper and the nether springs,"
With richest blessing fraught.

. . . . .

Can we not say with Achsah
Our heritage is fair?
With golden opportunities
And privileges rare.
But the fairest fields unwatered
Will soon be parched and dry,
Have we then sought the secret springs
Where all true blessings lie?

Have we claimed the glorious fulness
Laid up in Christ above?
Do we fill our vessels daily
At the fountain of his love?
Do we know the deep indwelling
Of the Holy Spirit's power,
The wasted energies of life
Renewing hour by hour?

For to everyone that asketh
God giveth of his store,
And the fulness of the blessing
May be ours for evermore.

THE Br. AND For. BIBLE SOCIETY.

THE yearly reports which are now being received give full and interesting details of Bible work in every part of the world. In none is there a more sorrowful background than in that from the flooded districts of China. In December last, Mr. T. Paton, writing home from Chefoo, said: "The awful misery I have seen these last two years haunts and oppresses me night and day. Notwithstanding the sore trials and persecution, the native church is increasing very rapidly. Personally I have seen the influence and power of our Bible work to be such that I am confident it will be foremost in the great means and agencies employed to give the knowledge of the Saviour to the nations of the earth. There are thousands of seeking souls in China who are daily seen doing their best to be and to live holy; and to such our Scriptures are silent messengers of salvation, instruction, and peace."

In the report of the Society for 1888, which has been issued in an attractive popular form, thirty pages are devoted to China, replete with interest to all who are concerned in the spiritual welfare of the vast awakening empire of the East.

DR. PENTECOST IN GLASGOW.

Cowcaddens Free Church, where aggressive work has been carried on for six years without intermission, occupies a central position in the northern district of the city. When Dr. Pentecost began his work there on February 25 there was manifest expectation of blessing. Before the hour of meeting the large church was crowded in every part, there being fully 1150 people present, among them evidently a large number of the poor, with which the district abounds. The church has been filled every night. The whole work has been characterised by the powerful individuality of the man, as well as by the Holy Ghost. In Cowcaddens alone there are upwards of fifty soul-winners and 400 workers, and it was quite an education for all of these to see how the Doctor handled the after-meeting from night to night, varying his method, and thus giving vitality and interest to the work. He calls for every inquirer taking such personal action by stepping to the front as shall show that they mean what they are doing, and the results certainly justify this.

The blessing has been real, as it has been abundant. Only a very few cases in all have been unsatisfactory, so far as the reports show. Many are troubled as to what is to be done with the masses. There need be no doubt nor difficulty about the matter. Let the churches unitedly, prayerfully, and unceasingly carry forward such aggressive work as this, upon which the Lord has set his seal, and the question is settled. On the Sabbath forenoons Dr. Pentecost preached in the Barony Parish Church (Dr. Lang's) and St. George's-road United Presbyterian Church. We have learned to esteem him very highly in love for his work's sake. He is a man of real power, and mighty in the Scriptures. We have but one regret, and that is the shortness of the mission—only a fortnight. Yet our hearts rejoice at the Lord's goodness to his servant, and to us through him.

William Ross.

DR. CUYLER, of Brooklyn, hopes to visit this country in June next.

THE GOVERNESSES' INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION, PARIS, exists for the purpose of helping young girls from other countries desirous of finding situations as teachers. The English part of the work is carried on by Miss Osborne, 65, Avenue de Neuilly, Seine, who is at home every Wednesday after three o'clock, in order to see ladies who may wish for a personal interview. Miss Osborne is endeavouring to establish a sick and provident fund in connection with the Association, and will welcome any help that may be sent her for this purpose.

BISHOP TAYLOR.—In a recent letter to a fellow-worker, Bishop Taylor, of Central Africa, says:—"I laboured last summer at twenty camp meetings; I had sixteen conferences and a great deal of preaching besides. I never had a heavier campaign in my life, but the Lord helped me through all right. My wife and four sons are getting on nicely in California. I had four Sabbaths in California; my son Ross has had, and is having, great success on his circuit. I have to man our vacant stations on the West Coast, and shall remain in Liberia three or four months."

DORKING.—Mr. A. H. Brace, superintendent of the Distributing Boys' Home, Toronto, Canada, in connection with Mr. J. W. C. Fegan's rescue work in London, having returned home to take out another 100 boys, visited Dorking, the former sphere of his work, where he laboured as missionary for nine years. Various meetings were held, when much power and the presence of the Lord were abundantly realised, and the large number of old friends who rallied round Mr. Brace proved that his former labours had not been in vain in the Lord. A deeply interesting and graphic account was given one evening of the work amongst the boys in Canada, showing how they have been taken from London street life and placed in Canadian farms, where they are now happy, earning good wages, and in a great number of cases living Christian lives.

A WORKERS' WEDDING.

The even tenour of the good work that goes on at the Home of Industry was happily broken in upon last week by the excitement that always attends a wedding. On Thursday morning, in the adjoining Baptist Church, Mr. William H. Merry and Miss Maria Granger were joined in the holy bonds of matrimony, in the presence of a goodly company of friends and well-wishers. The bridegroom, who is the third son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Merry, has for fourteen years been an able helper in the work of his aunt, Miss Macpherson, both here and in Canada; he has crossed the ocean with twenty-five parties of young emigrants. The bride has actively worked for several years at the Hackney Home, and in other branches of the Mission. Her special department has been the training of the girls rescued and sent out to Canada from time to time. In this she has been much blessed, and has been the instrument of winning many young hearts to Christ. In their new relationship we wish and pray for them many years of happy service on behalf of the young lives that may be entrusted to their care.

The nuptial knot was tied by Rev. Harvey Smith, the ceremony being one of the simplest, and the appointments of the most unpretending kind. Miss Granger was married in her travelling attire. At the chapel were many of the workers—old as well as new, the children of the Hackney Home, and a number of the poorer friends in the neighbourhood, who are brought under the influence of the Mission. Miss Macpherson was unfortunately suffering from sore throat, and was not able to go to the chapel at the early hour of eight, but she was one of the large company that afterwards greeted the young couple in the Home of Industry. Her tender, pleading voice was heard in prayer for the married pair, and also for the band of eighty promising lads that started with them an hour afterwards, as a novel bodyguard on their wedding trip to Canada. Many of the friends companied them to Euston Station to speak the last good-byes, and wish them bon voyage. The party sailed from Liverpool the same afternoon in the Parisian.

ORPHAN AND DESTITUTE CHILDREN, to the number of over 130, have from time to time been placed under the care of Mrs. M. Parsons, superintendent of the Home, Eastfield House, Hoe-street, Walthamstow. From 30 to 35 little ones can be accommodated in the Home. All who are taken in are instructed in domestic arts, and carefully trained to a godly life. Hitherto much blessing has been vouchsafed to Mrs. Parsons' endeavours. In a few cases children are partially maintained by friends; but most of the inmates are dependent upon the offerings of the Lord's people.

THE ASILO EVANGELICO is an important centre of Gospel work in Florence. Upwards of fifteen years ago, Dr. Comandi, discarding the Roman Catholic faith, turned his earnest attention to succouring the orphan boys of the city. In dependence upon God, he has ever since carried on a growing work. Conducted on the family system, his institution has proved of great practical use, and his unremitting endeavours to lead the people to Christ have also been greatly blessed. The boys are educated and trained to trades, and there are day and Sunday-schools in flourishing activity. Both Dr. Comandi, and a devoted fellow-labourer with him, were led to thinking about their relation to God by the death of their wives; but in each case grace was given to enable them to see their all in Christ, and their life's pleasure in working for the salvation of others. Among other agencies may be mentioned sewing classes for women, and a crèche for infants; while the hungry are fed as means will allow, and the Gospel is continually presented to all who will hear. The institution is as an oasis in a desert place, and Mr. J. E. Mathieson, of Mildmay, may be named as one of many English gentlemen able to testify as to its worth. Help towards carrying on the work will be gladly acknowledged by Mrs. F. B. Smythe, 16, The Grove, Blackheath-hill, London, S.E.

WHO THIS DAY?

"Who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?"—1 Chron. xxix. 5.

Oh! who this day will rejoicing say,
With a grateful heart and free,
"Thou King Divine, my life shall be thine:
I consecrate all to Thee"?

We daily give and we daily live
For some object near the heart:
Some purpose bold, some name that we hold,
Where the gushing life-springs start.

But, oh, 'tis wise when the heart can rise
And carry its wealth away
Where the angels fall. He deserveth all
That we at his feet can lay.

The question rings where his bounty flings
Heaven's light o'er a pathway dim—
Oh, who this day will gratefully say,
"I consecrate all to Him"?

Will no young heart, in life's busy mart,
Start up at the heavenly voice,
And humbly make for the Saviour's sake
The vow of a holy choice?

Will no rich soul, where the wealth heaps roll,
Respond to the tender call,
And give the store they have counted o'er
To Him who has granted all?

'Tis strange indeed that the Lord should need
Such service as we can give;
But if He bows to accept our vows,
Oh, yield what his hands receive.

The question rings from the King of kings,
Whose gifts have by far outdone
The gifts we place on his throne of grace:
We give to the Giving One.

A life that serves, where a love deserves
The life and the love we give,
Is a life sublime, on the fields of time,
A life it is sweet to live.

Then who this day will rejoicing say,
With a grateful heart and free,
"Thou King Divine, my life shall be thine:
I consecrate all to Thee"?

William Luff.

[Copies of this hymn may be had gratis from Mr. R. B. Pim, 18, Tomb-street, Belfast, by sending addressed and stamped wrapper.]

THE SPEZIA MISSION.—Mr. Edward Clarke continues his faithful testimony. In a recent report he records the conversion of a man who was previously an earnest devotee of Rome. As an evangelist, this man has been called upon to endure much for Christ's sake. Once when efforts were made to diminish his zeal, he exclaimed, "Who can be calm when one sees the English leaving their country to preach the truth to us, while there are among our own countrymen those who are seeking to deceive us? Who could have thought that strangers should love us better than our own countrymen?" Mr. Clarke says that in the present condition of Italy, especially in its northern sections, wealthy, large-hearted Christians might speedily become as a river of consolation to the long neglected, the desolate, and the languishing.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For great blessing upon a special mission to children and young people in the Gospel Hall, Southgate-road, Wood Green, N., to be conducted by Mr. Josiah Spiers, commencing on Monday next, and to be continued until April 5.——For blessing on a mission at St. Andrew's Church, New Kent-road, S.E., by Rev. Joseph Potter, of Londonderry, March 24 to 31.——For blessing on a special mission in the Christian Mission-hall, Middle Market-road, Great Yarmouth, March 24 to April 4.——For blessing on a fortnight's evangelistic meetings at Brechin, N.B., commencing March 24, in connection with Forfarshire Christian Union.——For blessing on special services being held by Mr. John Elliott, evangelist, at Llantrissant (near Cardiff).——M. F. writes:—Though I am the woman that was a sinner, yet my heart rejoices in my salvation through the blood of Jesus. Pray that our heavenly Father will, in his own time and way, be mercifully pleased to give me a place in some Christian home, with kind, loving friends to help and guide me through the remainder of a weary pilgrimage.

OBITUARY.

PROFESSOR GOADBY, NOTTINGHAM.

REV. T. GOADBY, B.A., President of the Baptist College, Nottingham, expired on Saturday last, after a brief illness. The author of several religious works, and an able translator of German theological literature, he twice occupied the chair of the General Baptist Association, and has filled the office of President of the Baptist College during the last sixteen years. The Professor was in his sixtieth year.

REV. DR. PORTER, OF BELFAST.

The well-known President of Queen's College, Belfast, died on Saturday morning last, from an attack of congestion of the brain. Born at Burt, county Donegal, in 1823, he spent a short period as pastor of a Presbyterian Church in Newcastle-on-Tyne, and afterwards went to Damascus, as a missionary to the Jews. He remained several years in the East, travelling a great deal, and writing "The Giant Cities of Bashan," and other very useful books. Returning to Ireland, in 1859, he was appointed Professor of Biblical Criticism in the Assembly's College. He was chosen Moderator of the General Assembly in 1875, and appointed President of Queen's College four years later, a position which he held until his end came. A son-in-law and biographer of the celebrated Rev. Dr. Cooke, the deceased was a man of high character and many talents, and his loss is widely mourned in Ireland.

MR. F. S. ARNOT, and those who are accompanying him to Central Africa, were bid a loving farewell at a meeting held on Saturday last, in the Waterloo Rooms, Glasgow. Each delivered a brief address, the narratives of the manner in which the way of the new workers had been providentially opened up, being followed by rapt attention by a large audience.

CHELSEA PREVENTIVE AND RESCUE HOME deserves to be widely known and well supported. On examining the last annual report I was surprised to find that, with an income of only £230, 159 cases had been cared for—ninety-four rescue and sixty-five preventive. Who can rightly estimate the effect of sixty-five lives sheltered from the power of sin? Were there no other result of this work, it is surely enough to move the heart of many to help forward this deserving effort. The hon. sec. is Mr. J. W. Hopwood, at the "Home," 28 and 30, Margaretta-terrace, King's-road, Chelsea, London, S.W. D. M.

SWEDEN.—Madame de Ramsay, writing from Jönköping, Wilhelmsro, gives an account of interesting work among women and girls. She has started a branch of the Blue Ribbon Society, and thus secured the influence of the women against the drink traffic. "With regard to the young," she writes, "I would recommend that much more attention were shown to the girls between twelve and fifteen, that they might be drawn into the Y.W.C.A., and taught knitting, weaving, spinning, and other useful arts. Our girls finish in the Board-schools at the age of twelve, but the mills do not take them in until they are fifteen. Among us weaving with hand-looms and spinning with wheels have not altogether ceased, and they afford interesting occupations to young people, as well as help in the development of good and natural tastes." Madame de Ramsay would be thankful for magic-lantern slides, even though a little rubbed and worn. Miss Hornbuckle, 3, Alexandra-villas, Brighton, will gladly forward them.

ROUND THE LONDON PARKS.—The good work done in Hyde-park and Regent's-park by the missionary of the London Y.W.C.A. and her helpers has deepened and increased in usefulness during the past year. A report just published, to be had from Miss Weitbrecht, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, W., gives a number of cases of young people being rescued when on the verge of ruin. Many a girl, friendless and alone, has by this agency been helped to get a situation, or placed in respectable homes, while not a few have been induced to join the Y.W.C.A., the advantages of which they have speedily come to value highly. The workers have been much cheered in their difficult task, and among the various means of testifying for Christ they specially mention the distribution of booklets which friends have kindly placed at their disposal. Nearly all the cases in which young women are helped to leave evil companions and vicious surroundings involve the expenditure of money, so that practical sympathy with this effort will be very welcome.

WOMEN AND CHURCH RULE.

AN American correspondent writes:—

Last year, at the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, convened in New York, certain sisters claimed the right of representation as lay delegates. It was decided that, without change in the restrictive rules of the Church, women could not be admitted as delegates to that body. Later the Council of Women which met in Washington advised all women "to withdraw from any church where the pastors upheld the action of the Methodist General Conference."

Miss Willard, president of the National W.C.T.U., in her annual address before that Convention, said: "Letters and consultation with men and women high in church circles develop a plan like this: An organisation to be formed, called the Church Union, made up of those who are unwilling longer to leave inoperative the protest of their souls against a government of the Church by its ministry. This Church Union to be open to any and all who submit to the Apostles' Creed and the triple pledge of total abstinence, anti-tobacco, and social purity." In the same paper Miss Willard said: "Women are, if possible, even more to blame than men that they are so discounted in the Church, as well as State, at this late day. A majority of men in this country have so far outgrown the ignorant notion of this divine right of men to rule over women that, if we had but the courage of conviction and that dignity that ought to mark us as daughters of the Lord God Almighty, men would, within a twelvemonth, seat us beside themselves upon the throne of Government in Church and State, ruling the world jointly, as He meant they should when, as the Bible says, 'He gave them dominion.'"

"OUR VILLAGES" is a booklet in which Mr. Leonard Weaver gives an account of work in which he engaged around Leominster during November and December last. He pleads for the establishment of a Village Unsectarian Evangelistic Mission. Copies of the report may be had from the Orphans' Printing Press, Broad-street, Leominster.

THE DUBLIN UNITED SERVICES COMMITTEE works on a broad evangelical basis, and its efforts in various directions have been fruitful of encouraging results. The mission held last autumn, after the Convention, did not secure the amount of financial aid which the Committee anticipated, and, as a consequence, the funds have ever since been embarrassed. Mr. J. R. Fowler, 6, Duncairn-terrace, Bray, Dublin, is the treasurer.

NAPLES.—The friends connected with the Strangers' Rest have arranged to publish a monthly English paper, The Herald, to be distributed in the hotels on the Continent, and on board passenger steamers bound for the East. The object will be to promote moral and religious movements, and to maintain truth and righteousness, in the love of Christ, without controversy. Details may be had from Mr. Stephen Burrowes, 15, Flavia Goija, Naples.

A USEFUL EXPERIMENT is proceeding in Naples, under the auspices of the Waldensian Church, aided by the Waldensian Church Missions in Italy Society. Outside a ground-floor room, and visible from the Principe Umberto-square, near the railway station, is the inscription, "Conferenze Religiose." Meetings are held three times a week. On Friday, Pastor G. Pons, the director of the work, is delivering a series of popular lectures, on "Jesus Christ; his Foes and his Friends." The work has gone on for a little over a year; and Signor Pons says that seven of his present catechumens first heard the Gospel at these meetings.

MARTIN FROBISHER.

EAST-END EMIGRATION FUND.—During last year, 319 persons were assisted by this fund to get to one or other of the British colonies. Of this number 109 joined friends in Canada, who had been previously sent out by the help of the fund. The average cost per head was £3 17s., of which the applicants and their friends found £1 16s. 4d. It is proposed to raise the cost somewhat, so that emigrants may be provided with a larger sum than hitherto for use on landing. Canadian clergymen and others have formed committees in several large centres, and it is hoped that the endeavours of the fund will, by their assistance, be still more successfully carried out. Copies of the report may be had from the office 160, Mile End-road, E.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

SCATTERED SWISS PROTESTANTS IN CHILI are exciting the compassion of several of the Continental Churches. Their cause has recently been advocated in Neuchâtel, and proposals for itinerating missionaries have been cordially received on many hands.

RURUTU, one of the islands of Oceania, has a population of 750, of whom 311 are church members. A generation ago cannibalism reigned in the island; now there are three places of worship, and the people subscribe towards evangelising the heathen in "regions beyond."

MR. JOHN H. MAC VICAR, a son of Principal Mac Vicar, of the Presbyterian Theological College, Montreal, is being sent out as a missionary to China under the Canadian Presbyterian Foreign Missions Board, at the expense of the congregation of Crescent-street Presbyterian Church, Montreal.

SPAIN.—A Bible colporteur in the province of Biscay recently came upon a party of Romish collegians, with a Jesuit at their head. "Down with the heretic!" cried the leader, and in an instant the defenceless man was in the power of the angry company. A bonfire was then made of his Bibles, Testaments, and tracts. "All that was required," says a Continental contemporary, "to make the work more meritorious, was that the fanatics should put the man in the middle! Let us say to their honour that, though they may have had the thought, they did not carry their action so far as that."

THE EVANGELICAL MOVEMENT IN FRANCE increases alike in depth and breadth. Le Témoin de la Vérité records substantial progress in several of the western departments. The Gospel finds many sympathetic hearers in districts which have been regarded as strongholds of Romanism. A new Protestant temple is about to be opened at Charenton, near Paris. There was some two centuries ago a building here capable of holding several thousand people, but its demolition was commenced on the very day of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, in 1685. However, the times have greatly and happily changed, and an earnest endeavour is now being put forth to recover the old position at Charenton.

A YEAR'S WORK IN THE MYSORE.—The missionaries of the Wesleyan Mission in Mysore have lately held their annual meeting for the review of the past year's work. It has been the largest conference they have yet held, there being eleven European missionaries present and eight native ministers. The tone of the Conference has been good—distinctly hopeful and aggressive. Surely there was sufficient reason for it. We have reached and passed the first thousand in the church membership, a goal towards which we have been slowly striving for a long time. The full number of members is now 1103, being an increase during the year of 113. There has been no spasmodic outburst of revival power, but in most of the stations there has been steady growth. Perhaps the largest net increase has been in Mysore city, where thirty-four have been added to the church. In the boys' schools there is an increase of 426, and in the girls' schools an increase of 329. Sunday-schools are growing satisfactorily, and in the temperance societies there is an addition of 172 members. There have been fifty-six baptisms of adults from heathenism, some of which are full of interest.—The Harvest Field.

THE RELIEF OF MARITIME DISTRESS.—The Lord Mayor being unable to start a fund for the relief of the many widows and orphans left in destitution through the recent loss in the North Sea, with all hands, of fourteen fishing-vessels belonging to Grimsby, Yarmouth, and Hull, an urgent appeal is made on behalf of the "Special Disaster Fund" of the Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Royal Benevolent Society. The secretary (Mr. W. R. Buck) explains that every penny of the money thus given will be handed over or directly disbursed for the full benefit of the sufferers, the Society defraying the cost of working expenses, and the executive holding itself responsible for the administration of the fund. The central offices of the Society are at Sailors' Home-chambers, Dock-street, E.

ENGLAND'S GREAT NATIONAL SINS.—Rev. Mark Guy Pearse presided on Tuesday afternoon at the prayer-meeting at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate-street Without, when the opium traffic was made the subject of humble confession before God, and prayer was offered for wisdom and help in efforts to terminate the evil. Mr. Pearse spoke on the criminal apathy of Christians in relation to the traffic, and showed the great need for righteous activity on the part of the Church at the present time. He also quoted figures to show that the consumption of opium is making rapid strides in our own country. Dr. Maxwell, Messrs. J. E. Mathieson, B. Broomhall, and D. McLaren, made some remarks on special phases of the traffic and the present agitation, and God was earnestly asked to raise up powerful men to lead a great movement, whereby the English people may be duly instructed in their solemn duty in this important matter.

The Book World.

Christ and Society.

Social Christianity. By Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. A volume of sermons delivered in St. James's Hall, London. Mr. Hughes holds that, in our reaction from mediæval ecclesiasticism, we have gone too far. "We have," he says, "practically neglected the fact that Christ came to save the nation as well as the individual, and that it is an essential feature of his mission to reconstruct human society on a basis of justice and love." Twenty in number, these vigorous sermons are an attempt to show that what must be called the social failure of Christianity is not the fault of Christianity or of Christ, but rather the result of Christians having been selfishly individualistic. The great evils of our day, and especially those of our own country, are brought to view with much directness, and the duties and responsibilities of disciples of Christ are enforced with plainness and power. Whether the subject be social distress, the administration of justice, Christ's authority, or the problem of unbelief, we find these pages uniformly practical, and in a high degree instructive. Christianity is amply shown to be not an ethical system merely, but a new life. We sincerely trust these sermons will prove as useful in this collected form, as they were helpful to many who heard them when originally delivered.

MISCELLANEOUS.

An admirably neat and cheap edition of Dr. Andrew Thomson's Life of Samuel Rutherford has been issued by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton. There are few volumes in the whole cycle of sacred biography better fitted to feed the flame of holy meditation, and it is now placed within the reach of everybody.

Do versus Done; or, Salvation is all the Work of God. This is a timely little book on the free Gospel of God, that cannot fail to be profitable to any who will carefully read it. As the title shows, it is prepared specially for those who vainly try to save themselves by their own works. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, N.B. 6d. per dozen.

Poor Relief in Foreign Countries, and Out-door Relief in England. By Louisa Twining. Cassell & Co. A Guardian of the Poor herself, the author has long made a study of the administration of the poor laws. This book deals briefly with a great problem, and is certainly worthy the attention of social reformers.

Pen Pictures from the Life of Christ. By Rev. John Cullen, M.A. R. D. Dickinson. We are not disposed to give this volume a very high place among published sermons. Though sound in doctrine, earnest in tone, and devout in spirit, it displays neither depth nor freshness of thought. The style, too, wants more brightness and vigour.

Scribner's Magazine for March contains articles on a great variety of subjects, from the practical questions of the railway mail service to the subtilties of economy in mental work, with an abundance of fiction and papers on topics of contemporary interest, several of them richly illustrated in a manner sustaining the reputation made by this magazine for strong and original art work.

Young People's Prayer Meetings. By Rev. F. E. Clark. 1s. Sunday School Union. A very useful treatise on an important subject. The author is president of the United States Society of Christian Endeavour, and he deals with prayer-meeting arrangements in practice as well as in theory. Some four hundred topics for consideration at prayer-meetings are given in an appendix.

Castle Building. By Rev. Gordon Calthrop, M.A. 3s. 6d. Hunt & Co. This volume comprises a series of "Lectures on Home Subjects" of an eminently practical character. Among the subjects treated of are "Family Duties," "Little Things," "Newspapers and Novels," "Manliness," "Gossip," &c., and these are dealt with in a masterly way, which rivets the attention of the reader and sends the arrows home.

Media. By Zénaïde A. Ragozin. 5s. T. F. Unwin. The same pen that supplied "Chaldea" and "Assyria" to the "Story of the Nations" series, has now contributed the remarkably interesting history of Media, Babylon, and Persia. This handy volume admirably covers the entire period from the fall of Nineveh to the Persian war, and includes a study of the Zend-Avesta, or religion of Zoroaster. The book is fully illustrated, and occasionally an interesting side-light is thrown upon Old Testament history.

Rev. Dr. Saphir's address to the members and friends of the Open-Air Mission on "What is Implied in Preaching Christ?" has been published in pamphlet form. It need hardly be said that every page contains fundamental teaching forcibly expressed. Stimulating in a high degree to those who heard it, this comprehensive and practical address will, we trust, be instrumental of much good to the thousands who may read it. (1d. Morgan & Scott.)

Methodism: A Parallel. By William A. Quick. T. Woolmer. To demonstrate that Methodism is Apostolic Christianity is the interesting and difficult task this book is intended to accomplish. Various readers will form different conclusions as to its success. The author certainly does succeed in giving some interesting episodes in the early history of Methodism, and in establishing some sort of parallel between these and the experiences of the Apostolic Church; but probably other denominations could find equally striking points of similarity. All readers will thank him for his facts, and perhaps Methodist readers will accept his conclusion.

Socialism and Christianity. By Rev. M. Kaufmann. 4d. Religious Tract Society. This is No. 59 of the "Present Day Tracts" series. After a lucid explanation of Socialist tenets and aims, the author temperately exposes the fallacies of the system. He sums up by showing that Christianity contains principles which, if fully carried out, would solve in the best manner all the problems with which Socialism deals; while, in the work of Divine redemption, it furnishes the motive, and, in the agency of the Holy Spirit, the powers which are wholly lacking in political Socialism. This is a capital tract, evidently the work of a practical and well-informed writer.

A Gauntlet to the Theologian and Scientist. By Thos. Clarke. 5s. Frederic Norgate. A retired physician and a member of the Church of England, the author of this singular book traverses the psychology of the theologian, and the unbelief of the scientist. Personally, he glories in Christ and the things pertaining to his redeeming work. The book is an argument for what is commonly known as "conditional immortality," conducted on distinctly novel lines, as the author's psychology is peculiar. The style is easy, but somewhat discursive, some heavy blows being dealt on the one hand at philosophic doubt, and on the other hand at modern Romanising tendencies.

The Written Word. By. S. G. Green. 2s. 6d. Sunday School Union. A new edition of a very useful book, devoted to the consideration of the contents and interpretation of Holy Scripture. It is undoubtedly from an imperfect apprehension of what the Bible really is, that many to-day question and reject it. Dr. Green not only examines the causes of perplexity and the grounds of unbelief, but brings forward facts and truths in abundances and with excellent effect, to establish the thing, most surely believed among evangelical Christians in regard to the Book and its story. There is a useful chapter on the Revised Version. The book will prove of great service to thoughtful young people.

The Theological Monthly. Nisbet & Co. The second issue of this new serial contains able and interesting articles upon topics of present importance contributed by several well-known writers. "The Döllinger-Reusch History of the Intestine Conflict on Morals in the Church of Rome" is reviewed by Rev. Wm. Arthur, in a valuable and instructive article. This deservedly occupies the first position, especially because of the information it contains. There is strong reason for getting the clearest light possible upon the moral—or immoral—teachings of the Jesuits. Prebendary Reynolds defines a miracle, and gives proof of it. Chinese literature is treated by Dr. Edkins in an article evidencing much careful research. A prophetic article by Canon Fausset on "The Signs of the Times" is specially interesting and important. There are few writers who can treat so clearly, and so wisely, the doctrine of our Lord's Second Advent. By a comparison of God's Word with the present events of God's providence, the Canon shows that there are many signs of the end to which the wise should give heed. The mistakes of Mr. Leslie Stephen's article on "Belief and Conduct," which appeared in The Nineteenth Century, are well exhibited in a brief article by Mr. J. Gregory Smith. Cremation is defended by Sir T. Spencer Wells; and Mr. James Neil contributes an interesting notice of Handclapping in Palestine. For variety, and ability, and interest, this issue is to be commended.

Wycliffe and Movements for Reform. By Reginald Lane Poole. Another volume of the "Epochs of Church History" series. It is not a eulogy of Wycliffe or his work, but a historical study of actions and tendencies, conducted in a singularly impartial spirit. Perhaps scant credit is given to Wycliffe for high motives and spiritual purposes, but, on the whole, the book is both lucid and useful. Church history is rapidly traced during a period of two hundred years, ending with the Council of Lateran at the beginning of the sixteenth century. (2s. 6d. Longmans & Co.)

The Four Gospels in One. By Rev. John Mostyn. 3s. Bible Christian Book Room. Many have at various times taken in hand the task of constructing a continuous Gospel narrative on a chronological arrangement. The work is not easy, and the result depends largely upon the judgment of the consolidator. Mr. Mostyn seems to have exercised good judgment in cases of chronological difficulty, and his work shows a careful hand throughout. The sub-divisions are always helpful, and by marginal references the reader is always kept informed as to the source of the passage under his eye. Indexes and tables add to the usefulness of a handbook which students and ordinary readers will alike find very serviceable.

Cogitations and Conclusions. By O. F. Routh. 4s. 6d. Elliot Stock. The author assumes a position of humility when he describes this as "a commonplace book of passing thoughts." Commonplace his thoughts are not. They teem with a freshness and power that impart considerable value to his work, which is the result of wide experience and keen observation during a long life. We have but one complaint to make. The preface informs us that "the 'Cogitations' have been put down just about as they occurred to the mind, with little attention to elegance, and none at all to order and connection." This is a pity; the "Index of Subjects" should have been more concise and alphabetically arranged. But perhaps that which is found with difficulty is valued the more. Certainly the brief thoughts on no less than 838 subjects which this book contains are worth studying, and none could read them without feeling thankful that a life so long spared has been used to such good advantage for the instruction and the good of others.

Security. By G. F. Trench. A booklet giving the substance of addresses intended to meet the case of those who, having found pardon and acceptance in Christ, yet fear that they may ultimately be lost. (J. F. Shaw & Co.)

The Inspiration of the Scriptures. By Rev. P. Reynolds. 3d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street. This is a vigorous statement of the grounds of entire confidence in the Bible as a revelation of the mind and will of God.

Investment Hints. By Maurice C. Hime, LL.D. 6d. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. An eminently practical little book. The author is headmaster of Foyle College, Londonderry, and he has dedicated these pages of sensible counsel to his "Old Boys."

Two Sides of a Picture: What God does with our Sins, and what our Sins will bring upon us. Compiled by C. E. Gowan. A very useful booklet, clearly presenting essential Scripture truth. (1d. T. Hamblen, 16, The Higher Parade, Leamington Spa.)

Be Manly Christians. By Rev. J. T. Wrenford. 6d. per dozen. Partridge & Co. This is a satirical poem on the question of "Amusements." It is dec dedly "smart," though, perhaps, too comprehensive. We hope it will accomplish the purpose for which it is written.

Noah and her Sisters is the curious title of a little book, which contains much practical instruction and exhortation as to the way of life and the Christian's walk. It is by the late Rev. J. Metcalfe White, of Tisbury, Wilts., and is published by Partridge & Co. 2d.

Cookery for Working Men's Wives. 3d. Paisley: Alexander Gardner. A useful compilation for people of limited means. It contains recipes by Martha H. Gordon, as given in the domestic economy classes instituted at Govan by Mrs. John Elder. There are also some useful hints on washing and sanitation.

The Mission of the Church and the Conditions of Success. By Rev. William Crosbie. Here are notes of two sermons preached at Clifton-road Church, Brighton, in January last. The need for hearty co-operation between preacher and people in the work of winning souls if strongly urged. (2d. D. B. Friend, 77, Western-road Brighton.)

Man's Debt to Man. By Rev. Alex. Martin. Edinburgh: Macniven & Wallace. This is a sermon recently preached to the Edinburgh University Arts Students' Christian Association. Truths which sadly require wider recognition are set forth with much power. The responsibilities of riches, culture, and Christianity are specially dwelt upon.

Homes for Working Boys.—The Corporation of London have made a grant of one hundred guineas to the funds of the Homes for Working Boys in London, which sum has been supplemented by a like amount from Mr. Horace Brooks Marshall.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the Union, and take its Monthly Notes, which are different from these.

SUNDAY, MARCH 24.—Exodus XVII.

How wonderful that the people should chide thus, when so recently they had beheld such marvellous interpositions on their behalf. It would be incomprehensible, unless we had often acted in a similar manner, forgetting the goodness of the past under the pressure of some sudden need (Ps. lxviii. 19, 20). All these trials were permitted to test their hearts, and to afford them opportunities of learning the abundant wealth of the Divine resources (Deut. viii. 2, 3). Trials are the occasions for the putting forth of the Divine power on our behalf.

The smitten rock is the evident type of Christ (1 Cor. x. 4). He is the Rock of Ages, who was cleft and smitten for us on the cross by the nails and spear; and out of Him there have flowed the gracious influences of the Holy Spirit, who could not be given in his fulness until the bitter passion of the cross was over. We may all not only drink of the water, but have it within us, springing up into everlasting life (John iv. 14).

This chiding of the people is referred to more than once in after Scripture (Deut. vi. 16; Heb. iii. 8). We need to be very careful not to allow ourselves to murmur or chide, but to say "Yes" to God's appointments, and to believe that He does all things well.

Amalek is always a type of the flesh. He was the grandson of Esau, who was sensual (Gen. xxxvi. 12). It was a treacherous nomad tribe (Deut. xxv. 18). We may be redeemed by blood, but we may expect conflict and perpetual war (16). We are not in the flesh, but the flesh is in us. But victory is sure, if only we will let the Lord fight for us. The attitude which wins the victory is that of the bended knee and the uplifted hand. The Spirit of God lusts against the flesh, so that we may not do as we otherwise would (Gal. v. 17).

MONDAY, MARCH 25.—Exodus XVIII.

A joyful meeting.—How humble Moses was in attributing all the glory of the Exodus to Jehovah (1, 8, 9, 10). This is the sure cure of pride. When we recount the mighty triumphs with which we may have been associated, let us carefully give all the honour and glory to God. And, indeed, what are we but weapons and instruments, who are no more able to accomplish aught of ourselves than an axe lying at the tree-foot, or the dry jawbone of an ass (Isa. x. 15; 1 Cor. i. 27)?

The names of Moses' sons betray the drift of his thoughts when in the wilderness-exile of his shepherd life. May we ever remember that we are strangers here, and that our only help is in God.

The appointment of the elders is described more in detail in Numb. xi. 10, &c. We find there not only that Jethro instigated Moses, but that Moses himself was complaining. He seemed to feel as if he were called on to carry the whole people. But this was not the case (Exod. xix. 4). And he came to see more clearly in after days that it was not so, but that stronger arms than his were beneath (Deut. xxxiii. 27). How very careful should we be of the advice we give, lest it chime in with the unexpressed mood of some friend, and lead him further than he would have thought of going. In this case no new spirit was bestowed, but some of the spirit which was on Moses was taken from him and placed on these men (Numb. xi. 16, 17). If we can trust God utterly, rolling our burdens on Him, there is nothing too heavy for us to bear, for the weight rests not on us, but Him. Let us cultivate the habit of rolling off our burdens on to God as soon as they accrue, and we shall find that there is nothing too heavy for us, or which we cannot perform (18).

TUESDAY, MARCH 26.—Exodus XIX.

The plain beneath Sinai, where Israel encamped, has been clearly identified, and the reader should study the books of travellers that will give him a mental conception of the scene. The brilliant colours, in which red sandstone predominates; the shattered, thunder-stricken peaks; the awful silence; the utter absence of vegetation; the level plain on which the vast host encamped, in view of the Mount.

How tender was the Divine address to the people (4, 5, 6).—Nor are we excluded from these promises if we are the spiritual children of Abraham by faith (Rom. iv. 16). If God could bear three millions of people, He can us. We may be his peculiar treasure (Tit. ii. 14). We may inherit all things in Him (1 Cor. iii. 21). We may be his priestly kingdom (Rev. i. 6).

The solemn pledge of Israel (8) was a great mistake. They knew little of themselves, or they would never have made it. How could they dare affirm that they would obey all, when they did not even know what would be demanded of them. And from that moment God set Himself to show how impossible it is for man to stand before Him on the ground of obedience. It was a long process, and it has to be repeated with each individual man. There is a sense in which we all stand before Sinai, and each protests his ability to do all that is required, and has to learn his impotence.

The holiness of God was taught in object-lessons. The people must wash, the Mount must be fenced, the intruder must be stoned. Moses must be sent down twice (14, 21) to warn the people, and then he alone and Aaron may ascend. All was done to show the people by outward signs the vast distance between themselves and God. Thus did God teach men to understand the meaning of holiness. What a contrast exists between that dispensation and ours (Heb. xii. 18).

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 27.—Exodus XX.

The law was given by Moses, by the disposition of angels (John i. 17; Acts vii. 53). It tells us not what God is, that is only to be seen in Jesus; but what man ought to be. It is held up in the face of sinful men, as God's standard of perfect manhood, that they may learn to know themselves, and to see how infinitely short they come of it, and that they may be so emptied of all self-confidence as to be driven to the only hope of sinners in the unmerited grace of God (Rom. v. 20, vii. 9, &c.). So utterly unable is man to fulfil the law of God, by the weakness and evil of his nature, that the best man living must be under its curse (Gal. iii. 10). The law knows no mercy; one flaw in keeping its requirements is fatal.

The ten commandments are the embodiment, in a concise form, of Divine requirements which were in existence from the creation; and were written on the conscience of man (Rom. ii. 15). It is probable that the fourth is no exception to this. We should judge ourselves by these "ten words," that we be not judged. They are useful to us for purposes of self-examination. We may read their deeper meaning in Matt. v. They consist of the first table of duties to God, and of a second to man, and are capable of being gathered into two all-comprehending precepts (Mark xii. 29—31). And in a sense they focus into a single word (Gal. v. 14). Christ has fulfilled for us the requirements of the law, and borne for us the penalty of the broken law.

The law is not our ground or rule of life (Rom. vi. 14).—But we are under the law of love to Christ; and that law, being wrought in us by the grace of the Holy Spirit, produces in us the same results as would have been secured, if we had been perfectly able to obey the original requirements (Rom. x. 4).

The dread of the people (19).—This is graphically described in Deut. v. And yet God requires our worship (24), and purposes to meet us at the altar, if we approach in all humility, offering sacrifices of blood (Eph. ii. 13).

THURSDAY, MARCH 28.—Exodus XXI.

Here is the beginning of a code of laws, civil, political, ceremonial, which were afterwards given in detail in the Book of Deuteronomy. There is a great difference between the moral law, which is eternal as God, and is written on all hearts, and the ceremonial and political law, which had a more limited range as pertaining to the history of Israel. It was in great advance of all similar codes of that age, but it was far inferior to that of Christ. It was of no use to impose the highest Christian demands on these untutored people, but to lead them by gentle ascents from the grossness of Egypt and surrounding nations (Mark x. 4, 5).

The law of the Hebrew slave (2, &c.) is a beautiful lesson. He served at first, because there was no other way of wiping out his debt; but after, he served because he loved. He elected to remain in slavery for ever, and learnt perfect freedom. Love is the true source of service; and we, who determine to serve Christ, may ask to have our ear pierced to the door as his was, then shall the Son make us free indeed (Ps. xl. 6; John viii. 33). Our spirit is not "must I?" but "may I?"

The other laws of the female slave (8—11), of the treatment of acts of rude violence (12—27), of the disputes as to animals (28—36) are all very instructive, and rest upon principles of absolute justice, which a little thought will enable the reader to appreciate.

But the main conception of the Mosaic code is retaliation (23, 24, 25).—Our Lord Jesus Christ alluded to this (Matt. v. 38), and insisted that his own followers should adopt a higher code, that of merciful love, after the example of their Father. How well it is for us that He has not dealt with us on the principle of absolute justice, serving us as we have served Him and others (Ps. cxxx. 3). But what a picture do these laws give of the depravity of man's heart, which demanded them!

FRIDAY, MARCH 29.—Exodus XXII.

Restitution is one of the prime thoughts in this chapter (1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 12, &c.). Alas, that this is far from being recognised by us Christians as it should be. But it is the first sign of a genuine work of grace (Luke xix. 8). It is not enough to confess to God; we must also confess and make restitution to man. Men are very often kept from peace and trust, by their memory of some wrong, which they have not made right. But no amount of religious observance will compensate for the failure to adjust, so far as possible, the frauds of the past.

Mercy also shines in many of these enactments (21, 22, 26, 30). The graciousness of God (27) was a reason and motive why they should be tender and gentle in their dealings with strangers, the defenceless, and the poor. Infraction of these commands was severely alluded to in after days (Amos ii. 6, 7, 8). We seem to forget that God demands similar mercy of us towards the weak and poor, and nothing so greatly commends his children to Him (Ps. xli. 1; James i. 27).

God's nearness is taught. He hears any cry that is raised (23—27), and He comes near to avenge the cause of the poor. He was the invisible King of Israel (28, R.V.), who beheld each of his subjects with searching and minute inspection, judging the evil and the good, and interposing on the behalf of those who could not help themselves. This is the meaning of a Theocracy.

Holiness was his prime requirement. Here first is the demand, "Ye shall be holy men," which was destined to ring throughout the remaining books of Moses, and is the appeal of all Scripture (1 Peter i. 15). Holiness means separation from and to. When we yield ourselves only to God, we are weaned from, and lose our taste for, the things which once fascinated us (31).

SATURDAY, MARCH 30.—Exodus XXIII.

This chapter is full of sweet and profitable reading. Many of the laws breathe the spirit of the New Testament. Do we not sometimes raise and receive (1, marg.) false reports, and circulate them? Are we not all influenced by the opinions and actions of the multitude (2). Do we exert ourselves to help those whom we hate, in their conflict with difficulties (4, 5)? Are we always careful to keep our hands free of anything false, or bribes (7, 8)? Do we never take advantage of those who may not be as well acquainted with our methods or language (9)? Sometimes professing Christians take undue advantage of foreigners. Do we think enough of the poor, and of the rest required by our servants and animals (11, 12). Alas, too, how often we mention "chance," and "fate," and "Jove," and other names of heathen gods (13).

The three feasts are elsewhere mentioned at greater length (Lev. xxiii.) and are significant of certain great events in the story of redemption. The feast of passover speaks of the cross; the offering of the firstfruits of the resurrection; and the final feast of a completed harvest of Pentecost.

A precious promise closes these injunctions (20). That angel, with the attributes of God (21) still goes before us, to set us in the way of his steps, and to lead us to the many mansions prepared. Happy are they who keep behind Him, allowing Him to face all their spiritual foes (23), and who obey Him utterly. How tender is that thought of us which deals with us by littles (30). It is so that all noble character is built up. Obey in little things, and God will lead you into the very fulness of blessing (John xiv. 23).

THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY, says The Record, does not seem to have suffered from the criticisms of Canon Isaac Taylor. The flow of candidates for service in the foreign field, so far from being checked, has increased, and the total income is not likely to show any decrease when reported at the annual meeting in May.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, March 31. Review of the Quarter's Lessons.

Golden Text: Acts x. 38.

The incidents of the quarter's lessons admirably illustrate the Golden Text, in which, indeed, the Holy Spirit, in a brief verse, gives a biography of the whole life of Jesus. It is also specially valuable as connecting all that Jesus did with the anointing with the Holy Ghost and with power. See also Isa. lxi. 1; Luke iv. 18—21; Matt. xii. 28. The dependence of Jesus upon the Holy Ghost for wisdom and power was a feature of exceeding significance. How it enforces upon his servants the necessity of receiving the same Spirit!

"He went about."—See how this is illustrated by the quarter's lessons. While working chiefly in Galilee, and especially in Capernaum and its district, we have found Him in Gadara, in Cæsarea Philippi, to the extreme north of Palestine, down to the south-east in Perea, and in Jericho on his way to Jerusalem. He consulted not his own ease, nor his own popularity, but his Father's will (Mark i. 38), and the people's need. His rest was in unwearying service. Such is his method still as He continues his work through his servants by the power of the Holy Spirit. Diffusion, not centralisation, is the genius of the Gospel of Christ. Not now to the Jewish nation alone, but to "all nations" his servants are sent (Matt. xxviii. 19). The review may very properly have a missionary application.

"Doing good."—How this, too, is illustrated by the work in which we have seen the Saviour engaged. The statement that He healed "all that were oppressed of the devil" is suggestive. It will apply not only to the healing of the demoniac (Mark v.), but to other instances of healing as well. Satan's connection with bodily disease is often referred to. See Luke xiii. 16, and the case of Job, and of Saul's thorn in the flesh, which is called "a messenger of Satan," 2 Cor. xii. 7. Yet manifestly his power is not absolute, but is exercised in subservience to Divine authority, and is allowed only for the glory of God, and the ultimate benefit of those oppressed (John ix. 3, xi. 4). Jesus proved his power to heal all. No case baffled Him. And the importance of such works as testifying of Him was often referred to by Him. They are his credentials (Matt. xii. 28; John v. 36, xiv. 11). An unbeliever is guilty of rejecting the most convincing evidence. But "doing good" had a wider meaning. It includes his teaching, as well as his miracles. Recall his Parable of the Sower, his instructions to his twelve disciples; his prediction of his sufferings and death; his inculcation of a child-like spirit. He spake "the words of eternal life" (John vi. 68). Sin began by doubting the word of God (Gen. iii. 1), salvation begins by hearing and receiving his words. To learn of Him is as needful as to take our burden to Him (Matt. xi. 28—30).

The period covered by the quarter's lessons was about four years. John the Baptist began his ministry six months before the Saviour, and the last lesson brought us to near the close of the Saviour's life. During this period, we have not only beheld his miracles, and listened to his teachings, but we have seen various sorts of persons brought into contact with Him—typical, perhaps, of those who hear of Him still. Some have received bodily healing and spiritual blessing as well—notably, the paralytic, the demoniac, and the timid woman. How many among the scholars belong to that number? The great bulk, however, have simply been aroused to a temporary interest, but have not sought and obtained from Him any blessing. Of this class there are many to-day. One, at least, has been brought to a doubtful position; he left the Saviour "sorrowful" (Mark x. 22), because not fully prepared to meet his claims. Perhaps many are in the same condition of indecision. Nothing is more sad or more unworthy.

Among the lessons suggested by the review we name only the following as of practical importance:—

(1) The possibility of early discipleship.—The young may believe in Him (Mark ix., x.).

(2) The power of Jesus to save.—None were too bad. Even the desperate case of the demoniac did not baffle Him (Heb. vii. 25).

(3) He saves all who come to Him.—It matters not how they come—whether boldly as the paralytic, or timidly as the woman in the crowd (John vi. 37).

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. John Barton, of Cambridge, who has had over fifteen years' experience of mission work in India, has expressed his willingness to the C.M.S. committee to go out to Tinnevelly for eighteen months, and to place his services at the disposal of the Mission there.

The vicar of Tamworth, Staffordshire (Rev. E. G. Thatcher), has decided upon a new form of Sunday evening services in Tamworth, whereby he hopes to secure the attendance of those persons who do not attend any place of worship. He intends holding a service after the ordinary service on Sunday evening, when magic-lantern slides will be exhibited illustrating the subject of discourse.

A Conference with the object of promoting lay-preaching in the Church of England was lately held at Brampton, Cumberland. A long discussion took place, in which several speakers referred to lay evangelisation on a small scale having been successfully carried out in their districts, and a resolution was passed to the effect that a system of organised lay-preaching in the Church of England is desirable.

METHODIST.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse is devoting much time and thought to revive the spiritual life of three or four London suburban Wesleyan chapels, which are depressed and desolate. It is, says The Methodist Times, a much-needed and most blessed work, in which he has already reaped encouraging success.

Spiritual life in the Wesleyan Church at Westbourne, Hartlepool, has been much revived since the congregation removed to their new premises a short time since, and scarcely a Sunday evening service has been held without visible results. At some recent special services held a number of conversions were witnessed.

At Bishop Auckland, the other day, a most interesting meeting was conducted entirely by boys, whose speeches on China, India, noted missionary worthies, &c., elicited frequent applause. The minister of the church, Rev. W. L. Tasker, had composed a special missionary dialogue for the occasion, entitled, "Home and Foreign Missions." This created a very good impression, and was well appreciated.

BAPTIST.

Rev. Edmund Morley, late of Halstead, Essex, has settled in the pastorate of Coupland-street Chapel, Manchester, which became vacant by the removal of Rev. G. Wainwright to Westbourne, Bournemouth, last year.

Mr. A. H. Baynes, the secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, has given a striking proof of his unselfish devotion to the cause of foreign missions, by declining the offer of an appointment with a salary five times that which he is in receipt of from the Society.

At the annual church meeting held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Tuesday evening, last week, it was reported that the present number of members is 5275. There are in connection with the Tabernacle Church twenty-six mission stations, containing 4110 sittings; and also twenty-eight Sunday and Ragged Schools, with 594 teachers and 7811 scholars.

Until the spring of last year, the island of Guernsey, with its population of upwards of 30,000, possessed no English Baptist Church. By the exertions of Rev. F. T. Snell, the scattered Baptists have now been gathered, and already much blessing has attended work among them. At the commencement of this year the friends felt that it was quite time that a place of worship should be opened at St. Peter-Port. Unexpectedly, a building known as All Saints' Chapel, for many years licensed for the celebration of Divine service according to the rites of the Church of England, was closed. This was promptly purchased, and will, all being well, be opened on May 1 as a Baptist Chapel.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

On the 6th inst. South Wales lost a devoted and excellent man by the death of George Phillips, of Haverfordwest. This was illustrated by the remarkable and influential representative gathering of worth, wealth, and respectability at the funeral, on the 11th. Frederick J. Gibbins and Charles S. Price, of Neath, and William Jackson Smith, of Tenby, represented Friends.

About the same time Lydie Majolier, of Congenies (sister of the late Christine Alsop), passed away. Her benignant influence and thoughtful love and care will be much missed in the South of France, and by English Friends who travel or reside there. Fredk. and Anna Fox and Wm. Smythe attended the funeral.

The new meeting-house in Cardiff is supplying a felt want in the town. On the 6th inst. a cabmen's tea was followed by an excellent meeting, with about sixty cabmen present, and a sick benefit society for them is likely to be the result. Five days later a large audience had the privilege of hearing Henry Newman, of Leominster, lecture on Palestine, dressed as an Arab gentleman. The lecturer was very successful in illustrating and proving Holy Scripture.

It will interest and gratify many Friends to hear that Samuel Morris, of Germanstown, Philadelphia, has been liberated by his Quarterly Meeting to visit Friends in Great Britain, Norway, and the South of France, with Thomas P. Coope, an elder, as his companion. It is over thirty years since any official correspondence with London Yearly Meeting has come from Philadelphia, although English Friends would gladly welcome such intercourse with the city of "Brotherly Love."

CONGREGATIONAL.

Edmonton and Tottenham Church reports a membership of 452. Mission work has been carried on at five centres; upwards of 1100 children are in the Sunday-schools.

Chapel-in-the-Field Church, Norwich (Rev. J. P. Perkins, pastor), reports its membership about 370; over 500 children are in the Sunday-schools. A monthly evangelistic service is held in the Church; two flourishing mission stations are also worked.

After the morning service, on Sunday week, at Streatham Hill Church, a conference was held at which Rev. J. P. Gledstone gave an address on the crisis in the history of the London Missionary Society, and urged upon his hearers the duty of self-sacrifice in order to raise the funds requisite for vigorously prosecuting the work of foreign missions. On the motion of Mr. Alderman Spicer a resolution was adopted pledging the congregation to raise £600 within the next two years for the Society's work.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A large canoe, for the use of Rev. J. F. Gartshore, Scottish United Presbyterian missionary at Unwana, Old Calabar, West Africa, has been built at the expense of the children of Lansdowne U.P. Church, Glasgow. The craft has been named Lansdowne.

Mr. Robert Stark, the London Presbytery's evangelistic agent, has concluded a most encouraging series of special services in Haverstock-hill Church. The pastor (Rev. D. Sillars) followed up the stirring addresses of the evangelist on Sunday week by a practical discourse on the text, "Meditate on these things."

An evangelical mission on a large scale has been carried on for some years in a district of Birmingham called Nechells, Mr. W. F. Holt, the missionary, having been remarkably successful. A commodious church has been built to hold nearly a thousand persons, and was opened last week by Dr. Thain Davidson. The mission has thus far been carried on on undenominational lines, but it is expected that the minister and congregation will shortly be admitted into the Presbyterian Church of England.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Evangelistic meetings were held in Saffronhall Church, Hamilton, last week, accompanied with much blessing.

Mr. Rodger, Y.M.C.A. evangelist, has concluded a most successful and encouraging series of meetings at Alexandria, Vale of Leven.

Mr. Scroggie has concluded a series of Gospel meetings at Free St. Mary's, Govan. He is this week at Union Free Church, Morrison-street, Glasgow.

A fortnight's evangelistic services are being held, in connection with the opening of the new mission premises, Kinning-park, Glasgow, belonging to the Pollokshields Free Church.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Rev. Ribton McCracken has held a successful series of mission services in Edgarstown parochial schoolroom, near Portadown.

Rev. Jas. Kirkwood has closed a very successful fortnight's series of meetings in the Methodist Church, Bandon, and is now conducting similar meetings in Dunmanway, co. Cork.

The Gospel mission which, for the past three weeks, Mr. George Clarke has been conducting in Belfast, is growing in interest and results. Large numbers of men and women have remained night after night for the after-meetings, and many have professed conversion.

A two weeks' Gospel mission, preceded by a Christian workers' convention, has been held in Fivemiletown Methodist Church. During the second week the mission was conducted by Mr. J. Townsend Trench, who preached with great power, and many seekers found the Saviour.

The evangelistic services which, for the previous four weeks, Rev. R. Crawford Johnson had been conducting in the Methodist Church, Dromore, came to a close on Monday evening week. From the first the meetings were very largely attended; Divine power accompanied the word, and many persons decided for Christ.

A noteworthy revival of religious life is taking place in Trinity College, Dublin. The Missionary Prayer Union shows more signs of vitality than it has done for years. The Wednesday morning missionary meetings are well attended. The students have started a Saturday night prayer-meeting specially for those who take part in Christian work on the following Lord's Day.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. T. M. Patey, rector since 1857 of Hampreston, Dorset.—Rev. Canon Thomas Dalton, vicar of Holy Trinity, Whitehaven.—In the United States, Rev. Wm. Ireland, missionary of the American Board at Adams, Durban, Natal, South Africa.—Rev. W. B. Boyce, of Sydney, New South Wales, at one time one of the general secretaries of the Wesleyan Missionary Society.—Rev. D. A. Moullin, for forty years rector of Newington, S.E.—Rev. Jabez Rought, for over fifty years in the Wesleyan ministry.

Flower Mission.—Dear Sir,—May I ask your readers to help me in starting a Flower Mission for a poor part of South London? I want ladies to undertake to send a hamper of flowers either monthly or weekly during the summer months, the flowers to be tied up in bunches with a text, so that we can not only send flowers to the sick and suffering, but also the Gospel of Christ to those who are unable to attend any place of worship. Several ladies have already promised to help, but we sadly need more. I will gladly give further particulars.—Yours truly, (Miss) F. F. Young.

THE CATACOMBS AT ROME:

THEIR CONTENTS AND TEACHINGS.

A Vindication of Pure and Primitive CHRISTIANITY; and an Exposure of the Corruptions of ROMANISM;

Derived from the Sepulchral Remains of the EARLY CHRISTIANS at ROME.

By BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S.,
Chamberlain of the City of London.

WITH MANY ILLUSTRATIONS.

Tinted Covers, 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition:

Bevelled boards, gilt edges; 3s. 6d.

From DR. ABBOTT, Head Master of the City of London School:—

"I heartily agree with you that the tendency toward Romanism and Sacerdotalism denotes a misappreciation of the fundamental truths of Christianity; and any one who can do anything to lead people back to those simple spiritual truths is doing a good work for mankind."

From the DEAN OF ACHONRY:—

"'THE CATACOMBS AT ROME' is one of the most useful books I know, as showing the purity and simplicity of the early Church at Rome, and exposing the spurious Christianity of the modern Church of Rome, and the corruptions and incrustations by which she has hidden or destroyed the pure faith of the New Testament."

"The excellent Chamberlain of the City of London has given in these pages a clear and accurate account of the interesting remains of early Christianity in the Catacombs of Rome. Many of the pictures depict harrowing scenes of idolatrous cruelty; and others show the inscriptions on the walls of these underground sepulchres. All through the book is a desire manifested to vindicate the purity of the Christianity of those times, compared with the corruptions of Rome."—The Bookseller, Feb., 1889.

"Mr. SCOTT'S object in this work is to derive from the CATACOMBS 'a vindication of pure and primitive Christianity, and an exposure of the corruptions of Romanism.' He has attained a high degree of success, and produced a valuable and standard work. We rejoice in its continued circulation. It is remarkably cheap."

Baptist Magazine, March, 1889.

"Few subjects have greater attraction for the student of antiquity than that of the CATACOMBS OF ROME; and it is seldom that it has been treated in so graceful a manner as in the present elegant little work by Mr. BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.S.A. We cordially commend this beautiful book to the notice of our readers."

Hull Daily Mail, March 14, 1889.

"The Chamberlain of the City of London dedicates this fourth edition of his well-known work to Dr. Edwin Abbott [Head Master of the City of London School]; who has spoken highly of the earlier editions—not more highly, however, than the merits of the book amply warrant. There is no volume equally moderate in price giving to English readers so full and clear an account of these sepulchral remains of the early Christians. The work is executed with strict accuracy as well as with enthusiasm; it is copiously illustrated; and in an age of revived sacerdotalism among the Anglican clergy its appearance is specially opportune."

Christian Leader, March 7, 1889.

"A new edition of a deservedly popular work. It contains a very interesting description of the CATACOMBS: but a great deal beside—Chapters on Paganism, Primitive Christianity, and Romanism. Preachers will find many good 'illustrations' here."

Local Preacher's Treasury, March, 1889.

"A careful and interested perusal of these pages enables us to pronounce the volume as worthy of a place in every library; and it should command a very large circle of readers. It would be serviceable in the library of the Sunday-school, and find a hearty welcome in all our Book Societies. We desire for this beautiful volume a large circulation."—Baptist Messenger, March, 1889.

"Most people have heard of these famous CATACOMBS; but nowhere have we met with a more graphic or instructive account of their contents than in this book. The many wood engravings help to make the whole thing quite plain. We advise our young ministers, or more educated Sunday-school teachers, to study this volume."—General Baptist Magazine, March, 1889.

"We note with pleasure that a fourth edition of this interesting and instructive book has been called for. Little wonder, however, that these Lectures, wherein the story of Rome pagan, Rome Christian, and Rome apostate—as revealed in the CATACOMBS—is so admirably told, should have won a wide welcome. Even apart from its evidential value, the book possesses great antiquarian and historical interest."—Word and Work, Feb. 8, 1889.

"A wonderfully interesting book on a theme of great importance in reference to the Faith and Hope of the Primitive Christians. The author devotes two chapters to Paganism; one to the origin of Christianity; two to the Catacombs (or sleeping places of the early Christians); and the two closing chapters to Romanism. The part devoted to the CATACOMBS is the most interesting, and gives numerous cuts representing the Figures and the Inscriptions found therein. It should find a place in every Sunday-school library."

Methodist New Connexion Magazine, March, 1889.

"A powerful vindication of pure and primitive Christianity. The value of the book is enhanced by a great number of fine Illustrations. The public have given this book a very hearty reception, as it has now reached its fourth edition. May it reach a thousand more editions! Mr. SCOTT has done his work well. This book will well repay a careful perusal. Mr. SCOTT has something to tell, and he tells it in a most fascinating manner."

Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

Sixth Thousand.

"A truly helpful little book for all earnest souls who are pressing on in the ways of holiness."

Footsteps of Truth, Jan. 1889.

"The Author has learnt the secret of living in the will of God, and he is doing his best to teach this secret to others. It is the very book to put into the hands of a humble Christian seeking a higher, calmer, and steadier life."—Irish Congregational Magazine, Jan. 1889.

"A delightful little volume from Mr. Meyer's pen, ful of stimulus and encouragement."

The British Messenger, March, 1889.

CHRISTIAN LIVING.

Cloth boards, 1s.

Presentation Edition:
Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

Ninth Thousand.

From Footsteps of Truth:—

"Mr. Meyer writes with all the warmth of one who tastes, handles, and feels the Word of Life. In this book he stretches out a loving hand to his fellows in the Christian course, eager to help them in the pathway of holiness."

From The Christian Commonwealth:—

"Every page is full of stimulating thought for Christian workers; and we heartily commend its earnest admonitions, and cheering appeals for a higher life. From beginning to end it is a live book; and is worthy of a place in every Christian library."

ELIJAH:

And THE SECRET OF HIS POWER.

Sixth Thousand. Nine Original Illustrations.
Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

From The Rock:—

"The lessons to be learnt from the life of this prophet are well drawn out and emphasised in the pages before us. . . . Mr. Meyer's language is clear, forcible, descriptive, and interesting; his doctrine is always pure and elevating."

From The Presbyterian Messenger:—

"This is a most stimulating book. It sparkles with heavenly light, and glows with heavenly fire from beginning to end. We honestly and heartily recommend it."

ISRAEL:

A PRINCE WITH GOD.

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

With full-page Illustrations of the RIVER JORDAN and JACOB'S WELL. Sixth Thousand.
Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled bds., gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

From The Baptist Messenger:—

"We have had considerable pleasure in reading this book on the life of Jacob. Mr. Meyer has great descriptive power. He can tell a narrative well. The subject in his hand glows with life; and the scenes and events in the history of his hero pass vividly before you, and are ever being used to force home on the readers some great and important principle. The volume is prettily got up, well bound, and embellished with frontispiece and illustrations."

ABRAHAM:

Or, THE OBEDIENCE OF FAITH.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

With NINE Illustrations Specially Engraved for this Work.

"This book is beautifully illustrated, and so tastefully bound as to be a most acceptable gift book. But the contents are such that no Christian can rise from its perusal without feeling consciously strengthened in God and inspired afresh for the godly life. Our teachers may learn from it how to draw out the spiritual lessons of the sacred Word."—Gospel Magazine.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Mr. William Forbes has concluded an eight days' Gospel temperance mission in the Assembly Hall, Sunderland.

The Manx House of Keys, by 17 votes to 4, has finally rejected what was left after hostile amendments of the Licensing Bill sent down by the Legislative Council.

Energetic protests are being made against any transfer of the licensing power to County Councils. It is held such transfer should be to a body elected for the purpose.

The Lancet hopes there is a growing appreciation of the fact that alcohol is too serious a thing to be played with, and that only very strong people can take it carelessly without harm.

Sunday, April 28, has been appointed by the Committee as the day for holding meetings especially in the interest of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union. Workers in the cause are urged to celebrate the day wherever possible by securing the preaching of temperance sermons and addresses.

The Welsh Sunday Closing Act has not been administered with such vigour as it might have been. Lord Aberdare, who piloted the measure through the House of Lords, has lately expressed regret at this, and resented being called a "fanatic" for having endeavoured to restrict what he properly styles "a great evil."

FOREIGN.

Of 9898 commitments to Baltimore Gaol in 1888, 7584 were for drunkenness, and 1711 of the 2223 new insane cases were adult drunkards.

In Iowa the decision of the Supreme Court allowing the inter-State traffic in liquor is said to be doing much harm. Four firms have been established there to sell liquor in sealed packages.

The experience of Canada proves that in no locality can Prohibition be permanently successful unless it express the prevailing conviction of the people. The home moral is ceaseless temperance instruction of the people.

Of 5193 apprentices at the School Ship, Newport, Rhode Island, who, during 1888, were granted liberty ashore, only eleven returned under the influence of drink. Previous to Prohibition as many often so came back in a single day.

The electors of New Hampshire have voted upon the "Prohibitory Liquor Law Amendment" to the Constitution. The amendment was rejected by a decided majority. Another amendment was adopted, striking the word "evangelical" from the Bill of Rights, thus making it nonsectarian.

Mr. P. T. Barnum, the American showman, has been a teetotaler for more than forty years. When he was in England from 1844 to 1847 he found that the appetite for drink was growing upon him, and he there and then "with a tremendous effort and determined resolution, broke the habit square off."

English Baptist Church, Guernsey.—The Baptists of St. Peter-Port, having recently fallen into Church order, have purchased a chapel formerly used by a clergyman of the Church of England. The building has cost £475, and about £100 will have to be expended in repairs. There is need of outside help, as the cause is small, although the work is full of promise. Subscriptions will be thankfully received by the pastor, Rev. F. T. Snell, 5, Marine-terrace, Banks, Guernsey.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, MARCH 18, 1889.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

NOW READY. IMPORTANT WORK BY DR. PIERSON.

"Many Infallible Proofs."

The Evidences of Christianity;

Or, THE WRITTEN AND LIVING WORD OF GOD.

BY ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D., of Philadelphia.

Tinted Covers, 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"A handbook of Evidences of Christianity by which the author found his way out of the deep darkness of doubt into the full light of day; and found too that the Bible was the Book of God and Christ the Son of God. May it help many out of Doubting Castle!"
Methodist Times, Feb. 7, 1889.

"Every preacher and teacher ought to know something of the 'Evidences'; and it would be hard to find a better popular work on the subject than this. The author divides his book into two sections—The Bible; and the Person of Christ. With the second portion of his subject Dr. Pierson deals with special freshness and force—though the whole book is admirable. We strongly advise our readers to get it if they can."
Local Preachers' Treasury, March, 1889.

"The majority of people believe because they believe; and if called upon for a reason (we avoid for obvious causes the use of the word 'proof,' which is so frequently in our author's mouth), they are unable to give one. It is for the pupose of aiding those who have begun to think for themselves, and have fallen into doubt, that Dr. Pierson has written his book. It conveys clearly and vigorously the argument for the truth of the Scripture, and the evidence upon which the Christian religion is founded. In this respect it may favourably be commended."—Publishers' Circular, Feb., 1889.

"In this book the able author has met a great want, and laid a large class under obligation. It is too often the case that treatises on the Christian Evidences are so learned and scholastic that they are of use to students only. Here, however, is a book of such a plain, practical, common-sense stamp that it cannot fail to be highly popular."—Footsteps of Truth, March, 1889.

"A book which is the result of its author's own struggle with doubt, and victory over it, can never be worthless. Dr. Pierson's argument for the supernatural origin and unique power of the Bible is lucid, comprehensive, trenchant, and conclusive. The parts which deal with the moral beauty and sublimity of the Bible and with the Person of Christ—are exceedingly good. Those who honestly weigh the successive stages of Dr. Pierson's argument can reach but one conclusion."
Baptist Magazine, March, 1889.

"A book like this deserves a place beside Cooper's 'Bridge of History over the Gulf of Time,' as a forcible and interesting evidence of the truth of Christianity. Dr. Pierson tells us in his preface that, having himself been in the dense thicket of doubt, he is desirous of leading others out by the pathway by which he emerged into the light of faith. This volume reiterates the unshaken proofs of the Bible as a Divine Revelation, and also shows how Jesus Christ was none other than the Son of God. It is neatly bound, and has a portrait of the writer."—The Bookseller, Feb, 1889.

"This is an able and scholarly book, from the pen of a gifted American writer and preacher. It is full of instructive matter from its opening to its closing sentence. In thoughtful and eloquent terms Dr. Pierson has gone over the MANY INFALLIBLE PROOFS that the Christian Religion is Divine. The author of this book is a safe and able guide to those who are troubled with the darkness of doubt. We have great pleasure in recommending Dr. Pierson's book. It should be in all our Sunday-school and Y.M.C.A. libraries. It s a splendid book to bestow on a young man. We hopethis volume will have a wide circulation."
Irish Congregational Magazine, March, 1889.

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE PRONOUNCED INCURABLE.
A YOUNG MAN at BISHOP STORTFORD.

This case was introduced to me by Mr. James Coyston, of Berdon, whose wife had derived great benefit from my treatment.

Particulars of the case were sent to me in July of last year. The patient had been ill for four months. He had suffered for some time, in addition to the usual symptoms, with severe pains in the bowels, also in the back, chest, and shoulders. Consumption had been very prevalent in the family. The medical report declared there to be tubercular disease, and added, "he will not get well again."

At Mr. Coyston's request I sent medicine and advice. He had been unable to keep down other medicine, but this he could. In a very short time he improved. In September Mr. C. writes:—"He is very much better, and can walk about anywhere, much to the astonishment of all, as it had been said 'there was no hope of him.'"

On the 17th of December last, Mr. C. writes me: "I am happy to inform you he is quite well, and has been at work for six weeks. His mother is anxious I should write to you and express her great thanks. I will recommend your treatment myself whenever I can."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

THE CATACOMBS AT ROME:

THEIR CONTENTS AND TEACHINGS.

A Vindication of Pure and Primitive CHRISTIANITY; and an Exposure of the Corruptions of ROMANISM;
Derived from the Sepulchral Remains of the EARLY CHRISTIANS at ROME.

By BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S.,
Chamberlain of the City of London.

WITH MANY ILLUSTRATIONS.

Tinted Covers, 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition:
Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

From DR. ABBOTT, Head Master of the City of London School:—

"I heartily agree with you that the tendency toward Romanism and Sacerdotalism denotes a misappreciation of the fundamental truths of Christianity; and any one who can do anything to lead people back to those simple spiritual truths is doing a good work for mankind."

From the DEAN OF ACHONRY:—

"'THE CATACOMBS AT ROME' is one of the most useful books I know, as showing the purity and simplicity of the early Church at Rome, and exposing the spurious Christianity of the modern Church of Rome, and the corruptions and incrustations by which she has hidden or destroyed the pure faith of the New Testament."

"The excellent Chamberlain of the City of London has given in these pages a clear and accurate account of the interesting remains of early Christianity in the Catacombs of Rome. Many of the pictures depict harrowing scenes of idolatrous cruelty; and others show the inscriptions on the walls of these underground sepulchres. All through the book is a desire manifested to vindicate the purity of the Christianity of those times, compared with the corruptions of Rome."—The Bookseller, Feb., 1889.

"Mr. SCOTT'S object in this work is to derive from the CATACOMBS 'a vindication of pure and primitive Christianity, and an exposure of the corruptions of Romanism.' He has attained a high degree of success, and produced a valuable and standard work. We rejoice in its continued circulation. It is remarkably cheap."

Baptist Magazine, March, 1889.

"A careful and interested perusal of these pages enables us to pronounce the volume as worthy of a place in every library; and it should command a very large circle of readers. It would be serviceable in the library of the Sunday-school, and find a hearty welcome in all our Book Societies. We desire for this beautiful volume a large circulation."—Baptist Messenger, March, 1889.

"A new edition of a deservedly popular work. It contains a very interesting description of the CATACOMBS: but a great deal beside—Chapters on Paganism, Primitive Christianity, and Romanism. Preachers will find many good 'illustrations' here."

Local Preacher's Treasury, March, 1889.

"We note with pleasure that a fourth edition of this interesting and instructive book has been called for. Little wonder, however, that these Lectures, wherein the story of Rome pagan, Rome Christian, and Rome apostate—as revealed in the CATACOMBS—is so admirably told, should have won a wide welcome. Even apart from its evidential value, the book possesses great antiquarian and historical interest."—Word and Work, Feb. 8, 1889.

"A wonderfully interesting book on a theme of great importance in reference to the Faith and Hope of the Primitive Christians. The author devotes two chapters to Paganism; one to the origin of Christianity; two to the Catacombs (or sleeping places of the early Christians); and the two closing chapters to Romanism. The part devoted to the CATACOMBS is the most interesting, and gives numerous cuts representing the Figures and the Inscriptions found therein. It should find a place in every Sunday-school library."

Methodist New Connexion Magazine, March, 1889.

"A powerful vindication of pure and primitive Christianity. The value of the book is enhanced by a great number of fine Illustrations. The public have given this book a very hearty reception, as it has now reached its fourth edition. May it reach a thousand more editions! Mr. SCOTT has done his work well. This book will well repay a careful perusal. Mr. SCOTT has something to tell, and he tells it in a most fascinating manner."

Irish Congregational Magazine, March, 1889.

Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.
Sixth Thousand.

"The Author has learnt the secret of living in the will of God, and he is doing his best to teach this secret to others. It is the very book to put into the hands of a humble Christian seeking a higher, calmer, and steadier life."—Irish Congregational Magazine, Jan. 1889.

CHRISTIAN LIVING.

Cloth boards, 1s.

Presentation Edition:
Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

Ninth Thousand.

From Footsteps of Truth:—

"Mr. Meyer writes with all the warmth of one who tastes, handles, and feels the Word of Life. In this book he stretches out a loving hand to his fellows in the Christian course, eager to help them in the pathway of holiness."

ISRAEL:

A PRINCE WITH GOD.

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

With full-page Illustrations of the RIVER JORDAN and JACOB'S WELL. Sixth Thousand.
Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled bds., gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

From The Baptist Messenger:—

"We have had considerable pleasure in reading this book on the life of Jacob. Mr. Meyer has great descriptive power. He can tell a narrative well. The subject in his hand glows with life; and the scenes and events in the history of his hero pass vividly before you, and are ever being used to force home on the readers some great and important principle. The volume is prettily got up, well bound, and embellished with frontispiece and illustrations."

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

THE FULNESS OF THE NATIONS;

Or, The A.B.C. of the Promises Given to the House of Israel Considered in Relation to the Second Advent.

By ALDER SMITH, M.B. Lond.; F.R.C.S.

"We congratulate the author of this, the latest volume upon the Anglo-Israel question. He writes with force and clearness, and although we are not prepared to endorse all his statements, we cordially admit that he has put his case intelligibly and modestly before the reader. . . . We strongly recommend this book to the careful study of all who take an interest in the signs of the times. It is written in a truly Christian spirit."

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Mr. John Blackham, of West Bromwich, Founder of the Pleasant Sunday Afternoons for the people.

The allegation that the Sunday closing of public-houses in Wales has conduced to an increase of drunkenness has called forth several cogent utterances to the contrary during the last few days. Among other things, it has been pointed out that the restrictive measure was gained by the people of the Principality in spite of the opposition of the constabulary, magistrates, and upper classes. It is, therefore, hardly to be expected that the success of legislation which they heartily disapproved should now be acknowledged from these quarters. We are glad to observe that the question of success or failure is to be investigated, the Home Secretary having, a few days ago, announced in the House of Commons, that the Government intend to institute an inquiry into the operation of the Act.

Revolution is not reformation. It is not in violence or wholesale confiscation of property that we must seek for the solution of such grave social problems as the relations between capital and labour, the vast inequalities in the distribution of wealth, overcrowding, or starvation wages. Dr. Plummer, in his recent "Exposition of the Pastoral Epistles," aptly recognises this fact; after pointing out that, in dealing with the question of Roman slavery, Paul did not appeal to the spirit of political revolution, but insisted upon principles which must necessarily lead to reform, he makes the following noteworthy observations:—

> We have no right to preach revolution and plunder to those who are suffering from undeserved poverty, any more than Paul had to preach revolt to the slaves. . . . We need more faith in the principles of Christianity, and in their power to promote happiness as well as godliness. What is required is not a sudden redistribution of wealth, or laws to prevent its accumulation, but a proper appreciation of its value. . . . It seems a terrible thing to leave whole generations suffering from destitution, just as it was a terrible thing to leave whole generations groaning in slavery. But a general manumission would not have helped matters then, and a general distribution to the indigent would not help matters now. The remedy adopted then was that each was charged to behave to the other—the master in commanding, and the slave in obeying—as Christian to Christian in the sight of God. . . . The same remedy now, if faithfully applied, will be not less effectual.

This is good so far as it goes, but it is only applicable to a community Christian in fact as well as in name.

The Guardian is admitting some vigorously written articles on the critics of the Pentateuch. The view that the Pentateuchal codes were introduced by Ezra is a theory, and nothing else. It passes current, because it is advocated with a show of learning, but must fall to pieces when thoroughly examined. The style and tone of the Book of Ezra bear the colour and impress of its date, and are altogether different from the language of the priestly code of the Pentateuch. As to such statements as those in the historical books that "the high places were not taken away," they are not an evidence against the ordained sacrifices, but clearly a reflection on the half-heartedness of the kings. Moreover, can we conceive that in Jeremiah's time there were no Temple sacrifices, because the prophet contends that they were not substitutes for obedience of life?

The same journal reflects on the growing irreverence in Sunday services. It says one great cause is that "Church" is a matter of show, a social performance, and therefore people conclude that there is no harm in staring about and noticing what is going on. The same is true of many chapels. When any part of worship is made a performance and a display, the controlling idea of offering the sacrifice of lip and heart to God dies out, and in this respect the age reaps as it sows.

The Scottish correspondent of The Nonconformist and Independent writes:—

> It is no longer possible to deny the existence of what Mr. Spurgeon would call the down-grade in the Free Church of Scotland....It is notorious that a number of the younger men have become disciples of the broad school of Biblical critics, and are also preaching in a way that would almost satisfy Dean Stanley. I question very much whether the Church is prepared to stand this change as yet.

The true Church of Christ will never be prepared to stand the change. It is the mark of the foretold time when men will turn away their ears from the truth. It either begins with an unenlightened state, or with a running down in colleges of spiritual life by the over-estimate of mere intellectuality; it proceeds with no influencing and transforming effects on human nature; and ends with a denial of the supreme authority of Scripture.

Let us, however, guard against the notion that the believer in sound doctrine is intellectually feeble. The truth in Christ has commanded the allegiance of the highest and most splendid intellects, from Paul down to the notable Christian scholars of our own times. But, just as the devil's first temptation was that man should "know," so intellect is confident in its own strength. It cannot stoop to the lowliness of accepting a salvation unearned by man; it shirks the humility which alone can find its way to the cross; and evades that yoke of the Meek and Lowly in heart which subjects man to the ever-living might of Him who makes all things new. The disposition that makes the greatest in the kingdom of heaven is the docility of a little child.

A week or two ago it was stated by the Home Secretary in the House of Commons that corporal punishment is opposed to the tendency of modern legislation, and the statement was received with applanse. It is difficult, however, to imagine in what way the rapidly increasing crimes of brutal violence are to be dealt with if sentiment has to become a factor in the treatment of those who are guilty of them. The judges do not appear to concur in the ministerial view, for a few days ago at Bristol one of them regretted that he could not add the lash to the punishment of five years' transportation which he inflicted upon a ruffian guilty of assaulting a child; and at Liverpool Mr. Justice Charles gave three prisoners, who had robbed and brutally assaulted a woman, fifteen lashes with the cat, in addition to six months' imprisonment.

With myriads of people in these islands who find it exceedingly difficult to provide food with their low wages, it is to be regretted that we so shamefully neglect the great harvest of the sea. Moreover, where modern appliances are brought into use for the capture of fish, it frequently happens that the railway rates are next to prohibitive, so that, at the one end, there is a large supply of food which would not pay the cost of conveyance, and at the other, a population of would-be buyers. When the question of the feeding of our poorer classes assumes even greater importance than it now possesses, an attempt will have to be made to do away with this difficulty. It certainly seems to be inconsistent to be talking so much of our starving thousands, when we are either neglecting or wasting the food which God provides.

The Roman Catholic journals are rejoicing over the announcement that the old hospital at Ayr has been purchased for the Dominican Order of Nuns, who will shortly occupy it. It is added that the Order had a convent in Ayr before the Reformation, and that the one now about to be opened will be the first in Scotland since that period. Gradually being reduced in number on the Continent of Europe, these conventual institutions are rapidly multiplying in Great Britain.

It is not only fitting, but desirable and urgent, that our national sins should be made the subject of concerted confession and prayer to God. Framing and presenting petitions to the throne of grace with reference to evils flowing from our national action and policy, we shall individually receive such grace and strength as will enable us earnestly and consistently to testify for holiness and justice in the sight of all men. A revived Christian conscience would assuredly go far towards creating a true national conscience, which would, in turn, exalt the people, and prove a blessing to the world at large. The prayer-meetings, held with this very object in view, on Tuesday afternoons at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate-street Without, have been arranged from a sense of the grave responsibility of British Christians in regard to the great evils prevailing among us, and associated with our rule and commerce abroad. Already impurity, war, the opium traffic, and drunkenness, have been deplored, and God has been asked not to enter into judgment with us for our continued national guiltiness on all these heads. The reproach of other glaring sins also lies heavily upon us, and from time to time these will also be lamented before the Lord. Those of our readers who can attend these weekly meetings in London will do well to do so, not only for their own spiritual profit, but for the encouragement which their presence will give to this important movement. Let other periodical meetings also be organised, so that in all parts of the country holy hands may be uplifted to God in reference to things which Christians everywhere must deeply deplore.

Mr. R. N. Cust, in an article on "The Duty of a Christian Missionary in the Hour of Personal Peril," says:—

Prayers are offered weekly in some churches for the safety of our missionaries in Africa. Is that sufficient? The very object of missions is to convert the heathen and build up native churches; we should pray that these poor converts may be strengthened in the hour of trial; and that the missionary, the prolongation of whose short span of life is a small matter, may have grace given to him to do his duty in the moment of extreme necessity, and witness a good confession.

These words will doubtless indicate to many the desirable form which prayer on behalf of foreign missions should take.

THE CHILDREN OF THE POOR.

The London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission continues its work of feeding the hungry and clothing the naked children at Homerton Hall. Free dinners are given to destitute children. Teachers, missionaries, visitors, &c., finding little ones fainting, give or obtain for them tickets for these dinners. From 120 to 190, according to circumstance, may be found enjoying nourishing soup, Irish stew, &c. Arrangements have also been in operation all the winter, whereby mission workers in all parts of London have been aided in affording relief in their respective districts. More applications for assistance of this kind are received than can be complied with, as the help rendered depends, of course, on the state of the funds.

The naked are clothed, as well as the hungry fed. The clothing department at High-street, Homerton, is extensive, and so are the demands upon it. Busy hands are at work making and mending, patching up and altering old and disused clothing, hats, jackets, dresses, and underclothing for the girls; caps, coats, trousers, or knickers, and so on for the boys. A worker, who was present lately at one of the distributions of clothing, describes "the crowd of poor men and women awaiting their turn, each having children clad in pitiful tatters." Besides the distribution, parcels of clothing are granted to responsible applicants for use among the poor. Full details of the work may be had of Mr. J. J. Jones, 98, High-street, Homerton, London, E.

THE STEPNEY CRECHE.—The Goldsmiths' Company has voted a contribution of £20 to Mrs. Hilton's crèche and branches in Stepney-causeway.

MISS MACPHERSON'S EMIGRANTS.—A telegram was received on Monday announcing the safe arrival on the other side, of the party of boys under the charge of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Merry.

CORRECTION.—Rev. H. C. G. Moule's booklet, "The Cleansing Blood," recently referred to in a note, was priced at 1d.; it should have been 2d. The publishers are Messrs. Seeley & Co., Essex-street, Strand.

THE SIN OF INTEMPERANCE was the subject on Tuesday afternoon at the prayer-meeting on "Great National Evils," at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate-street Without. Mr. John Taylor presided, and spoke in earnest commendation of total abstinence on the part of Christian people. He referred to the great grief caused by the drink traffic both at home and abroad, among the upper as well as the lower classes. Messrs. B. Broomhall and J. W. Leng followed, each urging the supreme importance of Christian example being on the safe side. The prayers were fervent, the Almighty being asked, among other things, to give believers grace to vote consistently with their prayers.

Letters to the Editor.

UNDENOMINATIONAL MISSIONS.

Dear Sir,—May I correct a statement in the report you kindly gave last week of my address at Liverpool, which might convey a wrong impression. I was dwelling upon the hindrances to the advancement of missionary enterprise—worldliness in the churches, and the desire to plant a special effort in a special denominational flower-pot, instead of running on undenominational lines.

In your report the words "South Africa" are introduced, as if I accused our brethren there especially of these evils. I did see in the Church of South Africa gross worldliness and bigotry in many instances, but found amongst the other sections, except in one town, much true unity, and a desire to go forward, and to keep the world outside.—Yours very truly, W. Spencer Walton.

SELF-SUPPORTING MISSIONS.

Sir,—It is well known to all supporters of the London Missionary Society that it has for some years had considerable difficulty in raising the funds that are necessary for carrying on its work in various parts of the heathen world. With an almost stationary income, it is very difficult for the Society adequately to extend its operations even in those countries where it already has representatives, and almost impossible for it to commence new missions in other lands which have in recent years been opened to European commerce. We have noticed lately in the home papers various suggestions for retrenchment in the Society's expenditure. In regard to these suggestions we do not now express any opinion except this—that a long experience of life in China leads us to disbelieving altogether in the principle of reducing to the lowest possible point the salaries of missionaries. A missionary, male or female, may of course exist in China, and probably in other countries also, on a very small income indeed; but as regards the great majority of Europeans, if they are to live in health, to work efficiently as missionaries, and to give their children a proper education, something more than the bare necessities of life is requisite. We cannot help thinking, however, that the work of our own Society and other societies might be very largely developed, not by reducing the rate of remuneration paid to salaried agents abroad, but by the addition of a band of entirely unremunerated labourers to the ranks of missionaries who are supported by the Churches.

This is the matter we now wish to press on the attention of our fellow Christians in England. We ourselves are prepared, if others will join us, to forego the salary and various money allowances for personal needs granted by the Society to its missionaries, and we appeal to young men possessed of private means to come out and unite themselves with us as honorary workers in the Hankow Mission of the London Society.

This is not the place to enter into details of our work, and of the opportunities that exist for its extension. It is enough to say that the needs of this district cannot well be overstated. Situated in the very heart of a province containing many millions of people, Hankow presents one of the finest centres for missionary enterprise in the whole world. Almost at our very doors we have in the three cities of Hankow, Hanyang, and Wuchang, a town population that cannot be very far short of the population of Liverpool and Glasgow taken together. In the country districts round about there are many other large towns and villages, and we long to see European evangelists stationed in various central positions throughout those districts, from which, with the help of native Christians, each one could work the region surrounding his own headquarters. Judging from the experience of the past, there is no likelihood that this work can ever be overtaken by the existing agencies either of our own or of other societies.

We therefore invite men who have an independent income, or men whose personal friends are able and willing to send them abroad, to come out and supplement, in the way just described, and without any cost to the Society, the work that is being already done by the Society's missionaries in this neighbourhood. Most of the English societies now represented in China—our own as well as others—number some unpaid missionaries amongst their agents. We wish for all the missions, as well as for our own, a large increase for such workers. We think that an unmarried man of frugal habits would be able to live here on £100 per annum. Our desire is that every one coming to Hankow in connection with this scheme should, if he wishes it, be provided with free quarters. At present, however, we cannot definitely promise this in all cases, but we shall try to make arrangements whereby the expenses of house rent will at all events be reduced to as small a sum as possible. Should this letter meet the eyes of any medical men who are anxious to combine evangelistic work with the practice of medicine, we can promise them rare opportunities for usefulness here; and if the consciousness of having been able to do untold good to the bodies as well as the souls of men be not a sufficient recompense, they will find as the result of a few years' labour here such recompense as few medical men in England attain. A rule of the Society exists which forbids any of its medical men to engage in private practice amongst Europeans. We are thoroughly convinced of the wisdom of this rule, and our district committee is unanimous in thinking that it should be observed by honorary not less than by paid agents of the Society.

Our idea is that anyone who joins us should live for the first year or two in Hankow, where he could study the language and become familiar with the work of the Mission; after that, he could gradually feel his way to settling down in some of the country districts where we have converts already, who form the nucleus of a country church. We do not wish to appeal for single men only. Married couples would also find a very hearty welcome and plenty of work; but it is essential that both husband and wife should be full of the missionary spirit, strong in health, and prepared, if need be, to put up with some inconveniencies. In view of all the contingencies connected with married life amongst Europeans in a country like China, we could not recommend married people to come out unless they had something like an assured income of £200 per annum. They would require more if they had children.

We shall either of us be happy to correspond with anyone who wishes for fuller information concerning the work and its conditions; or inquiries can be addressed to Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson at the London Missionary Society's office, 14, Blomfield-street, London, E.C., to whom we are sending more particulars of our scheme. We ourselves shall be, in all matters affecting our work, subject to the vote of the District Committee of the Society; those who join us will be members of the same committee, and will be expected to act in accordance with its decisions. It is not essential that our honorary workers should have had a college education, or that they should be ordained, but we wish that they should all be really "self-supporting" in the sense of having private sources of income. We should not encourage anyone to join this branch of our mission if supported by a church, or by a local auxiliary of the parent Society.

Finally we appeal to parents possessed of means, asking them, if they have children who desire to become missionaries, to enable them to do so as honorary members of the Society. We are persuaded that few things will help so much to convince the world of the disinterestedness of missionaries as seeing the missionary body largely recruited from amongst men and women of culture and good social position, who are willing to go forth into all the world to preach the Gospel to the heathen, taking nothing for their service, but living on inherited wealth, their hands strengthened and upheld by the prayers, and sympathy, and benedictions of Christian parents.

We are, Sir, &c.,

Griffith John,
Arnold Foster.

HOME FOR AGED BLIND.—On behalf of this excellent Institution, presided over by Rev. Henry Bright, a sale of work will be held on April 2 to 4, at the Home, in Hanley-road, Crouch Hill, N., at which the presence of sympathisers is earnestly invited.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.—Praise, for a most successful Gospel mission held at Berkeley, during the past fortnight, by Mr. Gibbens, of the Evangelisation Society.——Prayer, for blessing on a mission in co. Tipperary, Ireland, commencing April 7.——For blessing on a month's mission in the Stratford-on-Avon Primitive Methodist Circuit, conducted by Mr. Thomas Hickling, evangelist.

Euodia and Syntyche.—3.

We have shown that there was dissension at Philippi, and at least the probability that Euodia and Syntyche were the cause and centre of it. Our next inquiry is whether the Epistle itself indicates the subject of discord. We have found reason to conclude that this was not a mere personal quarrel between these two women, but a controversy as to some phase of Gospel truth. We have now to point out that the Epistle discusses the doctrine of Christian perfection, both in theory and practice, and therefore the probability that this was the subject concerning which these two devoted fellow-labourers of the Apostle were disagreed. If this be so, and if the Epistle to the Philippians has this for its main theme, it must be of great value at the present time, when diverse views as to Christian perfection and perfectibility are warmly advocated.

We have already shown that the Apostle refrains from attaching himself to either party, comprehending and uniting them in the reiterated word all. We now remark that very early in his letter he gives us in the word perfect the key to the subject of dispute: "Being confident of this very thing—that He who began a good work in you will perfect it until the day of Jesus Christ." And their perfection is further dwelt upon in iii. 12—15. The temptation in all endeavour after perfection is to fix the attention upon oneself and the work wrought within, rather than upon Him by whom the work is done. The Apostle meets this by pointing them to God who began and who will perfect the good work in them. He prays (9—11) that they may be "filled with the fruit of righteousness, which is by Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God." And so all through the chapter, his concern is that Christ may be preached, even though it be by false brethren; that Christ may be magnified in the Apostle's body, whether by his life or his death; for to him to live is Christ—Christ is his life—and to die is gain, for to be with Christ is far better. So far from being self-complacent in their own perfection, they are to work out their own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God that worketh in them to will and to do of his good pleasure. And though the Apostle had more reason to glory in the flesh than any man who lived, yet he counted all personal advantages, of birth, education, or attainment, absolute loss, that he might win Christ and lose himself in Him.

Another temptation is to regard the work wrought within as, in some sense or other, in some degree or other, final. Thus, one says that the body will be changed, but not the soul or the spirit. Others claim that body, soul, and spirit are already changed, which is tantamount to saying that the resurrection is past already. Nor are these by any means all the wild and fantastic statements that are made.

In contravention of all such self-deception and deception of others, as are embodied in these delusions, the Apostle is assured that He who began the good work in them "will perfect it until the day of Jesus Christ." "That ye may be sincere and without offence against the day of Christ." "Here the preposition distinctly brings out the idea of preparation for the judgment, faintly above indicated by until" (Speaker's Commentary). Again (ii. 15, 16) he would have them blameless and harmless, holding forth the word of life, that in the day of Christ he may rejoice that he did not run in vain neither labour in vain. In i. 6, 10, to quote the same commentator, "he looks to that day for the completion of God's work in them; here, for the final approval of his own labour bestowed on them." But in each case he is looking forward to the day of Christ, and knows nothing of finality until that day comes. Indeed, his use of the figure of the footrace here, as in iii. 12—14, is essentially opposed to any such idea, for his and our country is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed unto the body of his glory, according to the working of his power, whereby He is able to subdue all things unto Himself." We shall have to refer to this passage in a concluding paper.

Another of Satan's snares specially adapted for those who are seeking high attainment in the Divine life is spiritual pride. It is not improbable that Euodia or Syntyche, or both of them, as well as those associated with them, had become elated with their supposed attainment. Nothing could more certainly tend to disunion; and the Apostle follows his vehement appeal for unity (ii. 1, 2) with a fervent exhortation to unselfishness and lowliness. Only the lowly heart finds rest. Only in such a heart does love bear fruit of righteousness. Therefore, let them think nothing in the spirit of faction, nor in the spirit of vain glory, but in lowliness of mind accounting one another better than themselves; for "no one," says Neander, "can fairly view himself and his neighbours, without seeing in them some gifts which he is conscious of being without."

But love and lowliness are only to be learned of Jesus: therefore we have the true method of perfection pictured in the supreme example of the Meek and Lowly in heart, in that classic passage (ii. 5—12). The warning against strife and vainglory, and the exhortation to lowliness and obedience, illustrated by the example of the Equal of God, self-emptied, and therefore highly exalted and given the Name above every name—suggest that there was a tendency at Philippi to spiritual pride, which always accompanies the attempt at perfection in ourselves.

If any at Philippi claimed perfection, the Apostle disallows the claim, by exhorting them to do all things without murmurings and disputings against God's will—whether outward complainings or inward questionings—in order that they may become blameless and harmless ("implying progress toward holier life"—S.C.) children of God, unblamable, in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation. These words refer to Deut. xxxii. 5, LXX.—"Not his children, blamable, a crooked and perverse generation." Paul would have his Philippians, unlike Israel, to be followers of God as dear children; shining as lights in the world; holding forth the word of life.

As in 1 John i. to ii. 2, the question of sin in the believer, and its relation to communion with God on the one hand, and to the blood of Jesus on the other, is concisely and exhaustively considered: so in the Epistle to the Philippians the claim to perfection in the flesh is dealt with doctrinally and practically, with illustrations from the life and experience of the Lord Jesus and of the Apostle Paul. The study of these portions of the Word of God will definitely and definitively answer questions which are exercising many hearts just now. M.

MR. E. F. BALDWIN IN MOROCCO.

The letters received by us from Mr. E. F. Baldwin, of Mogador, show that he is putting into operation the principles set forth in his missionary papers. In a communication dated March 4, he writes:—"I have returned from another 'Matt. x.' trip. While Mr. Nairn and I were in one direction, Mr. Martin and Omar were in another, and Abraham and Hosine in still another, besides local work here and in other places. Omar has gone to Morocco city and Dimnath to bring me full tidings of the work in those places. Future journeys must be taken, at present, in regions remote from this neighbourhood, for all about here our work and testimony have made a great stir. Every phrase in Matt. x. glows with sevenfold light as experience tests it. We had plenty of threats and a little pulling about, but not a hair of our head perished.

"Omar has just returned. The day he started for the interior to see the Christians we had heard from, he was waylaid, arrested, tied, and imprisoned. After two days he escaped with no outer clothing. Another convert was baptized by Mr. Nairn to-day. Still another professed faith this morning here. He was brought by a native Christian, who also, like Omar, had come from his home where he had twice been forcibly taken and retained."

MISSION IN BOLTON.

On Thursday, March 21, Rev. W. Hay Aitken finished a twelve days' mission at St. George's Church. From the first day the power of the Lord was present to heal. Hundreds every night stayed to the after-meeting, of these many were no doubt true Christians, but many also remained for the purpose of laying hold of Christ's salvation by faith. This fact was soon demonstrated. The missioner allowed the first two or three nights to pass away without requiring from the anxious ones any outward acknowledgment of their desire to be saved. But on the fourth night of the mission he asked all those who wished to have the question of reconciliation with God settled at once, to repair to the north gallery, where he and his helpers would meet them, and endeavour by the blessing of God to remove all doubts and fears. Numbers acceded, and many entered into the enjoyment of God's peace that very night. The same method was adopted from that time forth with the same blessed results. On the last night but one of the mission, there were quite a hundred souls seeking peace, and all, so far as was ascertained, appeared to find rest for their souls. Altogether there must have been many definite and clear conversions to God, not to mention those timid ones who perhaps shrank from giving publicity to the blessing vouchsafed them.

The meetings on the spiritual life were particularly helpful to Christians, and everyone is full of gratitude for the time of refreshing with which God has visited this part of his vineyard. Mrs. Crouch, who conducted the women's meeting, was also greatly blessed, many coming forward and acknowledging the Lord to be their God. A thankoffering of over £60 was given on the second Sunday of the mission to the Church of England Parochial Mission Society.

THE DROME VALLEY, FRANCE.—Madame Marzials has twenty-eight orphan girls in her Home at Barnave, all more or less entirely dependent upon her and her helpers. The Orphanage is a centre of varied Christian effort. The sick and poor are visited, and the Gospel is preached by an evangelist who has succeeded in gaining the sympathetic attention of the people. The ninth annual report gives a birdseye view of the work, which has excited the interest of a number of English people, as it has commanded the confidence of French Protestants. We regret to hear that the health of Pastor Marzials continues indifferent.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Situation surveyed, Defects disclosed, and the Church recalled to her Lord's Instructions.

XVIII.—Conclusion.

UNLESS there is a practical issue from these pages, we shall have spent our strength for nought. That there will be, we are assured, for we have even seen the beginning of it. One immediate result of what we have brought forth, with much study, from the Word of God, and set in order for the perusal of others, is that we ourselves are unspeakably strengthened in our conviction that in this pathway alone is to be found real and large success in foreign mission endeavour. We have also, as we have studied and written, again and again paused, and admired, and praised, as, more and more, the matchless wisdom of these instructions of Christ grew upon us. Here is the panacea for every ill, the correction of every defect, that mars and hinders the work. It is the wisdom of the Church to accept without further delay the divinely appointed constitution of the missionary estate, and permit no other principles to actuate and no other practices to obtain in her future work for the nations than can be clearly drawn from this age-enduring document. In these concluding remarks we desire to point out some of the vast advantages that would accrue from a return to these primitive Missionary methods.

IT WOULD ENABLE THE CHURCH TO PRESENT TO THE NATIONS A UNITED FRONT IN AT LEAST THIS PRIME FACTOR OF GIVING THEM THE GOSPEL. It has been Satan's work to lead believers to search and sift the New Testament to justify and bulwark their pre-conceived ideas of Church government. It has been his endeavour to lead them to magnify questions of little moment and minimise the importance of themes which embosom the honour and glory of Christ's person and work. Thus chasms of division yawn where nothing ought to separate. But, on the other hand, it is the Spirit's work to unite believers. If we must needs retain our sad differences at home, may we not at least yield ourselves to the Spirit's leading, and unite upon adopting this Apostolic Missionary form, and let all our messengers, of whatever name, go forth under just those conditions laid down by Christ, which we have been studying, and whose excellence and obligation we have shown with many arguments. Then, everywhere, among all the nations will be seen the same type of missionary, all alike denuded of the things of earth, but glowing with faith, simplicity, self-denial, and disinterestedness, and the evident objects of heaven's care; and all bearing the same message, and all exhibiting the same heavenly deportment.

There would be still another advantage in the Church taking up her proper work in the Scriptural way, providing there were linked with it conformity to Apostolic example in dealing with the native churches which may spring up in consequence of this preaching of the Gospel. IT WOULD LARGELY PREVENT THE REPRODUCTION IN OTHER LANDS OF THE SAD DIVISIONS EXISTING AT HOME, AND WOULD DISPOSE OF THE VEXED QUESTION OF MISSIONARY COMITY. It is to our lasting disgrace that these divisions appear abroad, and is a result of our inattention to Apostolic precedent as well as of disobedience to the Missionary Constitution. God's plan, as seen in the New Testament, is as follows:—Those who go from settled Christian communities as missionaries should not, as a rule, locate, but move from place to place, as commanded by Christ, and as practised by Paul and others in Apostolic times. They should not become pastors, save in very exceptional cases, but continue to be evangelists. When, in a place, believers are gathered together through their labours, they should be left to develop the gifts that may be among them. If the Spirit of God is thus honoured, pastors, teachers, evangelists, and deacons, will, as the needs of this infant church demand, appear from among themselves. When a sufficient time has elapsed, it is right that the missionary should, if possible, re-visit the place, and assist the church in determining, according to the instructions in the Epistles to Timothy, and elsewhere, who are suitable to be recognised as the elders and shepherds of the flock. No set form of Church government should be imposed upon them, and great care should be exercised as to introducing the customs of other lands. Rather they should be left in the hands of the Spirit of God, that the spiritual life within them as a local body should become developed and operative according to their peculiar needs, surroundings, habits of thought, and social and other customs. It is as unsuitable to apparel an oriental or other church in all the form and fashion (even though it be religious form and fashion) of occidental congregations, as it would be to deprive them of their appropriate native dress and substitute European costume. One of the crying evils of missionary work is seen when native churches are nursed and subsidised and controlled until they are limp and helpless and no proper self-reliance is possible.

It will be found, if this New Testament plan is pursued, that missionaries will be speedily raised up from among these newly formed churches, who will go forth on exactly Christ's principles, with no question of pay ever being raised, to spread the glad tidings among the surrounding peoples, with whose language and habits of thought and religious and social prejudices they have been familiar from childhood. If one has a family, the church, if instructed thereto, will look after their simple needs. It is surprising how true to these primitive plans of missionary operation the spiritual instinct of native Christians will be found, if they are left uninfluenced. The writer knows whereof he speaks. But the aspect of the ordinary modern missionary, with his guaranteed support from beyond the seas, and the suggestion that there is a mint of money available from the same quarter, at once unfavourably influences, if it does not corrupt, the minds of those native believers who are most likely to become helpers.

Thus also, as we said, the perplexing question of missionary comity disappears; for if the single aim of all who go forth is to preach the Gospel, and go just as Christ appointed, and leave the native churches, as gathered, in the hands of the Lord who well knows how to develop and strengthen them, where is the danger of the work of the different denominations overlapping?

Another result would be THE SINGLE AIM OF PREACHING THE GOSPEL TO EVERY CREATURE, AS COMMANDED BY THE GREAT COMMISSION, WOULD BE RESCUED FROM THE MULTITUDE OF OTHER OBJECTS THAT NOW THREATEN TO CONCEAL IT. It cannot be too often asserted that those who go out under that commission have but "one thing" to do. They are not sent to teach secular knowledge, or to introduce the institutions of civilisation, or to prescribe medicines for the bodies of men with human skill. The command is simple and unmistakable. "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Let the churches send out their faith-filled messengers on the lines laid down by Christ, and to do only that which He commanded, and the vast continents of darkness and sin and false religion will begin to shake as in the early days.

Here it will possibly be objected that the Missionary Societies are committed to a large amount of educational and medical work from which they cannot well withdraw, and which is calculated to produce good results. It is even claimed by some that these outward forms of work are the most important, and that it is but right that the greater part of the funds of these societies should be thus expended. We have before us a recent missionary sermon, published and circulated with approval, in which statements to this effect are made, and with a complacency which causes one to wonder if the author, himself a missionary, ever seriously pondered his marching orders. Speaking of education, he says:—

> This is an important feature in every report of mission boards. Many useful arts are taught, and the number of scholars in mission schools is more than half a million. The young who become educated belong tothose races chiefly where literature was unknown, and reading and writing had to be taught by missionaries as a means of mental improvement and as a preliminary to spiritual teaching and religious elevation. The annual expenditure of missionary societies and of Bible and tract societies may be two million pounds sterling. Quite a large proportion of this fund has been and is devoted to the diffusion of useful knowledge and the educational training of youth of both sexes. This very considerable attention given to education by mission boards and missionaries is a most important fact in regard to the probability of the world's conversion. It tends to show that enormous success must ultimately crown the efforts of these evangelistic organisations, seeing that their aim is not merely religious, but embraces the instruction of the ignorant and the spread of scientific information, of benefit to all men socially and intellectually.

This quotation speaks volumes of mournful fact, and emphasises the point we are now making. We entreat the spiritual to consider it well. Let them note in what direction is the chief expenditure of the energies and treasure of such a mis-named missionary society. If, as they thus unhesitatingly claim, their main work abroad is "the diffusion of useful knowledge and the educational training of the youth of both sexes," and "the spread of scientific information, of benefit to all men socially and intellectually," surely it would but be honest for them to call themselves educational and not missionary societies. Thousands give to these institutions under the impression that they are thereby helping to send the bread of life to the perishing. In view of all this, we would venture to suggest that these societies continue to carry on this philanthropic and benevolent work to which they have committed themselves, and which is worthy of all commendation, if it be called by its right name and if it does not displace the simple preaching of the Gospel. The thousands of kindly disposed people whose inclinations are toward that kind of effort could go on supporting it; while the churches, as such, could take up their definite and unmixed work of simply giving out the glad tidings, for only thus can they meet the tremendous responsibility that rests upon them. Then those earnest and spiritual people who desire their gifts to go immediately into Gospel effort, undiminished by heavy secretarial and other home expenses, and undiverted to other outward objects abroad, would have their wish gratified. But whether or not the great societies consent to such an arrangement, it will come about of itself; indeed, its beginnings are plainly visible in the cordial support of the China Inland Mission and other organised movements where the chief aim, that of giving out the word of life, is kept steadily in view, and perhaps more abundantly in the multitude of lesser and more private attempts to fulfil the great commission. Thus the spiritually minded among God's people are giving their verdict unmistakably on this vital point, and while some societies are crying out for the funds they find it hard to procure for their costly enterprises, agencies much more in the right line are springing up.

Space fails us in which to dwell upon many other of the advantages to be at once gained from a return to Christ's simple and unencumbered ways. But they will occur to the attentive reader. He will recall how thus the Lord's own tests will be applied to all proposing missionaries, which will sift out the weak and unsuitable ones, and secure the sending forth of the best and strongest. And this result will be attained, not by any unwarranted legislation, or the use of the tests of worldly wisdom, but by the legitimate operation of the Lord's own matchless provisions for the missionary estate. Though this may at first diminish the number, it will vastly improve the quality. How much better to have a Paul stirring a kingdom to its centre than to plant a school teacher in every town in it! It will also occur to the reader how thus the financial aspect of the work, which is the overshadowing question of the hour, will be at once reduced to its true and diminutive dimensions, as far as applies to that which is really pure Gospel effort. Thus also would multitudes of unpaid, effective, and disinterested native missionaries be everywhere raised up under the instructions and inspiring example of those who, from the home churches, went abroad in the manner appointed by Christ, committing the things which they had heard to faithful men who should be able to teach others also, in which word of the Apostle is God's simple and speedy plan of multiplying missionaries ready to hand with the language and knowledge of the people. Thus would soon be brought in the latter rain, and quickly would the promise be fulfilled to restore the locust-eaten years that have elapsed since the Church abandoned her Lord's instructions. Thus, in a surprisingly short space of time, would the entire world be evangelised, "and then shall the end come." Blessed, soul-inspiring word!

"He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

THE BRIXTON ORPHANAGE.

The Lord Mayor presided last week at the thirteenth anniversary meeting of the Brixton Orphanage for Fatherless Girls, held at Brixton Hall. There was a large attendance. The Orphanage, which is situated in Barrington-road, Brixton, accommodates 300 girls, who, by the loss of both parents or the father only, have been left without any means of support. The orphan children were present at the meeting, presenting a tidy and healthful appearance, and they sang at intervals during the proceedings. From the annual report and financial statement read by Mr. Montague, it appeared that the Orphanage had relieved many sad and necessitous cases. During the past year 33 orphan girls had been received, and many others equally needy are awaiting their turn for admission, as the full complement of 300 children are in residence. The Orphanage is now quite free from encumbrance.

The Lord Mayor said he had received a letter from Mr. H. B. Marshall, who was a good friend of the institution, enclosing £50 as a contribution towards the funds, and also £25 from his son. He referred to the necessity for proper training for domestic service, but he was afraid that the tendency of the present day was to look on domestic service as somewhat derogatory. To his mind no honest labour was degrading. He well remembered, indeed, when he left home to become an apprentice, his father said to him, "If you have to sweep out the warehouse, clean the windows, or dust the counters, don't hesitate to do it, and endeavour to do it so well that nobody could possibly do it better." That advice had, probably, more influence on his success in life than any other circumstance in his career. So, too, the most useful and conscientious servants were those who boasted the least, assumed the least, and showed the most willingness, desire to learn, and uprightness; he appealed to the ladies to say whether the domestic servants who displayed most prominently these characteristics were not those who were the most thorough in their work. By training the inmates as domestic servants, this Orphanage was not only doing a great service to the children themselves, but was conferring a great benefit upon society. Institutions like these should be multiplied and extended. The institution owed much to its founder and honorary superintendent, Mrs. Montague, and being most economically conducted, was worthy of increased public support.

The meeting was afterwards addressed by Revs. Burman Cassin, Marmaduke Osborn, Canon Hussey, D. A. Herschell, Llewellyn Caley, and A. Mercer, and there was a collection in aid of the funds of the Orphanage.

THE MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN is making many friends abroad. A few days ago, Mr. E. J. Mather, director, gave an account of its operations to a highly appreciative assemblage of Christian people at Clarens, on the Lake of Geneva.

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XXIII.—"ONCE."

HEBREWS ix., x.

THERE is a word here which recurs, like a note on an organ beneath the tumult of majestic sound. Five times, at least, it rolls forth its thunder, pealing through all ages, echoing through all worlds, announcing the finality of an accomplished redemption to the whole universe of God. "Once!"

And there is another phrase which we must couple with it, spoken by the parched lips of the dying Saviour, yet with a loud voice, as though it were the cry of a conqueror: "When Jesus, therefore, had received the vinegar, He said, It is finished, and He bowed his head and gave up the ghost." It is very seldom that man can look back on a finished life-work. The chisel drops from the paralysed hand ere the statue is complete; the chilling fingers refuse to guide the pen along another line, though the book is so nearly done; the statesman must leave his plans and far-reaching schemes to be completed by another, perhaps his rival. But as from his cross Jesus Christ our Lord looked upon the work of redemption which He had undertaken, and in connection with which He had suffered even to the hiding of his Father's face, He could not discover one stitch, or stone, or particle deficient. For untold myriads, for thee, and me, and all, there was done that which never needed to be done again, but stood as an accomplished fact for evermore.

THE "ONCE" OF A COMPLETED WORK (ix. 26).—In these words there is a sigh of relief. A thought had for a moment flashed across the sunlit page of Scripture, which had suggested an infinite horror. In pursuing the parallels between the incidents of the great day of atonement and the great day when Jesus died, we had been suddenly reminded of the fact that that solemn spectacle was witnessed once a year—"The high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others" (25). Every year the same rites performed, the same blood shed, the same propitiation made. Suppose that, after the same analogy, Jesus had suffered every year! Every year the agony of the shadowed garden! Every year the bitter anguish of the cross! Every year the burial in the garden tomb! Then earth would have been overcast with midnight, and life would have been agony! Who could bear to see Him suffer often!

But there was no necessity for Him to suffer more than once, because repetition means imperfection, of which, in his work, there is no sign or trace. The repetition of the sacrifices of the Jewish law meant that they could not take away sin, or make the comers thereunto perfect. Again and again the crowds of pious Jews gathered, driven to seek deliverance from the conscience of sins, which brooded deeply and darkly over their souls. Perhaps they would receive momentary respite as they saw the elaborate ceremonial, and felt that they were included in the high priest's confession and benediction. And so they wended their way homewards; but ere long a weary sense of dissatisfaction would again betake them; they would reflect on the inadequacy of the atonement which stood only in the offering of the life of slain beasts. Sins were remembered, but not put away; it was impossible that the blood of bulls and goats could do that (x. 4). And so, doubtless, in the more thoughtful, hearts must have failed, and consciences moaned out their weary plaint unsatisfied. Therefore the sacrifices had to be presented continually.

On the other hand, Christ's work needs no repetition. It is final because it is perfect. Its perfection is attested, because it has never been repeated. "In that He died, He died unto sin once." Our Saviour set his hand to save us; He did not mean to fail; He came into our world with this distinct purpose; He died to do it; and, having done it, He went home to God. But, if from the vantage-ground of the throne, reviewing his work, He had discerned any deficiency or flaw, He would have come back to make it good; and, inasmuch as He has not done so, we may be sure that the death of the cross is perfectly satisfactory. "Now once, in the end of the ages, hath He appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself."

Oh, ponder these wondrous words!

Once.—He liveth for evermore; and shall never again pass for a moment under the dark shadow of death.

Hath He appeared (or been manifested).—What then? He must have existed previously. The Incarnation was but the embodiment in visible form of One who existed before all worlds; and the death of the cross was the unfolding in a single act of eternal facts in the nature of God. As the great sun disc may be mirrored in a tiny mountain tarn, so in the one day of crucifixion, there were set forth to men, angels, and devils, love, sacrifice, and redeeming mercy, which are part of the very essence of God. Marvellous, indeed, the rending of the veil, by which such marvels are revealed.

In the end of the world, or of the ages.—God is called the King of the Ages. Time is probably as much a creation as space, or distance, or matter. It is an accommodation to finite thought; a parenthesis in eternity; a rainbow flung across the mighty age of Deity. We break time into hours, God breaks it into ages. There are ages behind us, and ages before. We stand on a narrow neck of land between two seas. The first age of which we know anything is that of creation. The second, of Paradise. The third, of the world before the flood. The fourth of the Patriarchs. The fifth, of Moses, ending with the Fall of Jerusalem, and the death of the Messiah. The sixth, of the Gentiles, in which we live. And, before us, we can dimly descry the forms of the Age of Millennium, the Age of Regeneration and Restitution, the Age of Judgment, and the Age in which the kingdom shall be delivered to the Father. There is thus a complete analogy between the creation of the material world, and the creation of the new heavens and earth. Geologists love to enumerate the strata of the earth's formation through which the processes of world-building were carried, and we shall probably discover some day that God has been building up the new creation through successive ages of history and development. Christ's death is here said to have happened at the end of the ages; and we should at once see the force of this, even though there may remain several great ages to be fulfilled, ere time run out its course, if only we knew how many ages have preceded. Compared to the number that have been, this is the end, the climax, the ridge of the weary climb; what lies beyond are the miles of level surface, till the sudden dip down of the cliffs in face of the ocean of eternity.

He hath put away sin.—Oh, marvellous word! It might be rendered to annihilate, to make as if it had never been. The wreath of cloud may disappear, but the separated drops still float through space. The bubble may break on the foam-tipt wave, but the film of water has gone to add its attenuated addition to the ocean depth. But Jesus has put sin away as when a debt is paid, an obligation is cancelled, or a sin-laden victim was slain, burnt, and buried in the old days of Moses. All sin, the sin of the world, the accumulated sin of mankind was made to meet in Jesus. He was made sin. He stood before the universe as though He had drawn upon Himself all human sin which has ever rent the air or befouled the earth, or put the stars of night to the blush; and, bearing the shame, the horror, the penalty during those dread hours which wrung from Him the cry of desolate forsakenness, He put it away, and wiped it out for ever; and, in doing this, He has put away the penal results of Adam's fall.

The inherited tendencies to evil remain in all the race; but the spiritual penalty which Adam incurred for himself and all of us, as our representative and head, has been cancelled by the sufferings and death of our glorious representative and head, the Second Adam, the Lord from heaven. Men will still have to suffer the penalty of sins which they voluntarily commit, and for which they do not seek forgiveness and cleansing through the blood; but men will not have to suffer the penalty which otherwise must have accrued to them, as members of a fallen race—fallen with their first parent and father—because Jesus put away that when He died. And thus it is that the multitudes of sweet babes, idiots, and others who belong to Adam's race, but have had no opportunity of personal transgression, are able to enter without let or hindrance into the land where there entereth nothing which defileth.

By the sacrifice of Himself.—Not by his example, fair and lovely though it was. Not by his teaching, though the food of the world. Not by his works, the source and fountain-head of modern philanthropy. But by his death, and by his death as a sacrifice. If you want to understand a writer, you must know the sense in which he uses his characteristic words, and you must carefully study the definitions which he gives of them. And if you would understand the meaning of Christ's death, you must go back to the definitions, given in minute detail in Leviticus, of the meaning of sacrifice and atonement and propitiation, by which that death is afterwards described; and only so must you dare to interpret it. Whatever sacrifice meant in Leviticus, it means when applied to the death of the cross. And surely there can be no controversy that of old it stood for the substitution of the innocent for the guilty, the cancelling of deserved penalty because it had been borne by another, the wiping out of sin by the shedding of blood. All this it must mean when applied to the death of Christ, with this difference, that of old the suffering was borne and death endured involuntarily; but in the case of our blessed Redeemer, God in Him took home to Himself, voluntarily and freely, the accumulated results of a world's sin, and suffered them, and made them as if they had never been. "He put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself."

What was the death of Christ? A martyrdom, cries modern thought. A mischance in an unenlightened age, replies the reviewer. An outcome of all such efforts to battle with evil, says the broad church teacher. A sacrifice! thunders this Book. A voluntary sacrifice! A voluntary sacrifice by which sin has been borne and put away. Here we rest, content to abide, in a world of mystery, at the foot of one mystery more, which, despite all its mystery, answers the cry of a convicted conscience, and sheds the peace of heaven through our hearts.

The "Once" of Mortality (ix. 27).—With a few exceptions mentioned on the page of Scripture, where miracles of raising are recounted, men die but once. For those there was one cradle, two coffins; one birth, two burials. But for most it is mercifully arranged that the agony and pain of dissolution should be experienced only once. And this, which is the ordinary lot of humanity, also befell Jesus Christ. He could not die often, because He was literally man, and it would have been inconsistent to violate in his case the universal law. He must become man, because only through the portal of birth could He reach the bourne of death; but, having been born, and assumed our nature, He must obey the laws of that nature, and die but once.

The "Once" of Deity (ix. 28).—There must have been something more than mortal in Him, who in his one death could bear away the sins of many. Good and great men have died, who would have done anything to cancel or atone for the sins of their nation, their family, and their beloved; but in vain. How marvellous then must be his worth, whose sufferings and death will countervail for a world's sin.

And we can see the imperious necessity that our Saviour should be God manifest in the flesh; and that He who became obedient to the death of the cross should be also He who was in the form of God, and thought it not robbery to be God's equal. If it be true that his death "once" has put away sin, then, bring hither your songs of worship, your wreaths of empire, your ascriptions of lowliest adoration, for He must be God. No being of inferior make could do for man what, in that brief but dreadful darkness, He has done once for all, and for ever.

The "Once" of a Purged Conscience (x. 2).—We are not in the position of the Jews, needing to repeat their sacrifices year by year, in sad monotony; our sacrifice has been offered once for all. Therefore, we have not, like them, the perpetual conscience of sins. Our hearts are, once and for ever, sprinkled from an evil conscience (22).

There is no necessity to ask repeatedly for forgiveness for the sins that have been once confessed and forgiven. God does not accuse us of them; we need not accuse ourselves. God does not remember them; we may well forget them, save as incentives to gratitude and humility. There is daily need for fresh confession of recent sin; but when once the soul realises the completeness of Christ's work on its behalf, it cries with great joy: "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath He removed our transgressions from us."

The "Once" of a Fulfilled Purpose (x. 10).—Space forbids our lingering longer. In our next we may show how completely the purpose of God has been realised in Jesus, and, therefore, that there is no necessity for a repetition of his sacrificial work. The will or purpose of God for man's redemption asks for nothing more than that which is given it in the life and death of our Saviour. Nothing more is required for the glory of God, for the accomplishment of the Divine counsels, or for the perfect deliverance and sanctification of those who believe.

Once for all, oh, sinner, receive it!
Once for all, oh, brother, believe it!
Cling to the cross, the burden will fall;
Christ has redeemed us, once for all.

IV.—THE APPLE TREE.

In my congregation, there sat a great man, in a pew lined with velvet. He sat at the door, and his lady at the other end, leaving the middle seats for other members of the family or visitors. They came very regularly to church, but I had never heard of any of them being touched by the word which was preached. They were very kind and friendly towards me, and on one occasion said that I reminded them of a Welsh clergyman whom they had as their chaplain in Wales.

One day, when I was preaching, I was much roused and encouraged by hearing responses from the velvet pew. Someone sitting there was evidently happy. Once he almost clapped his hands, bringing them together sharply, at the same time ejaculating, "Praise the Lord, hallelujah!" I did not venture to look round as I was preaching, but I was aware that his enthusiasm was increasing and kindling mine, and that of others as well.

After the sermon I looked down from the pulpit, and saw a gentleman in a new glossy black suit, with a long beard, and a pair of round metal-framed spectacles. I took him to be the Welsh chaplain I had heard of; so when I descended from the pulpit I went up to the great man of the velvet pew, and asked to be introduced to his friend.

"Oh," said the gentleman, "he is no friend of mine! I do not know how in the world he came in here. He says he is a friend of yours. I wish you would introduce him to me. He seems to be a lively man."

I immediately turned round towards the stranger, but my mind being preoccupied with the idea that he must be the Welsh clergyman, I did not at first recognise my old friend.

"You know me well enough," he said. "I am the station-master at B——."

It was true I had known this man for twelve or fourteen years, but had never before seen him out of his official dress, nor had I ever known of his leaving his post to take a holiday. He loved his work, and therefore did not care for change. But this time he was out, for a wonder, and had on a new suit of clothes for the occasion.

Turning to the great man, he said, "I'm glad to hear him give it to you so faithful. That is just how we country people used to get it in Norfolk. Are you converted?"

The great man made no reply; but looked at my friend as if he thought, You are an original. The lady, in response to the challenge, said, "I am happy to say that I am converted."

"That's right, ma'am," said the stranger; "and you, sir," turning to the gentleman, "mind you don't lose your chance."

The great man was evidently inclined to be amused, and asked me to bring my friend to luncheon with him.

I told the station-master who the great man was, and then said, "He bids you come and lunch with him."

"What," he replied, "and have a lot of their men-servants to wait on me. Oh, no, thank you, sir; that won't suit the like of me."

I was not at all sorry for this decision, for I happened to be engaged elsewhere. I was right glad, however, to see my old acquaintance, and what is more, to find him so bold, and so happy in the Lord.

I could not help putting the question to him, "When were you converted?"

"Why," he said, "it was soon after you left us. I was dreadfully down when you were gone. We all missed you sadly. So I began to pray as you had taught me, under that apple tree, you know. It was there I found salvation. Praise the Lord!"

The tree he referred to was a flourishing one which stood in his garden. It was covered with the most luxuriant blossom every season, a wonderful picture of bloom and beauty. One springtime I said to the station-master, "You have a fine promise there," pointing to the tree. "Yes, it is a fine promise," he repeated, laughing; "but that is all I ever get from it. It has given me flowery promises like that for seventeen years or more, but never did I get an apple."

I was surprised to hear this, and while I was looking at the flourishing tree, he said, "Look here, nothing will grow under its shadow, not even grass. In the summer there is such a crowd of leaves on it, that people ask, 'What tree is that? It does not look like any other apple tree.'"

"Why do you not cut it down then," I said, "out of the way?"

"Ah," he replied thoughtfully, "and suppose I am cut down like that!"

"Oh, is that where you are?" I said, and immediately began to speak to him about eternal realities; but he, hearing the telegraph signal of a coming train, went to his post.

As I left the station I thought to myself, Now I know where to find that man.

A short time afterwards, I had the opportunity of speaking to him again. I said, "I suppose you make flowery promises sometimes, like your apple tree, and do not keep them. Nothing comes out of your promises; they are something like the morning cloud and the early dew."

He replied, "I don't know what else to do. I can't keep my promises. It of no use to make them. I find that!"

I said, "But why make promises? When God invites you, He does not ask for a promise from you, but for your acceptance of his offer or invitation."

"Then, you see, it would be all up with me."

"Oh no," I answered, "it would be all down with you, and up with God and his salvation."

"Thank you," he said, laughing; "that is the very thing I can't make up my mind about."

After I had proceeded thus far in conversation with him, I knew his tender place, and he knew it himself too.

"That apple tree," I said, "has its tap root in some cold soil, or something that is not congenial to it, that is why it is unfruitful; and you in like manner have your heart set upon something which hinders you; you know best what it is. That tree cannot help itself; but you can, if you will; and you must, or you will perish."

"But even if I do," said the man, "I can't get to heaven. It's a lot to do to go there!"

"No, indeed," I replied, "it is not; as soon as you give up, you will find it is far easier than you think. Supposing now that some important business called me to London, that, being unwilling to leave my home, I made the excuse that I had no money; but you came forward and said, 'I have a ticket ready for you, you will have nothing to pay. The ticket is paid for, and is here.' If I was still reluctant to get off, or refused to go, whose fault would it be if I lost the benefit offered me in London? So I say to you, if you are willing to give up, God has already, through his Son Jesus Christ, provided a free salvation for you."

In this and other ways I pleaded with this dear man, but in vain. I do not know what held him; but so it was. He was in this frame of mind when I left the parish to take another charge in London.

There was evidently something in his way, and he could not make up his mind to give it up, though, as he said, "that there tree was always talking to him, and warning him too."

I rejoiced, therefore, all the more to meet my old friend now, and to hear the joyful news of his salvation.

Spain: A Mission Field.—3.

I FORWARD you this paper, with its suggestions for the better prosecution of the work of evangelisation in Spain. It is written by an honoured servant of Christ, who for nearly twenty years has laboured there, and now gives us the results of his observation and long experience.

In sending it, I have in view the many Christian young men and women who have lately consecrated themselves to the Lord for service in the foreign mission field. Here is an attractive sphere of labour, with brethren and sisters on the spot to welcome them.

As for means for their support, it will surely be practicable for churches in towns and even villages to arrange and have their own missionary to represent them, as suggested in THE CHRISTIAN of Aug. 3, 1888, sustaining them by their sympathy, their prayers, and their pecuniary means, and be thus honoured of God to enter into a very intimate connection with his work. GEORGE PEARSE.

2, Rue Levacher, Algiers.

The claims of Spain are many and various I think the most pressing is for—

(1) A BAND OF EVANGELISTS

to take up and carry on the work of the Bible Societies' colporteurs. For twenty years now these men have been going over the length and breadth of the land, and I have often asked myself, how is it that we do not SEE more results of their labours? That there are results, I do not and cannot doubt; but there are not many visible results. I believe the cause is the want of men to follow the colporteurs, make their home among the people, teach, and show them how to live the Bible. Many Scriptures have been sold these twenty years; but I am afraid a great part of them have failed of their effect from want of someone to explain the Book. It is long since I have been writing to many Christian friends, urging them to take up this work, and help to water the seed the Bible Societies have sown, so that your question fits in most admirably with all my thoughts and aspirations. Native Spaniards have not presented themselves; and, after all, they are not too capable of living the Gospel, from their inveterate habits; and I say it mournfully, that we have not many cases of that wonderful working of God's Spirit which gives such a testimony to the power of the Gospel. There are many who profess faith in Christ as their only and all-sufficient Saviour, and who live fairly consistent lives; but, as I say, there is a want of power about many, which makes them differ all too little from their Romish neighbours, who also live fairly moral lives, so that I should hail with joy the coming among us of Christians such as you refer to.

(2) THE EXAMPLE OF A LIVING CHRISTIANITY.

There are many districts in Spain where there are numerous groups of people who have and read the Scriptures, but they live in the midst of strong and resolute enemies—enemies who cannot burn and imprison as in old times, but who can "boycott" most effectually anyone who dares to follow the hated Protestantism. There is, on the other hand, no lack in Spain of adversaries to Roman Catholicism, but these have already gone, or are fast going, over to infidelity. Bible readers get even less sympathy from them than from the Catholics, so that what these groups really need is some experienced Christian to take them in hand and encourage them in giving their testimony, and open up to them the Scriptures, and, as I have said, show them what the life of the Christian can and ought to be.

(3) RESIDENCE AND CLIMATE.

The question of residence is a very difficult one. The climate of Spain is very extreme, hot in summer, and very cold in winter; and this is the case all over, except on the sea coast, and even there both extremes are often experienced. But to anyone of ordinary health there is neither danger nor difficulty. I have now lived in Spain for nineteen years, and my wife for seventeen and a half, and we have enjoyed excellent health all the time. The climate of Spain is specially dangerous and fatal for little children, and infant mortality is frightfully high; but even in their case, with proper precautions and care, a fairly satisfactory result may be looked for. Of six children we have been able to bring up four, who, though they have had some of the usual children's diseases, are sufficiently strong and healthy. With respect to needed, I should almost be inclined to say that any class and every class would be acceptable, provided they came with sufficient Christian experience, and "self-contained" enough to live among practical heathens, and with wisdom to teach the way of God and to live it. I could imagine it a possible thing for good artisans to settle in the towns and ply their trades, and be at the same time centres of light, though it would be better to have men and women wholly dedicated to evangelising. There are so many points to be worked that how numerous soever the band of evangelists might be, they would all find their hands full of work going from point to point of their respective districts.

There is undoubtedly and unfortunately a prejudice against foreigners; but, that being inevitable, we must accept it, and by the excellence of our work live down the prejudice; and, seeing that it is only by foreigners that the country can be evangelised, make the best of the situation by prudence and tact. I believe, if simple, earnest, Christian men and women were settling in Spain to evangelise, they would meet with a cordial reception from the simple people who seek to know the way of salvation. They would everywhere be sneered at by the esprits forts; but there would be sufficient field for them among the poor to give them plenty of occupation. In Andalusia I hear of many towns which would be pleasant enough as places of residence, and in which there are groups of people who have the Bible; but, in fact, I scarcely know of any town where this is not the case, and round the towns are numberless villages in which it would always be possible to evangelise. If I were not otherwise occupied, my ambition would be to be agent of an Evangelisation Society, such as you hint at, to supply these towns and villages with the preaching of the Gospel.

And I imagine the rôle of such a Society would by no means be to spend a penny beyond the support of the evangelist, or if he supported himself his only expense would be his own maintenance and his travelling. I am afraid we have in the past in arranging locales, and setting up churches and schools, and organising a service that it is materially impossible that the people can ever support. Having done so, I am afraid that we must go on, for our own credit, sustaining the work we have created; but in this way it can never be widespread nor rapidly increased. If, however, we were to begin, so to speak, on new lines, and introduce a new class of evangelists who would restrict themselves to teaching the people from house to house in the first place, and letting them organise themselves, and acquire locales as they needed them and could support them, then I can imagine the evangelisation of the country proceeding just as fast as evangelists presented themselves. I have had no small connection with church organisation, and I am free to confess it has been a failure so far; it may contain elements of future usefulness, but in the meantime it is somewhat like Saul's armour on David. I think the stones of the brook slung by hands moved by simple faith will do more execution than "ancient armour." Now, with regard to

(5) THE ATTRACTIONS OF THE FIELD

I cannot say enough. It has always been a complete mystery to me how there should be such glamour about heathen fields, when there were nations quite as practically heathen as the most, to be evangelised at our doors. And it has latterly forced itself very strongly on my mind that it is in consequence of Protestant Christians being so enthusiastic about pagan lands, and lavishing such sums on what they call "Foreign Missions," and so completely neglecting Popish lands, as if they had no need of evangelisation that missionary enterprise on behalf of Spain is so little prosecuted. And I ask myself, if the protest was justifiable in the sixteenth century, is it less so in the nineteenth? If it was needed then, is it less needed now? Or is it that we have quietly accepted the principles of the Peace of Westphalia, and agreed that the North is to be Protestant and the South Catholic? The more I think about it, the less I can explain to myself the utter collapse in Protestant countries of the crusade against Popery, except in a few pamphlets and annual meeting speeches. Surely, surely if our fathers' protest was good and just in the sixteenth century, we their successors have just the same grounds, and reasons, and necessity for protesting, and making good, and justifying our protest by aggressive action against Popery, both at home and abroad. Rome is still the same. Semper eadem has not changed. Romanism is the same as when our fathers laid down their lives in protest. And the souls of these Latin nations have been so surely destroyed that there is scarcely a man who thinks at all who is not an infidel, and no wonder. Then the very name of Spain wakens memories of the grandest history of any country in Europe. True it is that the glory has departed, but it may come back. I feel convinced that there are still elements in the Spanish character that make its restoration possible, and I venture to think that, fairly and wisely evangelised, results not only not inferior but in some respects much superior to those of other Latin countries will be obtained. There is much degradation, as cannot be wondered at after three hundred years of the Inquisition; but in the midst of the degradation there is a simplicity and sincerity which make me very hopeful for the future. At the present time, and during all the years since the Bourbon restoration in 1875, there is a strong official reaction, and much fear of consequences if the proscribed Protestantism is adopted; but were a liberal move to come over, and it cannot be long delayed now, things would greatly change, and many would declare themselves who now fear to do so. It would be simple policy and wisdom for Christians for the next Liberal movement. Just in these days there is much petty persecution. Alcaldes (Maires) drum colporteurs summarily out of their towns and villages. Proprietors summarily eject Protestants from their houses, or refuse to let them in, or threaten them with ejectment if they continue Protestant. Employers of labour refuse to admit, or dismiss, those whom they find attending Protestant worship, or sending their children to Protestant schools. And withal our Protestant congregations hold their own, and increase, if very slowly. But the time will come soon, I believe, when these things will be greatly changed, and there will be at least much more freedom. And I am deeply anxious that the change should not take us so at unawares as the previous change in 1868 did. And the plan you indicate seems to me in many ways to provide just what we need—a band of workers, who in the meanwhile shall work quietly and patiently with the elements they have, preparing themselves for being the guides of the increasing numbers who will gather together as the sense of freedom and liberty makes itself felt. It would be difficult to enter into detail about the names of places or districts; these would be best found out by personal inspection when the moment comes for action. Of one thing be quite sure, that, so long as men offer themselves, we shall find sites for them.

SOUL-DESTROYING SUPERSTITION

TO BE PREPARING

I pray God that your appeal may be cordially responded to. You may always count on my cordial and enthusiastic help, as far as my circumstances may allow me to give it.

Dr. Saphir on the Old Testament.

Continuing his addresses on the Old Testament, Rev. Dr. Saphir spoke to a goodly audience on Thursday morning last week in St. John's Presbyterian Church, Allen-street, Kensington. The subject was a presentation of Israelitish history as centring in the person of Abraham. At the outset, he referred to the structure of the Old Testament, doctrine and prophecy being so interwoven with history that it is difficult to consider separately any one of these component parts. God's acts were always explained by the Word, and in accordance with the present was the type and promise of the future. It is said that "history repeats itself"; so in the history of God's dealings with mankind, and with Israel especially, we see a continual foreshadowing of what was at last fulfilled when He sent his Son, Jesus Christ, down from heaven.

Though, however, Jewish history culminated in Jesus Christ, it did not terminate there. It is complete in Christ, and in Him its future is secured. All the prophecies, in like manner, are fulfilled in Christ Jesus, and yet they are not yet perfectly fulfilled. If we separate his first from his second advent, it is impossible to explain the Old Testament promises. True, He came, the Messiah promised to Israel, but Scripture speaks of a future manifestation, when "men shall learn war no more," and there shall be peace everywhere, when the kingdom shall be established. Christ is also the explanation of the history, the law, and the promises, as well as the fulfilment of the types, both in what they are and what they are not able to represent. All have found their end in Jesus Christ, in whom everything that God has provided for his people is treasured up, and the fulness of the Godhead is dwelling bodily.

Having shown that the object of Scripture is to reveal God, so that man may know Him and be brought into communion with Him, Dr. Saphir pointed out that the twofold nature of Christ was taught by the two lines of the Old Testament history and prophecy, God revealing Himself as the covenant God, in his name, the Angel of his Presence, &c., and also in the seed of the woman, the seed of Abraham and of David—one line from heaven earthwards, the other from earth heavenwards. In the course of a lucid description of the Book of Genesis, he pointed out that the promise given in Eden of a Deliverer was understood by Adam and his descendants, as is shown by Eve's words on the birth of Cain, and Lamech's when Noah was born. From the beginning the race was divided into the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent—the descendants of Cain who left God, and those of Seth who called upon the name of the Lord. With Noah, the second father of the race, God made a covenant, in which He promised blessings to extend to the end of history. Moreover, by revelation to Noah, the first promise was made more definite and limited to one of the three sections of the human race—to Shem.

In the days of Abraham, however, there came a time when God, who had hitherto dealt with the entire race, separated unto Himself one nation, there to kindle and preserve the light which was ultimately to illumine the whole world. To the nations which were then left to themselves, these were "the times of ignorance," when "the world in wisdom knew not God." Yet, notwithstanding all this, God did not forget the Gentiles, and when Abraham and the other patriarchs were brought into contact with them, they never treated them as outside the goodness and wisdom of God, but always testified to them in the name of God, and appealed to that which they still retained in their remembrance of the knowledge of the Most High.

The question is often asked: Why did God for so many centuries restrict Himself to one nation, and give special promises to them? Although it is impossible for us to understand the whole counsel of God, yet, from what we read in Scripture, we can see that it was necessary thus to separate Israel, in order that the fire kindled could be intense in its brightness and heat. It was also necessary to keep Israel from being contaminated by the abominations of the heathen, and to prepare a soil out of which Christ should appear, so that there might be a godly people to welcome Him and form the nucleus of the Church. This election has, however, a spiritual aspect: "Not all are Israel that are of Israel." Not Ishmael, but Isaac; not Esau, but Jacob, was chosen; so it was to the kernel of the nation, the spiritually minded, the "little flock," that the promise really pertained. Not in a mere carnal or outward way did God choose Israel, as is made clear from the facilities that existed for those from without to join with, and be reckoned as, the seed of Abraham. Those of the Israelitish people who rejected Christ were far larger in number than those who believed in Him, but, nevertheless, the latter represent the real strength of the nation. Therefore the Apostle says, "But what if some did not believe?" Also in the future the wall of separation removed by Christ will never be reared again, and Israel and the nations would be perfectly united and on an equality, though Israel's position will be central.

Dr. Saphir passed on to speak of God's appearances unto Abraham, and, referring to his covenant with him, showed that it cannot be set aside, that it was unconditional and ratified by an oath. It embraced three points: First, that from Abraham was to come an exceedingly numerous nation; secondly, that it was to possess the land of Canaan; and thirdly, that the seed of Abraham should be the centre of blessing unto all the families of the earth. All the promises based upon this covenant take these points in their literal meaning, their concrete sense, the land of Canaan being never overlooked in the predictions of future glory. Abraham's faith, and the changing of the patriarch's name from Abram, having been dwelt upon, some observations were made on Jacob's name being changed to the victorious Israel, by which the nation had from early days been designated. In conclusion, Dr. Saphir pointed out that, as before the law "sin was not imputed, but death reigned," so the types of Genesis referred not so much to expiation, as to deliverance from death unto life and from suffering to glory.

[The lecture of next week, Thursday, April 4, will be the concluding one of the series.]

A New Poet.

A little volume of Poems, by Rev. Arthur Vine Hall, of Scarborough (1s. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.), heralds the advent of a new religious poet. Mr. Hall is the son of Rev. Arthur Hall, of Craven Chapel, and the remarkable sermon he delivered at his ordination was transferred to our columns at the time. This little collection betokens no mean gift of vigorous conception, and strong rhythmic verse. The pieces are varied in subject and in metre, but all are full of rich promise, as the specimens which we cull from the book will show. There is a wealth of spiritual suggestion in this stanza:—

> Sombre pines all pointing skyward,
> While their roots fast clutched the boulders,
> Whispered, Every life well rooted
> Points a finger to the heavens.

The same poem, "The Star and the Stone," thus concludes:—

> Rolled in that thunder from the blue abyss,
> A message which interpreted is this:
> Thus from a stone an avalanche may grow;
> Thus little thoughts may make a hell of woe;
> Thus may a little word, so swift to roll,
> Become a host, and laugh at all control;
> Thus one small act may start a swelling power,
> Which grows omnipotent within an hour.
> Beware! a trembling stone by thy foot sped
> May wreck the pathway thou shalt need to tread,
> And, crashing on in ruin's hideous race,
> Gathering mad might with the yet madd'ning pace,
> Sweep all before—while follows close in rear
> Fleet-footed death and desolation drear.

Of a different order, but equally pregnant with meaning, is this hymn:—

"PEACE, BE STILL."

> Dark was the night—the foaming deep
> Raged madly round; He rose from sleep:—
> The Man; the God; the tempest's Lord.
> He spake! obedient, trembling, awed,
> Low sank the proud wave's crested head;
> Far the affrighted storm-fiend fled.
>
> We sail on life's tempestuous sea!
> O Thou whose voice wild Galilee
> Heard 'bove the storm-blast, speak the word
> Which oft since then the saints have heard;
> May we, when tempests baffle skill,
> Hear the commanding, "Peace, be still."
>
> Speak! and the sky of sorrow's night
> Is radiant with celestial light;
> Speak! and the wildest waves obey,
> And gently bear us on our way;
> Speak! and temptation's fiercest blast
> Is harmless, all its fury past.
>
> Speak! and the very winds of death
> Shall waft—a more than welcome breath—
> To fairer realms than heart conceives,
> Or thread of happiest fancy weaves;
> To worlds where evil never trod;
> Bright as the diadem of God.

THE BRISTOL PUBLIC-HOUSE MISSION has been in operation about eighteen months, and over 2000 visits have been made by the evangelists. Hundreds of meetings have been held, and 15,000 tracts and books have been given away, while scores of drunkards and others have been soundly converted to God. Mr. S. T. Crocker is anxious to commence his tent services in connection with this agency. Information can be had of Dr. Elliott, Pembroke-road, Clifton, hon. treasurer.

THE LATE MR. DENHAM SMITH.

Recollections.

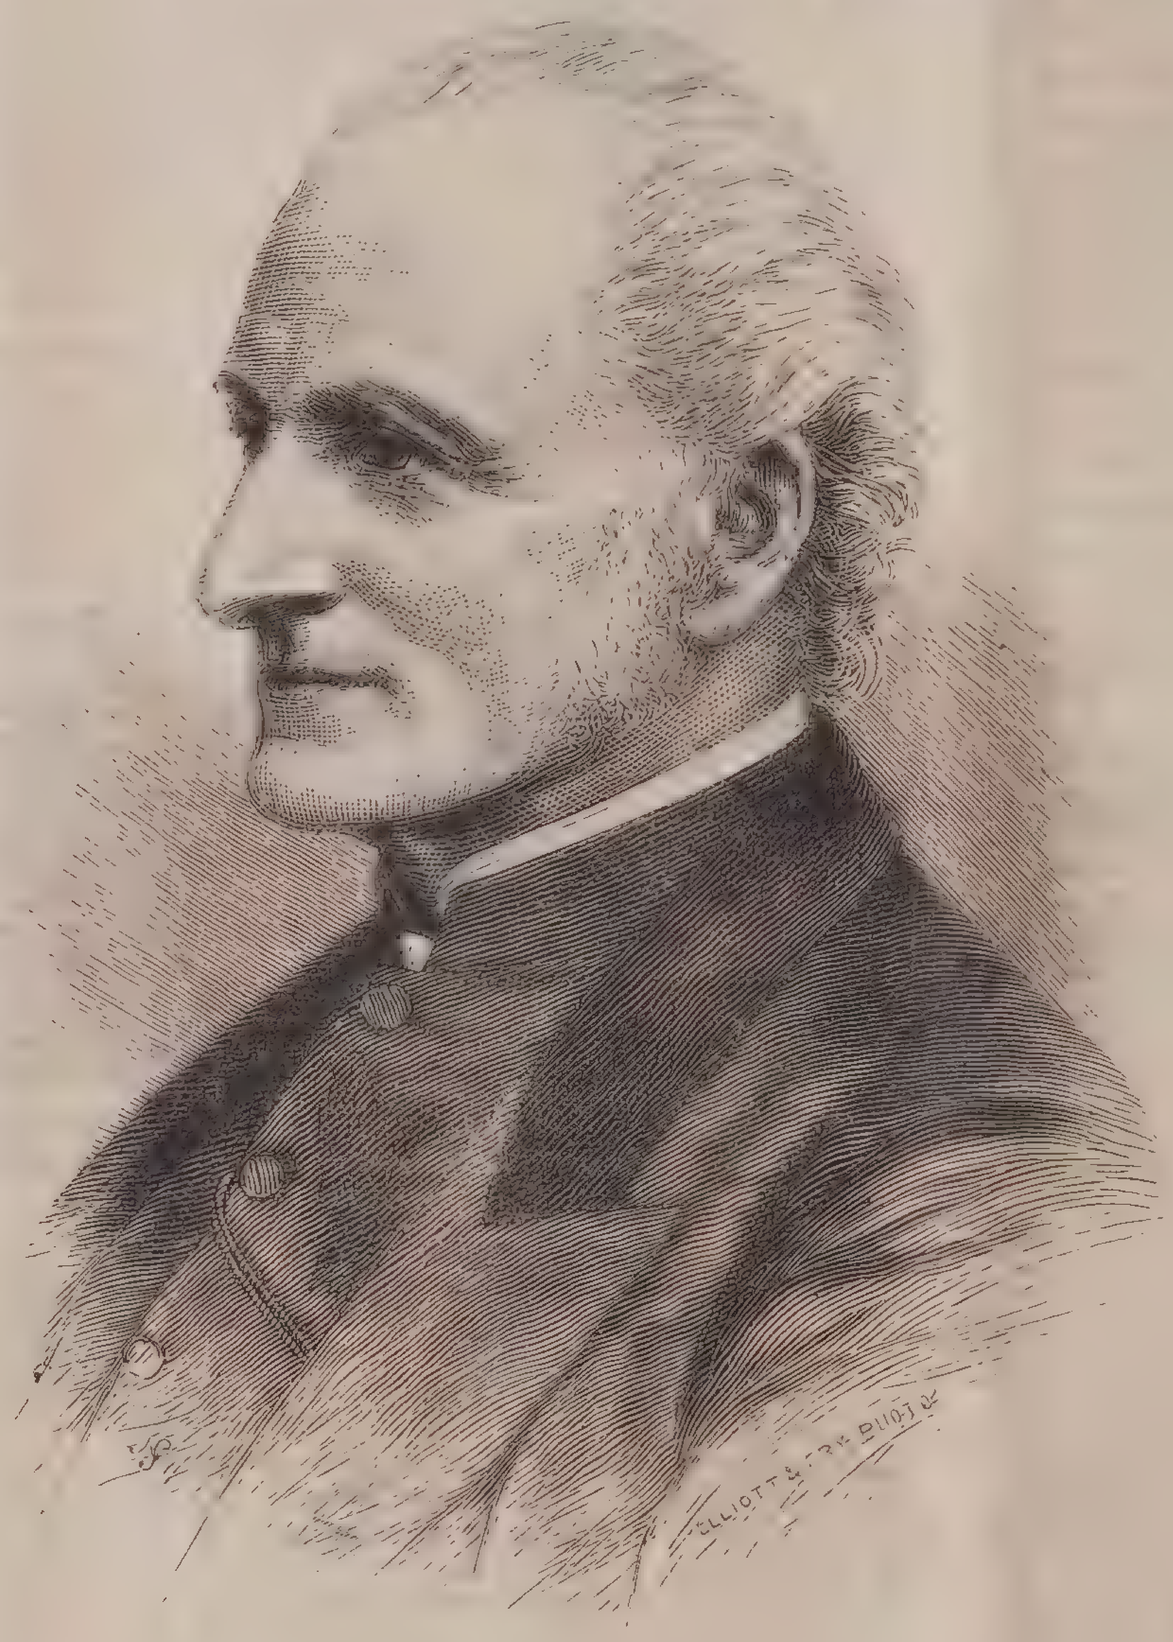
By Rev. Dr. H. R. REYNOLDS,
PRINCIPAL OF CHESHUNT COLLEGE.

YOUR interesting obituary notice touching the career of Rev. J. Denham Smith passed over his earlier days. The bare reference, however, to these days has stirred within me some of the most sacred memories of my boyhood, and may perhaps be not wholly uninteresting to some of your readers.

Mr. Smith was, I have reason to believe, brought to his early decision for Christ and his service by the ministry of my father, Rev. John Reynolds, of Romsey, who, to the end of his days, took the most profound interest in his young friend's spiritual and ministerial career. Mr. Smith was in business relations at East Cowes with exceedingly dear friends of the Romsey society, including Mrs. Smith, whose character and home are vividly remembered by me after the lapse of half a century. As a boy, I paid more than one visit to Mr. Smith's friends in East Cowes, and was in constant communion with my dear friend before he went for some ministerial training to the academy of Rev. Mr. Cooper, of Dublin.

I wish to say a few words of the lifelong impression he produced upon me and others in those far-distant days. Night after night, day after day, he spoke to me of the bliss, the strength, the protection involved in being one of the lambs of Christ's flock. I remember the fervency of his whispered prayers, and the hold he seemed to have of the very hand of the Lord, as though he would wind it round me and leave it there for ever. One incident has, I think, never passed my lips since then. We walked together in the woods of Norris Castle. Everything around us was supremely lovely in sight and sound, the waving branches of the trees, the rippling of the Solent, the songs of birds, the bleat of lambs. We remained in perfect stillness for five minutes, and I was moved to break the oppressive silence by reciting Montgomery's fine poem commencing with—

> The God of nature and of grace
> In all his works appears.



After the last verse—

> If God hath made this earth so fair,
> Where sin and death abound;
> How beautiful beyond compare
> Will Paradise be found!

Mr. Smith revealed that entranced look which many who knew him have so often observed, and he poured out a prayer, the words of which I cannot now recall, but the tones and spirit of which will abide with me for ever. We spoke no single word in our long walk back to the town.
